J Ob answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes herde such thinges. Miserable geuens of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy wayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet any more to saye? I can speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with y talkinge of my lypes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tonge, yet wil it not departe from me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (whereof my wyndes beare wytnesse) there stodech vpon a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasheth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy shrouleth vpon me with his eyes.

They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, and smytten me vpon the cheke despitously, they haue eased the selues thoro myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deliuered me into the hondes of y wicked. I was somtyme in wealch, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the neck, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a march for him to shute at. He hath compassed me rounde aboute with his dardes, he hath wounded my loynes, & not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geue me one wounde vpon another, and is falle vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my sleynne, and lye with my strengch in the dust.

My face is swollē with wepinge, & myne eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is cleve. O earth, couer not my blonde, and let my crienge synde nor wome. For lo, my witness is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboue in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might please w

The xviij. Chap.

God, as oneman doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, & I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turne agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

My breth sayeth, my dayes are shewened, I am harde at deatches do. I haue disceaue no man, yet must myne eye continue in heynesse. O deliuer me, and set me by the, who shal then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast much holde their bertes from vnderstōdinge, therefore shall they not be set wpan hye. He promyseth his frendes parte of his good, but his owne childē spende it. He hath maden as it were a bywoorde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge the. My countenance is heuy for very anger, & the members of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mē therfore shall wel cōsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Apocrite.

The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he y hath cleane handes, wil enen be stronger & stronger. As for you, turne you, & get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amōge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vnder hed awaye, which haue vered myne hart, chaunginge the night in to daye, & y light in to darcknes. Though I tary neuer somoch, yet the grane is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corruption my father, and the womes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? O, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pyet, & lye with me in the dust.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Then answered Baldad the Subar, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marke well, and considre, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as bestes, & reputed so wyle in your sight? Why destroyest thou chyld with anger? Shal y earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place because of y? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shal be darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shal be put out with him. His presumptuous goinges shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shal be taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fete shal be holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and the pyet fall in the waye.

The boke of Job.

Fearfulnesse shal make him a frayed on every syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Hunger shal be his substance, and my fortune shal hange vpon him. He shall rate his owne sleynne, yee his owne armes shal be deuoure, beyng a firstborne of deatch. All his comforte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shal brynge him to the kynge. Other men shal dwell in his house (which now is none of his) and brymstone shal be scatered vpon his habitation. His rotes shal be dryd vp beneth, & aboute shal his harvest be cut downe. His remembraunce shal perish from the earth, & his name shal not be playd in the stretes: he shal be dryuen from the light into darcknesse, and be cast cleme out of the worlde. He shal neither haue children ner kynsfolkes amōge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge & olde shal be astonysed at his deatch. Such are now the dwellinges of the wicked, and this is y place of him that knoweth not God. The XIX. Chap.

J Ob answered, & sayde: How longe wil ye vere my mynde, & trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye reproved me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce yf selues agaynst me, & accuse me to be a wicked person because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, yf it is God, which hath handled me so violently, & hath compassed me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I am, yet violence is done vnto me, I can not be harde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentence with me. He hath hedged vpon my path, I can not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, & taken the crowne awaye from my heade. He hath destroyed me on every syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye from me, as it were a tre plucked vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His mon of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. He hath put my brethren farre awaye from me, and such as were of myne acquaintance, are become straungers vnto me. Myne owne kynsfolkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembraunce. The seruautes and maydens of myne owne house take me for a straungere, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

The xx. Chap. Jo. vi.

When I call vpon my seruaunt, he geueth me no answer: no though I praie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyse maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayne vnto the children of myne owne body. Yet the very deserte foolles despise me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All such as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangereth to my sleynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the sleynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vere me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

O that my wordes were written, O that they were put in a boke: wolde God they were graue w an yron pene in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redeemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this sleynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are confirmed within me, when ye saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But beware of the swearde, for the swearde wil be avenge of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The XX. Chapter.

Then answered Sophar the Naama Thite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to answer. And why in my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the cheeryng & reprove, therfore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstōdinge. And wist thou not this, namely: that from the beginninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Apocrites continued but y twyncklinge of an eye: Though he be magnified vp to the heauē, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donger: In somoch y they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in y night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth new no sight of him, & his place knoweth him nomore. His childē go a begginge, their handes brynge the to sorow and heynesse.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, which shal lie downe w him in y earth. What wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyll he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poyson of serpentes within his body. The riches yf he deuoureth, shall he perbriake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brotes of hony and butter: But labour shall be, yf yet he haue nothinge to eate. Grete trauayle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shall he perishe in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, yf he leste nothinge behynde, therfore his gooddes shal not prospeere. Though he had plentyousnesse of euerythinge, yet was he poore, yf therfore he is but a wiche on euery syde.

For though yf wicked haue neuer so much to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wiath vpon him, and cause his battaylle to rayne ouer him: so that yf he sle the yron weapens, he shall be short with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, yf go out at his backe, and a glisteringe sweardethorow yf all of him, feare shal come vpo him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkynd led fyre shal consume him, and ioke what remayneth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heauen shal declare his wickednesse, yf the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substaunce that he hath in his house, shal be taken awaye and perishe, in the daye of the LORDES wiath. This is the porcion that yf wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The XXI. Chapter.

Answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende yo' selues. Suffer me a litle, that I maye speake also, and the laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my spiete be che in sore trouble? Marke me well, be abasshed, and laye youre hade vpon youre mouth. For whē I pōndre yf conside this, I am afrayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. Wherfore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, yf increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, yf their generacion before their eyes. Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte the. Their bullocke gendrieth, and that not out of synne their cow calueth, and is not vnfruitfull.

They sende forth their children by flocke, and their sonnes lede the daunce. They beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welchynesse: but suddenly they go downe to hell. They say vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. What maner of felow is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vterly no goodnesse in them, therfore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. How oft shal the candle of yf wicked be put out? How oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wiath? As they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as duff that the stōme carieth awaye.

And though God saue their childre from soch sorowe, yet wil he so reward the sinner, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynte of the fearfull wiath of the Allmightie. For what charyte he, what become of his housholde after his death? wheremetheres passe awaye swifter then an arrowe. In as much the as God hath yf byest pōwe of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? Omdyeth now when he is mightie yf at his best rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowes are at the fatteest, and his bones full of marrow. Another dyeth in sorowe and heynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, yf the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yf and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightously. I saye: where is the prynces palace? wher is the dwellinge of the vngodly? Are any man that goeth by the waye, and yf ye wil not regarde their tokens yf dedes, he shal tell you, that the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shal be brought forth in the daye of wiath. Whedarre repone him for his wayes to his face who rewardeth him for the vngodlynesse that he doeth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the dede. The shal he be fayne to be buried amonge the stones by the broke syde. All men forsowe him, yf there are innumerable good before him. O how wayne is the comfort yf geue me? Are not youre answers cleare contrary to right and truth?

The XXII. Chapter.

The boke of Job.

So Eliphaz the Themanite gaue answere, yf sayde: Maye a man be compared vnto God in wysdome, though he seme to himself, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in yf thou art righteous? Or what doth it profite him, yf thy wayes are perfecte? Is he afrayed to repone the, yf to steppe forth w the into iudgment? Cometh not this for yf grete wickednesse, yf for thine vngodly dedes which are innumerable? Thou hast take the pledge from thy brether for naught, yf robbed the naked of their clothinge: To soch as were weery, hast thou geuen no water to drynte, thou hast withdrawe bed fro the hungry: Shulde soch one the as yfch violēce, widge yf oppression (doinge all thinges of parcialyte, yf hauynge respecte of persones) dwell in the lode? Thou hast sent wyddowes awaye emptye and oppressed the poore fatherlesse.

Therfore art thou compassed aboute with snares on euery syde, yf sodely vered w feare. Shuldest thou the se no darcknesse? Shulde not the water floude runne ouer the? Now because yf God is hyer the heauens, yf be cause thou saist yf the starrs are so hye, wilt thou therfore saye: Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? Tush, the cloudes couer him, yf he maye not se, for he dwelleth in heauen. Well, thou wilt kepe the olde waye, yf all wicked mē haue gone: both olde yf yonge, whose foundation is a runnyng water, which saye vnto God: go from vs, and after this maner: Tush, what wil the Allmightie do vnto vs? wher as he (not with stōdinge) fylleth their houses w all good. Which meanynge of the vngodly be farre frome. For w ioys shal the godly, and with gladnesse shal the innocēt se, that their increase shal be heuen downe, yf their posterite consumed with the fyre.

Therfore recōcile the vnto God, yf be content, so shal all thinges prospeere w the right will. Receaue the lawe at his mouth, yf laye vpon his wordes in thine herte. For yf thou wilt turne to the Allmightie, thou shalt stonde fast, yf all vnrightousnesse shal be farre from thy dwellinge: He shal geue the an harvest, which in plenty yf abundaunce shal excede the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like ryuer stones. Meethe Allmightie his owne self shal be thine harvest, yf the heape of thy money. Then shalt thou haue thy deliue in the Allmightie, yf lift vpe thy face vnto God. The shalst thou make thy prayer vnto him, yf he shal heare the, yf thou shalt kepe thy promyses. The, loke what thou takest in honde, he shal make it to prospeere with the, and the light shal shyne in thy wayes. For who so humbleth himself, him shal he set vp: and who so lotheth mekely, shalbe healed. Yf thou be innocēt, he shal saue the: and thorow the vngiltyneesse of thine handes shalt thou be deliuered.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Answered, and sayde: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heavy amonge my grownges. O that I might se him yf synde him: O that I might come before his seate, to please my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes: That I might knowe, what answere he wolde geue me: yf that I might vnderstonde, wher he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he please agaynst me with his grete power yf strength, or wyll he leane him self vterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I synde him not: yf I come behynde, I can get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pōndre his wordes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeh himself, yf I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: yf trieth me as yf golde in yf fyre.

1. Pet. 1. 1

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the comaundement of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back: He doeth as him listeth, and bynggeth to passe what he wil. Herewardeth me into my bosome, yf many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is yf cause, that I stremte at his presence, so that when I conside him, I am afrayed of him. For in so much as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Consideringe then that there is no ty me hyd from the Allmightie, how hap peneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē the re be, that remoue other mē's londe markes: that robbe than of their catell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the asse of the fatherlesse: that take yf wyddowes ore for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, yf oppresse the symple of the woul-together. Beholde, the wilde asses in y^e beserte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle:

see the very wilderness ministreth foode for their children. They reape the come felde that is not their owne: and gather the grapes out of his vynyarde, whom they haue oppressed by violence. They are the cause y^e so many men are naked and bare, hauynge no clothes to couer them and kepe them from colde: So that when the showers in the mountaynes haue rayned vpon them, & they be all wet, they haue none other succure, but to kepe them amonge the rockes.

They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in prison: In so much that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the y^erigne beare the sheeues.
The poore are made to labour in their oyle mylles, yee aⁿ ^{to} treade in their wyne presses, and yet they crye. The whole cite crieth vnto t^{he} ^{LORDE} with sighinge, the soules of the layne make their complaine:
But God destroyeth them not for all this,
where as they (not w^{ith} standing) are rebellious and disobedient enemies: which seeke not his light and waye, nor turne agayne into his path. Tymely in the mornyng do they ary-se, to murther the simple and poore, & in the night they go a stealinge.

The eye of the vngodly is like the aduon-terer, that wayeth for the darcknesse, and sayeth thus in himself: To sh^e, there shal no mā se me, & so he dysgyseth his face. In the night reason they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe y^e light. For as soone as the daye breaketh, the shadowe of death cometh vpon them, and they go in horrible darcknesse. The vngodly is very swyft: O y^e his porciō also vpon earth were swyfter then y^e runnyng water, which suffreth not y^e shipmā to beholde the saye & pleasūt vnyardes. O y^e they (for the wickednesse which they haue done) were drawn to the hell, sooner thē snowe melteth at the hea-
te. O y^e all cōpassion vpon thē were forgottē:
y^e their daynties were wormes: that they were clene put out of remembrance, & vterly hewē downe like an vnfrutefull tre. For they manteyne the baren, & makethem y^e they can not beare, & vnto wyddowes they do no good. They plucke downe the mightie w^{ith} their power, & when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme poverte, & take out of the waye: y^e & vterly plucke of as the eares of come. Is it not so? Who wil thē reproue me as a y^e, & saye y^e my wordes are nothinge worth?

The XXV. Chapter.

Then answered Baldad the Subite, & sayde: Power & feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his bynesse, whose men of warre are innumerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be ius-tified? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparison to him, & the starres are vncleane in his sight. How much more thē mā, that is but corrupcion: and the sonne of man, which is but a worme?

The XXVI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O how ha-pest thou the weaker: what comfort gapest thou vnto him that hath no strength? Where is y^e cōsell y^e thou shouldest geue him, which hath no wysdome? Wit-thou so shewesthine excellent righteousnes?
Before whom hast thou spoken those wor-des? Who made the breth to come out of y^e mouth? The giants & worthies y^e are slay-ne, & lye vnder y^e mould w^{ith} their cōpanions:
yee & all they which dwell beneath in the hell are not hyd fro him, & the very destruction self cā not be kepte out of his sight. He strecheth out y^e north ouer the emptie, & hāgeth y^e earth vpon nothinge. He byndeth y^e water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it cā not be sene, and spreadeth his cloudes before it.

He hath cōpassed the waters w^{ith} certayne boundes, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē tremble & quāke at his reproue. He stilleth the see w^{ith} his power, & thoro^{ugh} his wysdome hath he set forth y^e mould. W^{ith} his sperte hath he garnished the heauē, & w^{ith} his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serper. This is now a shorte summe of his doynge. But who is able sufficiently to rehearse his workes?
Who can perceaue and vnderstande y^e thō dre of his power? The XXVII. Chap.

Job also proceeded and wote forth in his communicacion, sayenge: As truly as God lyueth (which hath taken awaye my power from me) & the Allmightie, that hath vexed my mynde: My lippes shal talke of no vanite, and my tounge shal speake no disceate, whyle my breth is in me, and as longe as the wynde (that God hath geuen me) is in my nostrils.

The booke of Job.

God seabydde, that I shulde graunte you cause to be right. As for me, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go from myne innocen-
cy. My righteous dealinge wil I kepe fast, & not forsake it: For my conscience reproveth me not in all my conuersacion. Therfore my-ne enemy shal be founde as the vngodly, & he y^e eateth parte agaynst me, as the vnrightious. What hope hath y^e Epocrite, though he haue greate good, and though God geue him riches after his hertes desyre? Doth God heare him the sooner, whē he crieth vnto him in his necessite? Hath he soch pleasure redelye in the Allmightie, that he darre allwaye call vpon God? I wil teach you in the name of God, & the thinge that I haue of y^e Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. Beholde, y^e stonde in y^e owne conceate, as though ye knew all thinges. Wherefore then do ye go aboue w^{ith} soch vayne wordes, sayenge: This is the porciō that the wicked shal haue of God, & the heretage that Tyrautes shal receiue of y^e Allmightie. If he get many children, they shal perish w^{ith} the swerde, & his posterite shal haue scarcenesse of bried. Loke whē he leaureth behinde him, they shal dye & be buried, & no man shal haue pite of his wyddowes. Though he haue as much money as the dust of the earth, & raymēt as re-dye as the claye, he maye well prepare it: but the godly shal put it vpon him, and the innocent shal deale out the money. His house shal moure as the moth, & as a bothe that the watchman maketh. W^{hen} the rich man dyeth, he carieth nothinge w^{ith} him: he is gone in y^e twinklynge of an eye. Destruction taketh holde vpon him as a water floude, & y^e tipest stealeth him awaye in the night season. A vehement wynde carieth him hence, & departeth: a storme plucketh him out of his place. It russheth in vpon him, and spareth him not, he maye not escape from the power therof. Than clappemē their hōdes at him, ye and ieast of him, whē they loke vpon his place.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

Here are places where syluer is molten, & where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, & stone resolved to metall. The darcknes shal on e come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, & the horrible shadowe w^{ith} the ryuer of water parteth he a sūder the straunge people, y^e knoweth no good neighbourhede: soch as are place, whose stones are clene Saphires, and where y^e clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not,

that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin y^e prou-
de & hye mynded walke not, & where no lyon cometh. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, & enerthoweth the moun-taynes. A ryuer flowe out of the rockes, & loke what is pleasānt, his eye seeth it. Out of dropes bryngeth he greate floudes together, & the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How cometh a man then by wysdō me? Where is the place that men fynde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, neher is she founde in the lode of she luyng. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not w^{ith} me. She can not be gotten for the most syne golde, neher maye the pryce of her be bought w^{ith} eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphires maye be compared vnto her. No, neher golde ner Christail, neher swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellent, as once to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome geeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cometh out of Inde, maye in no wyse be likened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasānt and saye so euer it be.

From whēce then cometh wysdome? & where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee & fro the soules of the aye. Destruction & death saie we haue herde tell of her w^{ith} oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, & knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the woude, and lo-keth vpon all that is vnder the heauē. W^{hen} he wyed the wyndes, & measured y^e waters:
whē he set the rayne in ordie, and gauē the mightie floudes a lawe: Thē dyd he se her, thē declared he her, prepared her and knewe
her. And vnto man he sayde: Beholde, to feare the LORDE, is wysdome: & to forsake euell, is vnderstandinge. The XXIX. Chap.

of oyle: when I wentethorowthe cite vnto the gate, & whē they set me a chayre in y^e streete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd the selues, & when the aged arose, & stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of the ir talkinge, & laied their hādetothair mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rose of their meuthes. When all they y^e herd me, called me happie: & when all they y^e sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deliuered y^e poore: whē he cried, & the fatherlesse y^e wanted helpe. & I y^e shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good word, & y^e widdowes hert praied me. And why? I put vpon me righteousnes, which couered me as a garmēt, & equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, & a fote to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, & whē I knewe not their cause, I soughte it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y^e vnrightheus, & plucked the spoyle out of their teth.

Gen. 14. c

C Therefore, I thought verely, y^e I shulde haue dyed in my nest: & y^e my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spied out by the waters syde, & the dew laye vpo my corne. My hono^r encreased more & more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue care, me they regarded, & w^o silence they taried for my counsell. If I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge the. They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: & gaped vpon me, as the troude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knewe well it was not earnest: & this testimony of my countenance pleased the nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chiefe, & sat as a kynge amonge his seruantes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in heuynesse. The XXX. Chapter.

A Now they that are my inferiours & yonger then I, haue me in derision: yee enuie they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought some to haue set w^o the dogges of my catell. The power & strenght of the ir hādes might do me no good, & as for their age, it is spēt & past awaye without eny profit. For very misery & hunger, they wente aboute in the wilderness like wretches & beggers, pluckinge vp herbes from amonge the bushes, & the Jumpers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brookes, yee in the caues & denues of the earth. Vpo the daye heeth wiche they aboute crienge, & in the

biome hilles they gathered them together. They were the children of foolles & vylanes, which are deed awaye fro the woulde. Now am I their songe, & am become their iestinge stocke. they abhorre me, they fle from me & stayne my face w^o specke. For y^e LORD hath opened his quyer, he hath hymme put a bydle in my mouth. Vpon my night, de they rose together agaynst me, they hurte my sete, made awaye to destroye me, & my path haue they cleue marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they needed no man to helpe the. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y^e breakyng in of waters, & as me in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfull is turned agaynst me. Myne hono^r ren shech awaye more swifely then wynde, & my prosperite departed hēce like as it was a cloude. Therefore is my mynde pained full of heuynesse, & y^e dayes of trouble haue tū holden vpon me. My bones are pearced & rewin y^e night season, & my synneres tatem rest. With all their power haue they changed my garmēt, & gyrded me therewith, as were w^o a coate. I am euē as it were clay, & am become like as shes & dust. Whē I came to the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & w^o y^e wille hadest thou takest parte agaynst me. In my mes past thou didest see me vpon hye, as were aboute y^e winde, but now hast thou gaue me a very sore fall. Sure I am, y^e thou wilt deliuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyunge. Now is it ready: but where hurte is done, there is yet to helpe. Dyne I wepe in y^e tyme of trouble: had not my soule compassiō vpo y^e petre: yet neuer thelesse where as I looked for god, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darcknesse. My bewels sceth w^o in me & take no rest, for y^e yes of my trouble are come vpo me. Much & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displeasure: I stode vp in y^e cōgregacion, & communed with the. But now. I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My syne vpo me is turned to black, & my benes are bit w^o heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to wepinge. The XXXI. Chap.

I Made a couenaunt w^o myne eyes, I wolde not loke vpo a dāsell. For heuynesse, I greete a porciō shal I haue of god fro aboute: & what inheritaunce fro y^e Almighty on hie: As for the vngodly & he y^e ioyne himselfe to y^e cōpany of wicked doers shal not

I faire be it from God, that he shulde medle w^o wickednesse: and faire be it from the Almighty, y^e he shulde medle with vnrightheus dealinge: but he rewardeth the wortes of man, and canseth every man to fynde acordyng to his wayes. For sure it is, that god cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmēt of the Almighty is not vnrightheus. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole woulde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to diuine his spire and bieth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. If thou now haue vnderstōdinge, heare what I saye and hearken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? If thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euē the same, y^e knoweth the rebellious kynge, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye he hath no respecte vnto the personnes of y^e lowly, & regardeth not the rich more the poore. For they be all the worke of his handes. In the twinklinge off an eye shal they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & they tyrantes rage, then shal they perish, ad be taken awaye without hondes. And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seeth all his goinges. There is no darcknesse hidde shadowe, y^e can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shal be suffred to go into iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyssh and sceth ocher in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in y^e steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mē. Therefore turned they backe traytorously and vnfaithfully fro hi, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused y^e voyce of the poore to come vnto him, & now he heareth the cōplaynte of soch as are in neccesse. If he deliuer & graunte pardō, who will iudge or cōdemne? But yf he hyde awaye his countenance, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to my man? For the wickednesse & synne of y^e people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer the. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. If I haue gone amysse, enfourme me: yf I haue done wronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answer? Art thou afrayed of any thinge, feyngethou beganest first to speake, & not I. For els the men of vnderstōdinge & wisdome that haue herde me, might saye: What cast thou speake? As for Job he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Job be well cryed, because he he hath turned himselfe to y^e wicked: yee aboute his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in y^e he stryuethe agaynst God with his wordes.

The XXXV Chapter.

Liu spake morouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, the y^e I am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the & thy frendes: loke vnto the heauē, & beholde it: cōsidre y^e cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. If thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? If thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? If thou be righteous, what geuest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, & of y^e sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greete crye & cōplaynte made by the that are oppressed with violence, yee every man cōplayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrantes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ad y^e shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night: Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the beastes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē. If eny soch cōplayne, no mā geueth answer, and y^e because of the wickednesse off proude tyrantes. But yf a man call vpon God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Almighty accept his crye? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy selfe before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curions and depe inquisitiones. Therefore hath Job opened his mouth but in vayne, ad folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The XXXVI Chapter.

Liu proceeded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto y^e yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherewithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not awaye y^e mightie, for he himselfe is mightie in power and wisdome.

Job. 31. b
Re. 7. c
Re. 10. c
Par. 11. c

As for the vngodly, he preserueth the not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and confirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therein. But yf they be layed in prison and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of powerte: then sheweth he them their woikes ad dedes and the synnes wherw they haue vsed cruell violence.

B he with punysshinge and nourturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. If they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure ad ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, z perish or euer they be awarre. As for such as be fayned, dyssembler and ypocrytes, they heape vp wiath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his prisoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe w' y' condemed. The poore deliuereth he out of his straynesse, and comforteth such as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the yf thou wilt be content) from the botcomlesse pytte that is beneth: z yf thou wilt holde the quyet, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

E uerthelesse, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffie. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with cruelte, ner pacified with many gifces. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the z all such mightie men shulde not be put downe: Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hyether to then hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there such a gyde and lawe gener as he? Who wil reproue him of his waye: who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D o conside how greate and excellent his woikes be, whom all men loue and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to y' experie of his yeares. He turneth y' water to smal droppes, he dryueth his clondes together for to rayne, so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can spiede out the clondes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpo them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geneth the abundaunce of meate. In turnyng of a hande he hydeth the light, z at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysinge vpon the of sheweth herto his frendes and to the catell.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

I n this my hert is astomied, and mued out of his place. Heare then the founde of his voyce, and the noise y' goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A morninge voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geneth such a thondre clappe, (though a man heare it) yet maye he not cease it afterwarde. It geneth an homely sounde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not cypichende. When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soon as he geneth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne woikes. The beetes crepe in to their denes, z take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the birth of God, the frost commeth, z the waters are shed abroad. The clondes do their labour in genyngemoyssnesse, the clondes poure downe their rayne. He distibutech also on euery syde, accordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his woikes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thowre the whole worlde: whether it be to punyssh eny londe, or to do good vnto them that seke him.

Heare vnto this (o Job) stande still, and conside the wonderous woikes of God. As thou of couisel with God, when he doth these thinges: When he causeth the light to come forth of his clondes: A rethou of his cell, when he spiedeth out the clondes: Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonder: and how thy clothes are warme, when he helpeth him to spied out the heauen, which is to lode vpo, as it were cast of cleare metall. Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnmete because of darknes. Shal it be to be him, what I saye? Shalde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery man seeth not the light, y' he kepeth cleare in the clondes, which he clenseth when he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the earth, but the prayse and honoure off Gods face commeth fro God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the almighty: for in power, equite and rightousnesse he is hyer then can be expessed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stode in feare of hi? Chap. XXXVIII.

W hen spake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolyshe wordes? Gyde vpon thy loynes like a man, for I will question the se thou geue me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed y' foundacions of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderstandinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spied y' lme vpon it? Where vpon stode the pilers of it? Or, who layed y' corner stone? Where wast thou when the morninge starres gaue me prayse, ad when all the angels of God reioyced? Who shutt the see with doores, when it brake forth as a childe out off his mothers wombe? When I made the clondes to be a couerynge for it, and swedled it with y' darknes: when I gaue it my commaundement, makinge doores z barres for it, sayenge: Zither shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thou laye downe thy proude and hye wayes. Hast thou geue the morninge his charge (as soone as thou wast borne) and she wote the daye spunge his place, y' it might kepe holde of the corners of the earth, z y' the vngodly might be shate out? Their cotles z wapies hast thou turned like claye, z seest thou hast spoyle the vngodly off their light, z broke the arme of the proude. Camest thou euer into the groude of the see, Or, hast thou walked in y' lowe corners of y' depe? Hast thou the gates of deach bene opened vnto the? Hast thou seene the doore of euerlastige treasure? Hast thou also perceaued, how brode y' earth is? How yf thou hast knowlege of all the shewe me where light dwelleth, and where darknes is: y' thou mayest bringe vs another quarters, yf thou canst tell the waye to their houses. Anwest thou (when thou wast borne) how olde thou shuldest be?

Wenest thou euer into the treasures off the snowe, or hast thou seene y' secrete places of the hale: which I haue prepared agaynst the tyme of trouble, agaynst the tyme of battell z warre? By what waye is the light parted, z the heate dealt out vpon earth? Who denyeth the abundaunce of waters in to ryntes, or who maketh a waye for the stormy we:her, y' it watereth z moyseth y' drye z barren grounde: to make the grassee growe in place: where no body dwelleth, z in the wil-dernes where no man mayneth: Who is the father of rayne? Or, who hath begotten the droppes of dew? Out of whose wobe came the yse: who hath gendred the coldnes of y' ayre: y' the waters are as harde as stones, z lye congeled aboute the depe. Hast thou brought y' vii. starres together? Or, art thou able to breake the Circle of heauē? Cast thou bringe forth the morninge starre or the eveninge starre at conuenient tyme, z coueyeth the home agayne? Anwest thou the counse off heauē, y' thou mayest see vpon the ordinaunce therof vpo earth? Moreover, cast thou lift vpon thy voyce to y' cloues, y' they maye poure downe a greate rayne vpo the? Canst thou thow also y' they maye go their waye, z be obedient vnto the, saye ge: lo, here are we? Who geneth sure wisdome, or stedfast vnderstandinge? who nombrieth the cloues in wisdome? who stilleth y' vehement waters of the heauen? who turneth the clottes to dust, z the to be clottes agayne? Huntst thou the praye fro the Lyon, or sedest thou his whelpes lyge in their dens z lurking in their couches? who preyeth meate for the rauen, when his yonge ones crye vnto God, ad fle aboute for want of meate? Chap. XXXIX.

A nwest thou the tyme when the wilde gores buge forth their yoge and ge the stony rockes? Or layest thou waye when the hinds vnto farne? Kestest thou the monethes after they ingendie, y' thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast the ir yonge ones, z when they are deliuered off their trauayle z payne? How their yoge ones growe vp z waye greate thow good feedinge: who lettech the wilde asse go fre, or who lowseth the bodes of the Mole? Vnto whos I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, z the vtillid londe to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no foice for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryuer: but to seke their pasture aboute the mountaynes, z to folowe vpon the grene grassee. Wylle the vnicome be so tame as to do y' seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribe? Cast thou bynde y' yocke aboute him in thy forres, to make him plow a fter the in y' vallis: Mayest thou trust hi (because he is ströge) or cōmence thy laboure vnto hi? Mayest thou beleue hi, y' he wil bigge home y' come, or to cary eny thinge vnto y' barne? The L. strich (whose fethers are fayrer the y' wynges of the sparrow haute) when he hath layed his egges vpon the greunde, he biddeth them in the dust, and forgetteth them: so that they might be treden with fete, or broken with fennie wilde beaste.

Deu. 11. c
as. d

So harde is he vnto his yong ones, as though they werenot his, and labourerth in wayne without eny feare. And that because God hath taken wisdom from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstandinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hie, and careth neither for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or larned him to bowe downe his neck with fear: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull: he breaketh yf grounde with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyners rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glister: yet ruff heth he in fearfly, and beareth vpon the grounde. He fearerth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, rush (sayeth he) for he smelleth the batell as farre of, yf noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

D Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshaute flyeth toward the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hie at thy commaundement? He abydeh in the stony rockes, ad vpon the hie toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. His yong ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deede body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Moreover, God spake vnto Job and sayde: Canst thou stryue with the Almighty, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Job answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answer the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye no more.

The XL. Chapter.

A Then spake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: gyde vp yf loynes like a man, and tell me the thinge that I will aye the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me, yf thou thy self mayest be made righteous? Is thine arme then like the arme of God? Wilt thou take thy voyce such a soude as his doth? Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy ioly aray, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all yf proude, loke well, that thou makest all such as be stubburne, to obey: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the downe ne into the myre, and conuertheir faces with darknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thine owne right honde hath saued the.

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I make w^o the) which eateth haye as an ore: lo, he is stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spredeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his waynes are stiff. His shyms are like pipes of brass, his rygge bones are like stanes of yf. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernes for him, yf the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amonge the redes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wyldewes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Jordane without any trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vnder take to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ad laye a snare for him?

Darrest thou drawe out Leniathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chafes thorow with a naule? Wilt he make many saye wordes with the (thou test thou) or flatter the? Wilt he make a commaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the continuall seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyme w^o him as with a byde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye heve him in pecis, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fylle the neck w^o his slayne, or yf fylle nyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to confide what harme might happen the there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thykest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Every man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why: there darre none be so bold, as to rayse him vp.

The xli. Chapter.

Who is able to stonde before me? Or, who hath geuen me eny thinge a fore hande, that I am bounde to warde him agayne? All thinges vnder heauen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake saye. Wholifeth him up and striperth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his byble? Who openeth the dore of his face: for he hath horrible terhe rounde aboute. His body is covered with scales as it were with shyldes, locked in, kepte, and well compacte together. Or is so loyned to another, that no ayre can come in: yet one hangeth so vpon another, and side so together, that they can not be sundered. His neyenge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mountyng shyne. Out of his mouth goe torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrils there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seeringe pott. His bieth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remayneth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are loyned so straitly one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hart is as harde as a stone, ad as fast as the stythye that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the waves heuy. If he wake out the swerde, there maye nether feare ner best plate abyde him. He setteth as much by a strawe as by yf, and as much by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth w^o awaye for him that bendeth the bowe, & is for flyng stones, he careth as much for fubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorn that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like yf sharpe potshardes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boy like a pott, and stereth the see together like moymment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkyng place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. If a man will consider all hie thinges, this same is a kyngdomme of all the children off pryde.

The XLII. Chapter.

When Job answered the LORDE, and sayde: I knowe that thou hast power of all thinges, and that there is no thought hid vnto the. For who can kepe his owne counsell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therefore haue I spoken vnwisely, I kyng these thinges are so hye, and passe my vnderstandinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answer me vnto the thinge that I will aye the. I haue geuen billi gent eare vnto the, and now I se yf with my ne eyes. Wherefore I geue myne owne self yf blame, and take repentance in the dust and ashes.

Now when the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Job, he sayde vnto Eliphaz yf Themanite: I am displeased with the & thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thing ge yf is right before me, like as my seruante Job hath done. Therefore take viij. oxen & seven rammes, and go to my seruante Job & offer vp also for youre selues a burnt offeringe, and let my seruante Job praye for you: so that him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue spoke yf thinge which is right, like as my seruante Job hath done.

So Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite, the te their waye, and did a cordinge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the personne off Job, and the LORDE turned him vnto Job, when he prayed for his frendes: And the LORDE gaue Job twyse the much as he had afore.

And there came there vnto him all his children, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquatance afore, and ate bread with him in his house, woundinge at him, ad comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. And the LORDE gaue him a shepe and a Jewell of gleece.

And the LORDE made Job richer then he was before: for he had xliij. M. shepe, vi. M. of camels, a M. yocke of oxen, and a M. asses. He had children also: viij. sonnes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde yf pouerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In the londe were none founde so saye, as the daughters of Job, & their father gaue them an heritaunce amonge their brethien.

After this luyed Job xl. yeaeres, so that he sawe his children, & his childrens children vnto the fourth generation. And so he dyed, beinge olde & of a perfect age.

The Psalter

The first psalme.

Blessed is yf man, yf goeth in the counsell of yf vngod: fen yf abydeh not in the waye of symners, & syttech not in yf shoute of the scoimefull. But wylteth in the lawe of yf LORDE, & exerceyten himself in his lawe both daye and night. Soch a mā is like a tre planted yf water, syf de, yf bagerth forth his frute in due season.

The Psalter.

This leues shal not fall off, ad loke what er he doth, it shal prosper. As for the vnly, it is not so with them: but they are like dust, which yf wynde scattereth awaom of the grounde. Therfore the vngod all not be able to stonde in the iudgment, for the synners in the congregacion off ighteous. For the LORDE aloweth yf of the righteous, but the waye of the dly shal perishe.

The II. A psalme of David.

Why do the heathen grudge? why do the people ymagyn vayne thinges?
The kynge of the earth stode vp,
he rulers are come together, agaynst LORDE ad agaynst his anoynted. Let he breake their bondes a sunder, and cast aye their yocke from vs. Neuerthelesse, that dwelleth in heauen, shall laugh the
of scorner: yee even the LORDE himselfe shall haue them in derision. Then shal he spea-vnto them in his wrath, and vexe them in fore displeasure. Yet haue I set my kynvpon my holy hill of Sion. As for me ill preach the lawe, wherof the LORDE h sayde vnto me: Thou art my sonne, is daye haue I begotten the. Desyre off re, and I shall geue the the heithen for thie enheritaunce. See the vttemost partes of wolde for thy possession. Thou shalt cru-hem with a rodde of yron, and breake the peeces like an erthen vessell. Be wyse now erfore (o ye kynge) be warned, ye that are dges of the earth. Serue the LORDE ich feare, and reioyse before him with reue-nce. Byssethe sonne, lest the LORDE be an-ie, and so ye perish from the right waye.
or his wrath shal be kindled shortly: blessed ll they that put their trust in him.

The III. A psalme of David.

Why are they so many (o LORDE) yf trouble me: a greates multitude are they, that rise agaynst me. See one there be that saye off my soule:
is no helpe for him in God. Sela heu (o LORDE) art my defender, my wor-ad the lifter vp of my heade. I call the LORDE with my voyce, and he hea-me out of his holy hill. Sela I layed downe and slepte, but I rose vp agayne, the LORDE susteyned me. I am not a fray for thousandes of the people, that compasme rounde aboute. Up LORDE, and helpe omy God: for thou smytest all myne ene-ys vpon the chek. Lones, and breakest the th of the v. godly. Helpe belongeth vnto the LORDE, therefore let thy blessinge be vpon thy people.

The IIII. A psalme of David.

Hear me when I call, o God of my rightuosnes, thou that comfortest me in my trouble: haue mercy vpon me, and hearken vnto my prayer. O ye sonnes of men: how longe will ye blaspheme my ho-noure: why haue ye such pleasure in vayne? seke after lyes? Sela. Knowe this, that the LORDE dealeth maruelously with his sayntes: and when I call vpon the LORDE, he heareth me. Be angrie, but synne not:
come w your owne hertes vnto yo beddes, z remembre yo felues. Sela. Offre y sac-fice of righteuousnes, z put yo trust in y LOR-DE. There be many y saye: who wil doe eny good: wher as thou (o LORDE) hast sh-wed vs the light of y countenance. Thou reioycest myne herte, though their encreas be greates both in come z wyne. Therefor wil I laye me downe in peace, z take my rest for thou LORDE only setteest me in a sure dwellynge. The V. A psalme of David.

Hear my wordes (o LORDE) consider my callinge. O marke the voyce of my peticion, my kynge z my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. Heare my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the morn-ninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee z yf w' d' be gece. For thou art not the God yf hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwel with the. Soch as be cruel maye not stonde in thy sight, thou art an anmie vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE shhorreth the bloude thurstie and disceatfull.
But as for me, I wil come into thy house, uen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: ad in thy feare wyll I worshippe towarde thy holy reple. Lede me (o LORDE) in thy righteou-nesse, because of myne enemyes, ad make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faichfulnesse in their mouthes: they dysfible in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceane.
Punyshe them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodly-se, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse yee let them ever be genyng of thankes, to cause thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioysfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the righteous: and with thy fauorable hand thou defendest him, as with a shield.

The Psalter.

The VI. A psalme of David.

O LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: Oh chasten me not in thy heuy displeasure. Haue mercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weak: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greates trouble, but LORDE how longe?
Turne the (o LORDE) z deliuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of groyninge:
Every night was I in my bedde, z water my conche with my teares. My countenance is chaunged for very inwarde greife, I cosu-me awaye, I haue so many enemyes. Awaye from me all ye wicked doers, for the LOR-DE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge.
The LORDE hath herde myne humble petion: the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All my enemyes shal be confounded z sore vexed:
yet they shal be turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The VII. A psalme of David.

O LORDE my God, in y do I trust: saue me fro all the y persecute me, z de-liuer me. Lest he haneth vp my soule like a lyon, z reare it in peeces: whyle the is no to helpe. O LORDE my God, yff I haue done eny soch thinge: yf there be eny vnrighteousnes in my handes: O yf I haue rewarded euell vnto the y' deale frendly w' me whate the y' w' out eny cause are myne enemies: Then let myne enemye persecute my soule, z take me: yee let hit reade my life dow-ne in the earth, z laye myne hono' in the dust.
Sela. Stode vp (o LORDE) in y' wrath, lift vp thy selfe ouer the furious indignacion of my ne enemyes: arise vp (for me) in the vengeance that thou hast promysed. That the con-gregacion of the people maye come aboute the, for their sakes therefore lift vp thy selfe a-gayne. The LORDE is iudge over the people: Auenge me then (o LORDE) acordinge to my righteuousnes z innocency. Oh let the victories of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteine the iust, thou righteous God, y' trust the very hertes z the reynes. My helpe cometh of God, which preseruethe me yf
I am true of herte. God is a righteous iudge: z God is ever threateninge. If men wil not turne, he hath whet his sword: he hath bent his bowe z made it ready. He hath prepayed him the weapons of death, z ordained his arrowes to destroye. Beholde, he trauayleth with myschefe, he hath conceaued vnhappynesse, and broughte forth a lye. He hath grauen and dygged vp a pytte, but he shal fall himself into y pytte y he hath made. For his vnhappynesse shal come vpon his owne heade, z his wickednes shal fall vpon his owne pate. As for me, I will geue thankes vnto the LORDE for his righteoufnes sake, and wil prayse the name of the LOR-DE the most hyest.

The VIII. A psalme of David.

O LORDE oure gouernoure: how won-derfull is thy name in all the wolde:
how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? Out of the mouth of the very babes z sucklinges thou hast ordered prayse, because of thine enemyes, y thou mightest destroye the enemye and the auenger. For I confidre thy heauens, euen the most cross thy fingers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh n haue is man, y thou art so myndfull of him: ether the sonne of ma-that thou visitest him: After thou haddest for a season made him lower the the angels, thou crownedest him with hono' z glory.
Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy bondes: thou hast put all thinges in subiecci-on vnder his feete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the beastes of the felde. The foules of the ayre: the fsh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LOR-DE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the wolde?

The IX. A psalme of David.

Wil geue thankes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte, I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad z reioyse in the, yee my songes wil I make of thy name, o thou most hyest. Because thou hast dryue myne enemyes abacke, they were discouered, z perished at thy presence.
For thou hast manteined my righte and my cause: thou syttst in the Throne that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou puttest out their name for ever and ever. The enemyes swedes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthro-wen their cities, their memoriall is perished with the. But y LORDE endureth for ever, he hath prepared his scat vnto iudgmente.
He gouerneth y' wolde with righteuousnes
z ministreth true iudgmente vnto the people.
The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therefore they y knowe thy name, put their trust in y: for thou (LORDE) neuer faylist the, that seke the. O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion herve y people of his doinges. And why he maketh inquisicion for their bloude, and

The Psalter.

Psalm 110. remembreth them: he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpon me (o LORDE) considere the trouble that I am in amonge myne enemies, thou that liftest me vp from y gates of death. That I maye see all thy prayes within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge health. As for the heithen, they are suncke vnder ne in the pytte that they made in the same nette, which they spide out pruely, is their owne fote take. Thus y LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whē the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked must be turned vnto hell, and all the heithen y forget God. But the poore shal not allwaye be out of remembraunce, the paciēt abydinge of such as be in trouble shal not perish for ever. Vpon LORDE, let not man haue the vpper hande, let the heithen be cōdemned before the. O LORDE, set a scolemaster ouer the, that the heithen maye knowe them selues to be but me. Sela.

Here the hebrwes begynne the x. psalme.

Psalm 111. Why art thou gone so farre of, o LORDE: wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Why le y vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginations which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desire, the curvetours blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: neither is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthy, thy iudgements are farre out of his sight, he despyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happen vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his esge is trauayle & sorrow. He setteth lute ynge in the gardens, that he maye pruely murdure the innocent, his eyes are set vpon the poore. He lyeth wayting secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauysh the poore, yee to rauysh the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his net. Then smyteth he, then oppresseth he & casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so y he will neuer see it. Arise o LORDE God, lift vpe thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherefore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considerest the misery and sorrowe: The poore geneth himself ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the fendlesse. Breakethou y arme off the vngodly and malicious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for ever, yee heithen shal perish out off his lorde. LORDE, thou hearest the desyrous longynge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare hearkeneth therto. Helpe the fathelless and poore vnto their righte, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The X. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 112. The LORDE put I my trust: how will yethen saye to my soule: that he shulde fle as a byde vpon yome hill: for so, the vngodly haue bet their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyer: that they maye pruely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundation han they cast downe, what ca the righteous the do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: he considereth it with his eyes, his eye lyddes to holde the children of men. The LORDE seeth both the righteous and vngodly, but who so delitereth in wickednes, him his soule abhoret. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: the reward shal they haue to drynte. For the LORDE is righteous, ad he loueth righteousnes, his countenaunce he holdeth the iust.

The XI. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 113. Helpe LORDE, for there is not one saye more: very seure faithfull are thine amonge the children off men. Every man cōcealeth lyes to his neghbore, they do but flater with their lippes and dissimble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, ad the tounge that speaketh prouder thinges. Which saye: Our tounge shulde prouaile: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now in the troubles sake off the oppressed, & because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vpsayeth the LORDE: I wil helpe the, and sit the at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pur wordes: enē as y syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vnto tymes in the fyre. As pe the ether fore (o LORDE) and preserve vs fro this generacion for ever. And why? what vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full off vngodly.

The Psalter.

The XII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 114. How longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE: for ever: how longe wilt thou hyde thy face frome? Oh how longe shall I seke counsell in my soule: how longe shall I be so vered in my herte: how longe shal my enemy triumphe ouer me? Considre, ad heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemy saye: I haue prouaile agaynst hi: yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my herte is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so longynge with me: (ye I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest)

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 115. The foolish bodyes saye in their hertes: Tush, there is no God. They are corrupte, ad become abhominable in their doynges, there is not one y doth good. The LORDE loketh downe fro heauē vpon the children of men, to se yf there were any, that wolde vnderstande & seke after God. But they are all gone out of the waye, they are altogether become vnprofitable: there is no that doth good, no not one. * Their thion is an open sepulchre, rather their tōnges they haue disceaued, the poyson of Aspes is vnder their lippes. * Their mouth is full of cursynge and bytternes, their fete are swift to shed bloude. * Destruction & wretchednes are in their wayes, ad the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes. How can they haue vnderstandinge, y worke myschese, eatinge vpon my people, as it were bled, & call not vpon y LORDE? Therefore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondeth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a made at the cōcell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde deliuer his people out of captiuyte. This shulde Jacob reioyse, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 116. LORDE, who shal dwell in thy tabernacle: who shal rest vpon y holy hill? Euen he y ledeh an vnconrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ad that speaketh the trowth from his herte. The XV. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 117. Reserve me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon such like. But they y runne a fter another, shal haue greate trouble. Their drynke offerynge of bloude w. I not I offe, neither make mencion of their name in my mouth. The LORDE himself is my good and my thou manerynes: my enheritance. He is fallen vnto me in a saye grom: he is glad in me a goodly heretage. I wil thank the LORDE for geuynge me warnynge: my reioysinge. Thou shalt haue chastened me in the mighte of thine hande. For he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be meued.

Therefore dyd my herte reioyce, & my tounge was glad, my flesh also shal rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, neither shalt thou suffre thy saye to se corruption. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye w thy countenaunce. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for evermore.

The XVI. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 118. Lare y right (o LORDE) considere my cōplaynte: hearken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayed mouth. Let my sentence come forth fro thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. Thou hast proued & visited myne herte in the night season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, & hast founde no wickednes in me: for I utterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me fro the workes of men, in y way off the murdurer. Oh ordure thou my goynge in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the LORDE, heare me o God, encline thine eares to me, and hearken vnto my wordes. Shewe y marvelous louynge kinnesse, thou that sauest them in high put their trust in the, from such as resist thy right honde. Repe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges. From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute.

The Psalter.

Which manteyne their owne welchynesse with oppression, & their mouth speaketh proud things. They lye waytinge in & waye on every syde, turnyng their eyes downe to the grounde. Like as a lyon that is greedy of his praye, as it were a lyon whelpelurkinge in his denne. Up LORDE, dispoynthe him & cast him downe: deliuer my soule with thy swerde from the vngodly. Fro the men of thy honde (O LORDE) from the men off the wolde, which haue their porcion in this life: whose belies thou fyllest with thy treasure.

They haue children at their desyre, and leaue the reste of their substance for their babes. But as for me, I will beholde thy presence in righteousness: and when thy glory appeareth, I shall be satisfied.

XVII. A psalme of David when he is deliuered from the honde off Saul.

Willow the (O LORDE) my strength.

The LORDE is my succour, my refuge, my Saviour: my god, my helper in whom I trust: my buckler, & horne of my health, & my protectour. I will prayse y^e LORDE & call vpon him, so shall I be safe from myne enemies.

The sorowes of death compassed me: & the biores of vngodlynes made me afraied. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpon me. Yet in my trouble I called vpon the LORDE, & he answered vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy temple, & my complaine came before hi, yee eue into his eares. The earth trembled & quaked, the very foundacions of the hillies shoke & were remoued, because he was wrothe.

There wote a smoke out of his nostrils, & a consuming fyre out of his mouth, so y^e coales were kindled at it. He bowed the heauens & came downe, & it was darke vnder his feet. He rode vpon the Cherubins & dyd flye: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darkness his pavilion rounde aboute hi, with darkness water & thicke cloudes to conuer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones & coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out off y^e heauens, & the heych gaue his thondre wth hale stones & coales of fyre. He sent out his arrowes & scattered the heathen, he cast sore lightnings, & destroyed the heathen. The spunges of waters were sene, & the foundacions of the rounde wolde were discovered at y^e chiding (O LORDE) at the blasting & breath of thy displeasure. He sent downe fro the heych to fetch me, & toke me out of greates waters. He deliuered me from my stronge enemies, and from my foes which were to mightie forme. They persecuted me in the tyme of my trouble, but y^e LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also into lyberte: & deliuered me, because he had a fauour vnto me. The LORDE shall reward me after my righteous dealinge, & accordinge to the cleynesse of my hodes shall he recopense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaved myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & cast not out his commandmentes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hi, & wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shall y^e LORDE reward me a far my righteous dealinge, & a cordinge vnto y^e cleynesse of my hodes in his eyesight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, & wth y^e innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the cleynethou shalt be cleyn & with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, & bringe downe the hye lokes of the proude. Thou lightest my candle, O LORDE my God: thou makest my darkness to be light. For in the I can discōfite an host of me: yee in my God I can leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the furnace, & is a shyld of defence, for all them that trust in him. For who is God, but the LORDE? Or, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gydded me with strength & made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my feete like hartes feete, & hee set me vpon an hye. He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake enen a bowe off stele. Thou hast geue me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greates. Thou hast made rowme vnto my derme for to go, that my foot steppes shal not slide. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stande, but fall vnder my feet. Thou hast gydded me with strength vnto y^e battell, thou hast throwen them all downe vnder me, that rose vpon agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backs vpon me, thou hast destroyed the heathen. They cried, but there was none to helpe them: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde them not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as claye in the stretes. Thou shalt deliuer me from the strynges of the people, thou shalt make me the heade of the church. A people whom I haue not knowne, shall serue me.

The Psalter.

As soone as they heare of me, they shall tremble, but the straunge childre dyssemble with me. The straunge children are wretched, and go haltinge out of their pathes. The LORDE lyueth: & blessed be my helper, praised be the God of my health. Let y^e God which seyth that I be auenged, and subdue the people vnto me. It is he that deliuereth me from my cruell enemies: thou shalt lift me vp from them that rise agaynst me, thou shalt ryd me from the wicked man.

For this cause I wil geue thankes vnto y^e LORDE amonge the Gentiles, and synge praises vnto thy name. Greate prosperite geueth he vnto his kynge, and sheweth louynge thyndnesse vnto Dauid his anoynted, yee & vnto his sede for euermore.

The XVIII. A psalme of David.

He very heauens declare the glory off God, & the very firmamēt sheweth his hande worke. One daye telleth another, and one night certifieth another. There is nether speech ner language, but their voyces are herde amonge the heathen. Their soules are gone out in to all londes, and their wordes in to the endes of the wolde.

In the hath he sett a tabernacle for y^e Son, which cometh forth as a brydegrome out of his chambre, & reioysseth as a giant to rume his course. It goeth forth fro the one ende of the heauen, and runneth aboute vnto the same ende agayne, & there maye no man byde himself fro the heate therof. The lawe of the LORDE is a perfecte lawe, it quickeneth the soule. The testimony of y^e LORDE is true, & geueth wisdom euen vnto babes. The statutes of the LORDE are right, & reioyse the heart: y^e commaundment of y^e LORDE is pure, and geueth light vnto the eyes.

The feare of the LORDE is cleane, & entueth for euere the iudgmentes of the LORDE are true and righteous altogether. More pleasure are they then golde, yee then moche fyne golde: sweter then honny & the honny combe. These thy seruants sepech, & for kepynge of them there is greate reward. What canst thou, how oft he offendeth? Whylse thou art from my secrete fautes. Repethy seruants also from presumptuous synnes, lest they get the dominion ouer me: so shall I be vndefiled & innocēt fro the greates offence. See the wordes of my mouth & the meditaciō of my heart shall be acceptable vnto the, O LORDE my helper and my redemer.

cob defende the. Sende the helpe fro the Sanctuary, & strength y^e out of Sion. Remember all thy offerynges, and accept thy brient sacrifice. Selah. Graunte the thy hertes desyre, & fulfill all thy mynde. We will reioyse in thy health, & triumph in y^e name of the LORDE oure God: the LORDE persourme all thy peticiōs. Now knowe I, that the LORDE helpeth his anoynted, and will heare him fro his holy heauen: mightie is the helpe of his right hande. Some put their trust in charrettes, & some in horses: but we wil remembre y^e name of the LORDE oure God. They are brought downe and fallen, but we are risen and stonde vpon right. Salue LORDE, & helpe vs (O kynge) when we call vpon the.

The XX. A psalme of David.

LORDE, be reioysfull in the kynge in y^e strength: O how exceeding glad is he of thy sauynge health? Thou hast geuen him his hertes desyre, & hast not put him fro the request of his lippes. Selah. For thou hast prouided him wth liberrall blessinges, & set a crowne of golde vpon his heade. He asked life of the, & thou gauest him a longe life, eue for euer & ener. His honoure is greates in thy sauynge health, glory and greate worship shall thou laye vpon him. For thou shalt geue him euerslastinge felicitye, & make him glad wth the ioye of y^e countenance. And why? because the kynge putteth his trust in the LORDE, & in the mercy of the most blesed he shall not mysfear. Let all thine enemies file thy honde, let thy right honde synde out all the y^e hate the. Thou shalt make the like a fyre ouen in tyme of thy wrath: the LORDE shall destroye the in his displeasure, & the fyre shall consume them. Their fyre shall thou rote out of the earth, & their sede fro amonge the childre of men. For they intended myscheff agaynst the, & ymagined such deuycies, as they were not able to persourme. Therefore shalt thou put the to flight, & with thy stringes thou shalt make ready thine arrowes agaynst the faces off them. Be thou exalted (LORDE) in thine owne strength, so wil we synge and prayse thy power.

The XXI. A psalme of David.

O God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me? y^e wordes of my complaine are sarre fro my health. O my God, I arise in the daye tyme, but thou hearest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet wellest thou in the Sanctuary, O thou worshippe of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, & thou dydest deliuer them. They called vpon the,

and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not confounded. But as for me, I am a weime and no man: a very scorne of me and the outcast of the people. All they y se me, laugh me to scorne: they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God, let him deliuer him: let him helpe hi, yf he wil hane him. But thou art he that take me out of my mothers wombe: thou wast my hope, when I hanged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euer sence I was borne, thou art my God, eue fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me the, for trouble is harde at hande, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, farr oren close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lion.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddest off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a pdesherde, my tounge cleueth to my goghes, and thou hast brough me into the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cofil of y wic ked hath layed sege agaynst me. They fear sed my hendes and my feete, I might haue tol de all my bones: as for them, they stode starin ge and lookinge vpon me. They haue par ted my garmentes amonge them, ad cast lot tes vpon my vesture.

But benot thou farre fro me, O LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist the to helpe me. Deliuer my soule from the swearde, my dear linge from the power of the dogge. Saue me from the Lyons mouth, and heare me frs amonge the homes off the vnicornes. So will I declare thy name vnto my brechren, in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE yee that fea re him: Magnifie him all ye sede of Jacob, z let all y sede of Israel feare hi. For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the miserable esta te of the poore: he hath not hyd his face fro me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and performe my vowes in the sight off all the that feare the. The poore shal eate ad be satisfied: they y sete after y LORDE shal prayse him: youre herte shal lyne for euer.

All the endes of the wolde shal remembre themselves, z be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the heithen shal wor shippe before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of y heithen. All such as be far vps earth, shal eate also and worshippe: All they that ly in the dust, and lyne so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, z declare his righteousnes: vnto a pe plet hat shal be borne, whos the LORDE hath made.

The XXII. A psalme of Dauid.

The LORDE is my shepherde, I can wante nothinge. He feedeth me in a grene pasture, ad ledech me to a fresh water. He quickeneth my soule, z bingeth me forth in the waye of righteousness for his names sake. Though I shulde walke in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euill, for thou art with me: thy staffe z thy shepheardes cōfōrte me. Thou pre parest a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou anoyntest my heade with oyle, z fillest my cuppe full. O helpe thy louynges byndes z mercy folow me all the dayes off my life, that I maye dwell in the house off the LORDE for euer.

The XXIII. A psalme of Dauid.

The earth is the LORDES, z all that therein is: the cōpase of the wolde, ad all y dwell therein. For he hath fōd ded it vps the sees, z bayded it vpon the flos des. Who shal go vp in to the hill off the LORDE: Or, who shal remayne in his holy place? Eue he y hath innocēt hōdes z a cleue herte: which listeth not vps his mynde vnto vanite, z sweareth not to disceane. He shal receaue the blessinge frs the LORDE, ad mercy frs God his sauoure. This is y ge neraciō of the y sete him, of the y sette y sa ce, o Jacob. Sela. Open yo gates (o ye pynes) let the euerlastinge dores be opened, y f kyng of glory maye come in. Who is the kyng of glory? It is the LORDE strōge and mightie, euen the LORDE mightie in battell.

Open youre gates (o ye prynces) let the euerlastinge dores be opened, y the kyng off glory maye come in. Who is this kyng off glory? It is the LORDE of hostes, he is the kyng of glory. Sela.

The XXIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Unto the (O LORDE) I lift vp my soule. My God, I trust in y: O helpe me not be confounded, lest myne enemies triuphe ouer me. For all they y hope in y shal not be ashamed: but such as be scōmfull despyers w out a cause, they shal be put to cōfusiō. Shewe me thy wayes (O LORDE) z teach me thy pathes. Led me in y truth and lerne me, for thou art the God off my healeth, and in the is my hope all the dayes of my life.

The psalter

Call to remembrance, O LORDE, thy ten der mercyes z thy louynges kyndnesse, which haue bene euer of olde. O helpe me not y synnes z offences of my yowth, but a cōdin ge vnto thy mercy thynke vpon me (O LOR DE) for thy goodnesse. O how freidly z righ tuous is the LORDE, therfore wil he teach synners in the waye. He ledech the sym ple a right, and soch as be meke the lerneth he his wayes. All the wayes of the LOR DE are very mercy z faithfulnessse, vnto soch as kepe his testament and couenaunt. For thy names sake, O LORDE, be mercifull vnto my synne, for it is greate. What so euer he be that feareth the LORDE, he shal pre pare the waye that he hath chosen.

His soule shal dwell at ease, and his sede shal possesse the londe. The secretes of the LORDE is amonge them that feare him, and he sheweth them his couenaunt. Myne eyes are euer lookinge vnto the LORDE, for he shal plucke my feete out of y nett. Turne the vnto me and haue mercy vpon me, for I am desolate and in misery. The sorowes of my herte are greate, O bryng me out of my troubles.

Loke vpon my aduersite and misery, and forgiue me all my synnes. Considre how myne enemies are many, and beare a mali cious hate agaynst me. O kepe my soule, and deliuer me: let me not be confounded, for I haue put my trust in the. Let innocency and righteous dealinge wayte vpon me, for my hope is in the. Deliuer Istraell (O God) out of all his trouble.

The XXV. A psalme of Dauid.

Behold my iudge (O LORDE) for I walke innocently: my trust is in the LORDE, therfore shall I not fall. Examine me O LORDE, and proue me: trie out my reynes and my hert. For thy lo uynge kyndnesse is before myne eyes, and I walke in thy truth. I sye not amonge vayne personnes, and haue no fellowshipe with the disceitfull. I hate the congregacion of the wicked, and I will not sye amonge the vngodly.

I washe my hondes with innocency O LORDE, and so go I to thine aulter. That I maye shewe the voyce of thy prayse, and tell of all thy wonderous workes. LOR DE, I loue the habitacon of thy house, and y place where thy honoure dwelleth. O destroye not my soule with the synners, ner my life with the bloudthirstie. In whose hondes is wickednesse, and their right hon dres full of gifts. But as for me I will walke innocently: O deliuer me, and be mer ci full vnto me. My forte stondeth right: I wil prayse the (O LORDE) in the congrega cions.

The XXVI. A psalme of Dauid.

The LORDE is my light and my helpe: I shall not fall: whom then shulde I feare? The LORDE is the strength of my life, for whom the shulde I be a frayd? Ther fore when the wicked (euen myne enemies z my foes) came vpon me, to eate vp my flesh, they stombled and fell. Though an host of men were layed agaynst me, yet shal not my hert be a frayd: and though there rose vp warre agaynst me, yet wil I put my trust in him. One thinge haue I desired of the LORDE, which I wil requyre: namely, that I maye dwell in the house of the LORDE all the dayes of my life, to beholde the sayre ben tie of the LORDE, and to vyset his temple.

For in the tyme of trouble he hath hyd me in his tabernacle, yee in the secrete place of his dwellinge hath he kepte and set me vp vpon a rocke of stone. And now hath he lift vp my heade above myne enemies, that cōpassed me rounde aboute. Therfore wil I esse in his dwellinge, the oblation of the kynges: I wil both synge z speake pray ses vnto the LORDE. Herte vnto my voy ce (O LORDE) when I crye vnto the: haue mercy vpon me: z heare me. My hert spea keth vnto the, my face seeketh the, yee LOR DE, thy face wil I see. O hyde not thou thy face fro me, cast not thy seruaunt of in displeasure. Thou art my succoure, leaue me not, nether forsake me, O God my Sa uioure. For my father and my mother ha ue forsaken me, but the LORDE hath taken me up. Shewe me thy waye O LORDE, and lede me in the right path, because of my ne enemies. Deliuer me not into the wyl les of myne aduersaries, for there are fals wyncesses risen up agaynst me, and they ymagyn myschefe. Neuerthelesse, I beleue ve rely to see the goodnesse of the LORDE in the londe of the lyuyng. O ary thou y LOR DE, be strōge, let thine hert be of good cōfōrte, and wayte thou still for the LORDE.

The XXVII. A psalme of Dauid.

Unto the wil I crye, o my strōge de fence: thinke no scorne of me, lest yf thou make the as though thou herdest not: I become like them, that go downe in to y pytte. Heare the voyce of my hum ble peticion, when I crye vnto the, and holde vp my hondes toward the thy holy temple.

The Psalter.

The xxx. psalme.

O please me not away amonge the vngodly and wicked doers, which speake stend-ly to their neighbour, but ymagin my selfe in their hertes. Rewarder them accordinge to their doings and wickednesse of their owne inventions. Recompense them after merites of their doings, paye them that they have deserved. For they regarde not the workes of the LORD, nor the operation of his handes: therefore shal he breake them downe, and not buyld them vp. Prayd be yf LORDE, for he hath herde the voyce of my humble petitiō. The LORD is my strength and my shyld: my herte hoped in him, & I am helpe: therefore my herte shall seth for loye, and I will synge prayes vnto him. The LORDE is the strength of his people, he is the defender and Saviour of his anoynted.
O helpe thy people, geue thy blessinge vnto thy heritaunce: feede them, and see them vp for ever.

The XXVIII. A psalme of David.

Write vnto the LORD (O ye mighty-tie) ascribe vnto the LORD worshippe and strength. Geue the LORD the honoure of his name, bowe your selues to the holy magesty of the LORD. It is the LORD that commaundeth the waters: It is the glorious God that maketh yf thonder: it is the LORD yf ruleth the see. The voyce of the LORD is mightie in opera-cion, the voyce of the LORD is a glorious voyce. The voyce of the LORD breaketh the Cedars: yee the LORD breaketh the Ceders of Libanus. He maketh them to skippe like a calfe: Libanus and Sirion like a yonge vnycome. The voyce of the LORD denideth the flames of fyre: the voyce of the LORD shaketh the wilderness, yee the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Cades.
The voyce of the LORD moueth yf hyndes & discovereth the thicke bushes: in his temple shal every man speake of his honou-
re. The LORD filleth the water floude, & yf LORD remayneth a kynge for ever. The LORD shall geue power vnto his people, the LORD shall geue his people the blessinge of peace.

The XXIX. A psalme of David.

Will magnifie yf (O LORD) for thou hast set me vp, & not suffred my foes to triumphe ouer me. O LORD my God, I cried vnto the, and thou hast healed me. Thou LORD hast brought my soule out of hell: thou hast kepte my life, where as they go downe to the pytte. Synge pray-ses vnto the LORD (O ye sayntes of his) ge-nechantes vnto him for a remembrance of his holynesse. For his wrath endureth but the twinklinge of an eye, and his pleasure is in life: heynesse maye well endure for a night, but loye commeth in the morninge.

As forme, whē I was in prosperite, I say be: Tush, I shal neuer fall more. And why thou LORD of thy goodnesse haddest made my hill so stronge. But as soone as thou turnedest thy face from me, I was brought in feare. The LORD cried I vnto yf (O LORD) yee vnto yf LORD made I my prayer. What profite is there in my bloude, yf I geue to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thankes vnto yf? O shal it declare thy faith-nesse? Heare (O LORD) and haue mercy vpon me: LORD be thou my helper. And so thou hast turned my heynesse into ioye, thou hast put of my sack cloth, & gyded me w gladnesse. That my hound might synge prayes vnto the w out ceasinge: O LORD my God, I wil geue thankes vnto the for euer.

The XXX. A psalme of David.

When the LORD is my trust: let me neuer be put to confacion, but deliuer me in thy righteousness. Deme-downe thine eare to me, make hast to deli-uer me: be thou my stronger rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O bethou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drape me out of the nett yf they have layed pituely forme, for thou art my strength.
Into thy handes I commendemy spirit:
thou hast deliuered me O LORD thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORD. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowen my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not deliuered me ouer in to the handes of the enemy, but hast set my feete in a larger rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is waken olde with heynesse, and my yeares w moun-nyng. My strength faylech me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprose amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours & they of myne owne acquaintance are a frayd of me: they yf seme in the strete, covey them selues from me.
I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessel.
For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: every man abhorreth me, they ha-

The Psalter

ue gathered a counceill together agaynst me,
and are purposed to take awaye my life.

But my hope is in yf O LORD, & I saye:
show art my God. My tyme is in thy hon-de: deliuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them yf persecute me. Shewe thy seruant the light of thy countenaun-ce, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (O LORD) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confacion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the hygelippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdainfully & despitefully speake agaynst the righteous. O how greate and manifold is thy good, which thou hast hyd for them that feare yf? O what thinges han-gest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the euen before the sonnes of men?

Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tonges. Thanke be to the LORD, for he hath shewed me maruelous greates kindnesse in a stronge cite. For when the fodre seare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORD (all ye his sayntes) for the LORD preserveth the faith-full, and plenteously rewardeth the prouder. Be stronge therefore & take a good heart vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORD.

The XXXI. A psalme of David.

Blessed are they, whose vnrighteousnesse is forgiven, and whose synnes are covered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORD imputeth no syn-ne, in whose spere there is no gyle. For whyle I helde my tounge, my bones consu-mawaye thow my daylie complaynyn-
ge. And because thy hande was so heuy vpon me both daye and night, my moysture was like the drouth in Sommer. Sela.

Therefore I confessed my synne vnto the,
and hyd not myne vnrighteousnesse. I saide: I will knowlege myne offence, and accuse myself vnto the LORD, and so thou forgauest me the wickednesse of my synne.

Sela. For this shal every saynte make his prayer vnto the in due season, therefore shal not the greates water floude come nye him. Thou art my defence in the trouble that is come aboute me, O compasse thou me aboute also with the ioye of deliuerance.

Sela. I wil enforme the, and shewe the the waye wherein thou shalt go: I wil fasten myne eyes vpon the. Benot ye now like houses & mooles, which haue no vnderston-dinge. Whose mouthes thou must holde with bytt & byddle, yf they wil not obeye the.

Greates plagis shall yf vngodly haue, but who so putteyth his trust in the LORD, his cy shall compass him on euery syde. Be glad (O ye righteous) and reioyse in the LORD, DE, be ioyfull all ye that are true of herte.

The XXXII. A psalme of David.

Reioyse in yf LORD (O ye righteous) & for it becommeth well the iust to be chantfull. Prayse the LORD with harpe: synge psalmes vnto him with the la-re and instrument of ten stringes. Singe him a new songe, yee synge lustily vnto him with a good corage. For the worde of yf LORD is true, and all his workes are faith-full. Heloueth mercy & iudgment, yf earth is full of the goodnesse of the LORD. By the worde of the LORD were the heauens made, & all the hostes of them by yf breath of his mouth. He gathereth yf waters together as it were in a bottell, & laieth vp the dyepe in secrete. Let all the earth feare the LORD, and let all them that dwell in the worlde, stande in awe of him. For loke what he sayeth, it is done: and loke what he commandeth, it standeth fast. The LORD bring-geth the counceill of the heathen to naught, and turneth the deuices of the people.

But the counceill of the LORD endureth, and the thoughtes of his hert from generacion to generacion. Blessed are the people that holde the LORD for their God, & blef-sed are the folke whom he hath chosen to be his heretage. The LORD loketh downe from heauen, & beholdeth all the children of men: from his stronge seate he considereth all them yf dwell in the worlde. He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, & knoweth all their workes. A kynge is not helped by his owne greates hoost, neither is a giante saued thow the might of his owne strengthe.

A horse is but a vayne thyng to saue a man, it is not the power of his strength that can deliuer him. Beholde, the eye of the LORD loketh vnto them that feare him, & put their trust in his mercy. That he maye deliuer their soules from death, and redeem them in the deare tyme. Let our soules patiently abyde the LORD, for he is our helpe and shyld. So shal our hertes reioy-se in him, because we haue hoped in his holy name. Let thy mercifull kindnesse (O LORD) be vpon vs, like as we put our trust in the.

The Psalter.

The XXXIII. A psalme of David.

I Wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the LORDE, his prayse shal euer be in my mouth. My soule shall make hir boast in the LORDE: the poore oppressed shal heare thereof, and be glad. O prayse yf LOR DE with me, and let vs magnifie his name to gether. I sought the LORDE, and he her dome, yee he deliuered me out of all my fea
re. They that haue an eye vnto him, shal be lightened, & their faces shal not be asha med. This poore man cried vnto the LOR DE, and he herde him, yee and deliuered him out of all his troubles. The angell of the LORDE pitcheth his tente rounde aboute them that feare him, and deliuereth them.
O taist and se how frendly the LORDE is, blessed is the man yf trusteth in him. O fea re the LORDE, ye yf be his sayntes: for they that feare him, lacke nothinge. The rich shal want and suffre hunger, but they which seeketh the LORDE, shal wate no maner of thin ge, that is good. Come hither (o ye chil dren) herken vnto me, I wil teach you the fea re of the LORDE. Who so listeth to lye, & wolde sayne se good dayes. Let him re frayne his tonge from euell, and his lippes that they speake no gyle. Let him eschue euell, and do good: Let him seeke peace & en sue it. For the eyes of the LORDE are ouer the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their prayers. But the face of the LORDE beholdeth them that do euell, to destroye the remembraunce of them out of the earth.

When the righteous crie, the LORDE heareth them, and deliuereth the out of all their troubles. The LORDE is nye vnto them yf are contrite in hert, & wil helpe soch as be of an humble sperte. Grete are yf trou bles of the righteous, but the LORDE deli uereth them out of all. He kepeth all their bones, so yf not one of them is broken. But misfortune shal slaye the vngodly, and they that hate yf righteous shal be giltye. The LORDE deliuereth the soules of his seruau tes, and all they that put their trust in him, shal not offende.

The XXXIII. A psalme of David.

Tryne thou with them (o LORDE) that stryue w me, fight thou agaynst them that fight agaynst me. Laye hande vpon the shyelde and speare, and stou de vp to helpe me. Drawe out thy swea de, and stoppe the waye agaynst them that persecute me, saye vnto my soule: I am yf hel me, that seeke after my soule: let the be turned back and brought to confusion, that yma gin myschefe forme. Let the be as yf do before the wynde, and the angell of the LOR DE scaterynge the. Let their waye be dar te and slippery, and the angell of the LORDE to persecute them. For they haue prynci laied their nett to destroye me without a cau se, yee and made a pitte for my soule, which I neuer deserued. Let a sodane destruc come vpon him vnawares, and yf net he he hath layed punely, catch him self, that he maye fall in to his owne myschefe. But let my soule be ioyfull in the LORDE, and reioy se in his helpe. All my bones shal saie: LOR DE, who is like vnto the: which deliuereth yf poore from those that are to stronge for him, yee the poore and the nedye from his robber.

False witnessses are risen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. They rewarde me euell for good, to the greates comforth of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sick, I put on a sack cloth: I hum bled my soule with fastinge, and my pray turned in to myne owne bosome. I beha ued myself as though it had benemy fiende or my brother, I wore heuely, as one yf m nerch for his mother. But in my aduersi they reioyse, and gather them together: yf yf verry lame come together agaynst me vn awares, makinge me wres at me, & cease not.

With yf greedy & somefull ypocrites, they gnasshed vpon me with their teeth. LOR DE, reban wilt thou loke vpon this? Ouf tore my soule from yf wicked rumoure of the my dearlinge from the lyons. So wil I ge ue yf thankes in the greates congregacion, & praise the amenge moch people. O let the not triumphe ouer me, that are mynemy for naught: O let them not wynde w their eyes, that hate me without a cause. And why? their comonyng is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst yf outca stes of the londe. They gape vpon me w their mouthes, sayenge: therethere: wese with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE holde not thy tonge the: go not farre from me, o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auengethou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Judge me (o LORDE my God) acordinge to thy righteousness, yf they triu phe not ouer me. O let the not saye in the ir hertes: therethere, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confusion and shame,
that reioyse at my trouble: let the be clothed with rebuke and dishonoure, that boost the selues agaynst me. Let them also be glad and reioyse, that fauoure my righteous bea linge: yee let them saye allwaye: blessed be yf LORDE, which hath ple: sure in the prosperi ty of his seruant. And as for my conge, it shal be talkyng of thy righteousness and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

The XXXV. A psalme of David.

Hert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no fea re of God before his eyes. For he dissembleth before his face, so longe till his abominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightheousnesse and disceate, he wil not be lerned to do good.
He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he wil come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. Thy mercy (O LOR DE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faith fulnesse vnto the cloudes. Thy righteous nesse stondeh like the stronge mountaynes, & thy iudgmente like the greates depe. Then LORDE pusest both me & beestes. How praisons is thy mercy (O God) that the chil dren of men maye put their trust vnder yf sha dow of thy wynges. They shal be satisfi ed with the plenty of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. For by theis yf well of life, in thy light, shall we se light. O spiede such thy louyng & yndnesse vnto them that loue the, & thy righteousness vnto the that are true of hert. O let not the fore of pry de ouertake me, O let not the hande of yf vn godly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, & are not able to stonde. The XXXVI. A psalme of David.

Keepe not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou envious agaynst the euell doers. For they shal soone be cut downe like yf graspe, & be withered euen as yf grue herbe. Put thou thy trust in yf LOR DE, & be yoyng good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, & verely it shal fede the. Delite thou in the LORDE, & he shal geue the thy her tes desire. Comette thy waye vnto yf LOR DE, set thy hope in him, and he shal bryng it to passe. Yee he shal make thy righteous nesse as cleare as the light, & thy iust dealin ge as the noone daye. Holde the still in yf LORDE, and abyde paciety vpon him: but grue not thy self at one that hath prosperi ty, and lyeeth in abhominacion. Leane of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy ge lowy mone the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that paciety ly abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.
Suffre yet a litle whyle, & yf vngodly shal

be clene gone: then shalt loke after his pla ce, & he shal be awaye. But the meke spi rit shal possesse the earth, & haue pleasure in much rest. The vngodly layeth waye for the iust, & gnassheth vpon him w his teete.

But yf LORDE laugheth him to scorne, for he seeth yf his daye is cominge. The vngod ly drawe out the swerde & bende their bowe, to cast downe yf symple & poore, and to slaye soch as go yf right waye. Neuertheles, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shal be broke. A small chinge yf the righteous hath, is better then greates ri ches of the vngodly. For the armes of yf vngodly shal be broken, but the LORDE vpho ldeth the righteous. The LORDE know weeth the dayes of the godly, & their enheri taunce shal endure for euer. They shal not be cofounded in yf perious tyme, & in yf day es of derth they shal haue ynough. As for yf vngodly, they shal perishe: & wher yf e nemies of yf LORDE are in their floures, they shal cosume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cosume awaye. The vngodly borroweth and paieth not agayne, but the righteous is mercifull & liberall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: & they whom he curseth, shal be roted out. The LORDE or dieth a good mans goinge, & hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him w his hade. I haue bene yonge, & now am olde:
yet sawe I neuer the righteous forsake, ner his seide to seke their bried. The righteous is euer mercifull, & ledeh gently, therfore shal his seide be blessed. Glee euell, & do yf thin ge that is good, so shalt thou dwell for euer.

For yf LORDE loueth yf chinge yf is right, he forsaketh not his sayntes, but they shal be preserued for euermore: as for the seide of the vngodly, it shal be roted out. Yee the righ tious shal possesse yf lode, & dwell therein for euer. The mouth of the righteous is exer cised in wysdenie, & his tonge talketh of iudg ment. The laue of his God is in his hert, therfore shal ner his foesteppes stonde. The vngodly seyth the righteous, & goeth abou te to slaye him. But the LORDE wil not lea ue him in his hodes, ner cofounde him when he is indged. Hopethou in the LORDE, & kepe his waye: & he shal so promote the, that thou shalt haue the lode by enheritaunce, & se, when the vngodly shal perishe. I myself haue seene the vngodly in greates power, & flo rishinge like a yrene baye: but when I wente by, so he was gone: I sought him, but he coude no where be founde.

The Psalter.

Bept innocency, and take hede vnto the thinge that is right, for that shall bringe a man peace at the last. As for the trasgresours, they shal perishe together, and the vngodly shal be roted out at y last. The helpe of the righteous cometh of the LORDE, he is their strength in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal stode by them, and save them: he shal deliuer them from the vngodly, and helpe the, because they put their trust in him.

The XXXVII. A psalme of David.

Unto the LORD be not to rebuke (O LORD) in thine anger: O chasten me not in thy heavy displeasure. For thy arrows stick fast in me, and thy hande pierceth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickednesse are gone ouer my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heavy forme to beare.

My woundes styncke, and are corrupte, thorow my foolishnesse. I am brought in to so greate trouble and misery, that I go mourninge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clenched vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore synned, I roare for the very disquietnes of my heart.

LORDE, thou knowest all my desire, and my gronyng is not hyd from the. My heart panteth, my strength hath fayled me, and the light of myne eyes is gone from me. My louers and frendes stonde loyng upon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.

They that sought after my life, and to do me euell, spake of lyes and ymagined disceate all the daye longe. As for me, I was like a deaf man, and herde not: and as one that were deane, not openyng his mouth. I am become as a man that heareth not, and that can make no resistance w his mouth.

For in the (O LORD) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORD my God. My desire is, y myne enemies triumphe not ouer me: for yf my foot slippe, they reioyse greatly agaynst me. I am redy to suffer trouble, and my heuynesse is euery in my sight. For I confesse my wickednesse, and my synne greueth me.

But myne enemies lye, and are mightie: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that reward me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I followe the thinge that good is. For sake me not (O LORD my God) go not farre from me. Haile the to helpe me, O LORD my succour.

The XXXVIII. A psalme of David.

The xxxix. psalme.

Sayde: I wil kepe my mouth, that I offended not in my tongue. And I shut my mouth, whyle the vngodly layed wayte for me. I helde my tongue, I was dumme, I kepte silence, yee cut from good wordes, but it was payne and greeue me. My heart was hote within me, and whyle I was thus musyng, the fyre kindled: that I spake with my tongue. LORDE, let me knowe myne ende, and the nombre of my dayes: that I maye be certified what I was. Beholde, thou hast made my dayes spanne longe, and my life is as it were a vnyng: Sela. Yee euery man walketh as it were a shadowe, and disquieteth himself in vayne: he heapeth vp riches, and can not telle to whom he gathereth them. Now LORD, wherein shall I comfort me: my hope is in the. Deliyer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scoone w the foolish. I kepe silence, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy plagges awaye from me, for I am consumed: the rewe the feare of thy hande. When thou pynest man for synne, thou chastenest him: so that his bentie consumeth awaye, like as it were a mothe. O how vayne are all men.

Sela. Heare my prayer O LORD, and consider my callinge: shewe not thy self as though thou sawest not my teares. For I am a stranger and pilgrymme with the, as all my forefathers were. O spare me a litle, that I maye refresh myself, before I go hence, and be no more sene.

The XXXIX. A psalme of David.

Wayed patiently for the LORDE, which enclyned himself vnto me, and herde my callinge. He brought me out of the horrible pitte, out of the myre and claye: he set my feet vpon the rocke, and orde my goinges. He hath put a new song in my mouth, even a thankesgyng vnto our God. Many men seynge this, shall fear the LORDE, and put their trust in him. Blessed is the man that setteth his hope in the LORDE, and turneth not vnto the proud: to such as go aboute with lies. O LORD my God, greates are y wonderous workes which thou hast done: and in thy thoughtes comde vs there maye none be likened vnto the.

I wolde declare them, and speake of the: but they are so many, that they can not be tolde. Sacrifice and offeringe thou woldest not haue: but a body hast thou ordeined me: burnt offeringes and sacrifice for synne thou hast not alowed. Then sayde I: Lo, I

The Psalter.

In the begynnyng of the booke it is written of me, that I shulde fulfill thy wil O my God, and that am I content to do: yee thy lawe is within my heart. I wil preach of y right woflesse in the greate congregacion: Lo, I wil not refrayne my lippes, O LORDE, and that thou knowest. I do not hyde y rightwousnes in my heart, my talyng is of thy treuth and sayyng healeth: I kepe not thy louyng mecy and faithfulness backe from the grea congregacion. Turne not thou thy mercye from me O LORDE, but let thy louyng kynde and treuth allwaye prserue me. For innumerable troubles are come aboute me: my synnes haue taken sodi holde vpon me, that I am not able to lode vp: yee they are more in nombre then the hayres of my heade, and my heart hath fayled me. O LORDE, let it be thy pleasure to deliuer me, make haile (O LORDE) to helpe me. Let them be ashamed and confounded, that sette a ster my soule, to destroye it: let them fall backwarde and be put to confucion, that wysly me enell.

Let the soone be brought to shame, that are ouer me: there there. But let all these that sette the, be ioyfull and glad in the: and let all such as deliue in thy sayyng healeth, saye allwaye: the LORDE be praised. As for me, I am poore and in misery, but the LORDE heareth for me. Thou art my helper and redeemer, make no longer cariage, O my God.

The XL. A psalme of David.

Blessed is he, y considereth y poore: y LORDE shal deliuer him in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal preserue him, and kepe him alwaye: he shal make him to prospere vpon earth, and shal not deliue him into y wil of his enemies. The LORDE shal refresh him, when he lyeth sick vpon his bedd, yee thou makest his bed in all his sickness. I sayde: LORDE be mercifull vnto me, heale my soule, for I haue synned agaynst the. Myne enemies speake euill vpon me: when shal he dye, and his name perishe? Though he came in to se, yet meaured he falsed in his heart, heaping myschese vpon himself. All they that hate me, run together agaynst me, and ymagin euell agaynst me. They haue geuen a wicked sentence vpon me: when he lyeth, he shal rise vp no more. Yee euery myne owne familiar frend, whom I trusted, which dyde eate my bried, hath lift vp his heale agaynst me. But be thou mercifull vnto me (O LORDE) raise thou me up, and I shal reward them. By this I knowe thou fauourest me, that my enemye shal not triumphe ouer me. Thou hast vp holden me because of my innocency, and set me before thy face for ever. Blessed be y LORDE God of Israel, from hence forth and for evermore. Amen, Amen.

The XLI. A psalme of y child of Corah.

Ite as the hart desyret the water brokes, so longeth my soule after the, O God. My soule is a thurst for God, yee euery for the sayyng God: when shal I come, and beholde the face of God? My teares are my meate daye and night, whyle it is daylie sayde vnto me: where is now thy God? Now when I thinke there vpon, I poure out my heart by my self: for I wolde sayne go hence with the multitude, and passe ouer with them vnto the house of God, in y voyce of prayse and thankesgyng, amonge such as kepe holy daye. Why art thou so full of heuynesse (O my soule): and why art thou so vngodly within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thanks, for the helpe of his countenance. My God, my soule is vexed within me: therefore I remember the lende of Iordane, and the litle hill of Hermon.

One depe calleth another w the voyce of thy whystles, all thy wayes and water founteynes are gone ouer me. The LORDE hath promised his louyng kyndnesse daylie, therefore wil I prayse him in the night season, and make my prayer vnto y God of my life. I wil saye vnto God my stony rock: why hast thou forgotten me? why go I thus heuely: whyle the enemye oppreseth me? Whyle my bones are broken, and whyle myne enemies cast me in the tette, daylie sayenge vnto me: where is now thy God? Why art thou so heuely (O my soule): and why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet thanke him for the helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The XLII. psalme.

Sende sentence vpon me (O God) and sende my cause agaynst the vngodly people: O deliuer me from the deceitfull and wicked man. For thou (O God) art my strength: why hast thou shot me from the? Why go I then so heuely, whyle the enemye oppreseth me? O sende out y light and thy treuth, y they maye lede me and bring me vnto thy holy hill and to thy dwelling.

That I maye go in to the auiler of God: euery vnto the God which is my ioy and pleasure, and vpon the harpe to geue thanks vnto y O God, my God. Why art thou so heuely (O my soule): and why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thanks for y helpe of his countenance.

The XLIII. A psalme of y childre of Corah.

We haue herde with o care (God) o fathers haue tolde vs, what thou hast done in their tyme, of olde.

How thou hast drye out the heithen w thy honde, & plated the is: how thou hast destroyed the nations & cast the out. For they gaf not the londe in possession thow thei were swerde, nether was it their owne arme that helped them. But thy right hade, thy ne arme & the light of thy countenance, because thou haddest a sauoure vnto them.

Thou art y kinge & my God, thou sendest helpe vnto Jacob. Thow wyl wil we ouer thow our enemies: & in thy name will we treade them vnder, that rys vp agaynst vs.

For I will not trust in my bowe, it is not my sworde y shal helpe me. But is thou that sauest vs fro oure enemies, and puttest them to confucion that hate vs. We will allway make oure boast of God, and prayse thy name for ever. Sela.

But now thou forsakest vs, & puttest vs to confucion, and goest not forth with oure hoestes. Thou makest vs to turne oure backs vpon oure enemies, so that they which hate vs, spoile oure goodes. Thou lettest vs be eaten vplike shepe, & scatterest vs amonge the heithen.

Thou sellest thy people for naught, & takest no moneye for them. Thou makest vs to be rebuked of o neighbours, to be laugh ed to scoone and had in derision, of them that are rounde aboute vs. Thou hast made vs a very byworde amonge the heithen, & that the people shal thei heades at vs. My confucion is daylie before me, & the shame of my face couereth me. For the voyce of the slanderer & blasphemor, for the enemye and auenger. All this is come vpon vs, & yet haue we not forgotten the, ner behaued oure selues vnfaithfully in thy conenant. Oure herte is not turned backe, nether oure steppes gone out of thy waye. That thou smyttest vs so in the place of the serpent, & couerest vs with y shadowe of death. As we had forgotten the name of oure God, & holde vpon re hondes to eny straunge God: Shulde not God fynde it out? for he knoweth the very secretes of the hert. But for thy sake we are kylled all the daie longe, and are counted as shepe apoynted to be slayne. Vp LOR to the grounde. Arise o LORDE, helpe vs, and deliuer vs for thy mercie sake.

The XLIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher is dytinge of a good man, I speake of that, which I haue made of the kynges: My kyng is y pane of a ready wyter. Thou art the saynt amonge the children of me, full of grace and thy lippes, therefore God blesteth the for ever.

Synde the with thy swerde vpon thy thigh (o thou mightie) with worshippe and reuerence. Good lucke haue thou with thy cheuere, ryde on with the treuch, mettes & righteousnes: & thy right hode shal teach y wonderfull thinges. Thy arrowes are sharpe, the people shal be subdued vnto the, in the myddest amonge the kynges enemies.

Thy seate (o God) endureth for ever: the cepter of thy kyngdome is a right cepter.

Thou hast loued rightenousnesse, & hath iniquite: wherfore God (which is thy God) hath annoynted the with the oyle of gladnes above thy felowes. All thy garments are like myrrour, Aloes & Cassia, when thou comest out of thine yuene palaces in thy bad full glory. Thynges daughters go in thy goodly araye, & vpon thy right honde stowderh the quene in a vesture of the most fyn golde. Herten (o daughter) consider, & inclyne thine eare: forget thine owne people, & thy fathers house. So shal the kyng be ne pleasure in thy bentie, for he is thy LORDE, & thou shalt worshippe him. The daughters of Tyne shal be there with giftes, & theye amonge the people shal make thar supplicacion before the. The kynges daughter is all glorious within, hir clothinge is of wrought golde. She shal be brought to the kyng in rayment of nedle worke, & maydens after her: soch as be next her shal be brought vnto the. With ioye and gladnesse shal they be brought, and go in to the kynges palace. In steade of thy fathers thou hast gotten children, whom thou shal make prynces in all londes. I wil remember thy name from one generacion to another: therefore shal the people geue thankes vnto the, woulde without ende.

The XLV. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher troubles and aduersite, & we founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe. Therefore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hilles were caried in to the myddest of the see.

The Psalter.

Though the waters of the see ragged & we neuer so troublous, & though the mountayns shoke at the tēpest of the same. Sela.

For there is a floude, which w his ryuers reioyseth y cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in y myddest of her, therefore shal she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, & y right early. The heithen are made, the kyngdomes make moch a doo: but whē he sheweth his voyce, y earth maketh awaye. The LORDE of hoestes is w vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence.

Sela. O come hither, & beholde y wortes of the LORDE, what destruccions he hath brought vpo y earth. He hath made warres to cesse in all the woulde: he hath broken the bowe, he hath knapped the speare in sonder, & butteth the charrettes in the fyre. Be still, & confesse y I am God: I wil be exalted amonge the heithen, & I wil be exalted vpon ierusalem. The LORDE of hoestes is w vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence. Sela.

The XLVI. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Waple your hodes together (all ye people): O synge vnto God with the voyce of thar elgeynges. For the LORDE the most hyest is to be feared, & he is the greates kyng vpo all y earth. He shal subdue the people vnder vs, & the heithen vnto oure feet. He choseth vs for an heretage, the bentie of Jacob whom he loued. Sela. God is gone vp w a merry noyse, & the LORDE w the sounde of the trumpet. O synge prayse, synge prayse vnto God: O synge prayse, synge prayse vnto oure kyng. For God is kyng of all the earth, O synge prayse vnto him with vnderstandinge. God is kyng ouer the heithen, God sitteth in his holy seate. The prynces of the people are gathered together vnto the God of Abrahā: for God is farre farre hyer exalted, then the mightie lordes of the earth.

The XLVII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher is y LORDE & hyeli to be pray sed, in y cite of o God, en vpo his holy hill. The hill of Sion is like a fayre pla ce, wherof all the londe reioyseth: vpon the north syde lyeth the cite of the greates kyng. God is well knowne in hir palaces, y he is the defence of the same. For lo, kynges are gathered, and gone by together. They marvelled, to se soch thinges: they were astonied, & sodely cast downe. Feare came vnto the, & forowe as vpo a woman in hir trauayle. Thou shalt breake y shippes of the see, thow the east wynde. Like as we haue herde, so se we in the cite of the LORDE of hoestes, in the cite of o God: God vpholdeth the same for ever. Sela. We wayte for thy louyng & yndnesse (o God) in the myddest of thy temple. O God, acordunge vnto thy name, so is y prayse vnto the woulde: ender thy right hode is full of rightenousnes.

O let the most Sion reioyse, & y dough ters of Iuda be glad because of thy iudgementes. Walke aboute Sion, go rounde aboute her, and tell hir towres. Marke well hir walles, see y hir houses: that it maye be tolde them y come after. For this God is o God for ever & ever, and he shal allwaie be o gyde.

The XLVIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher are they, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vpo the earth. Hye & lowe, ryche & poore, one w another My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstandinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherfore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles copaseth merounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches. To man maye deliuer his brother, ner make a grement for him vnto God.

For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for ever. Ne though he lyue longe, & se not y grave. For it shal be sene, y soch wysse me shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignorant and foolish, & leaue their goodes for ether. Loke what is in their houses, it continueth still: thei dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuertheless mā abyeth not in soch honore, but is copared vnto y brute beastes, & becometh like vnto the.

This wate of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it w their mouth.

Sela. They lyen in the hell like shepe, & ath shal gnawe vpon them, & the righteous shal haue dominacion of them in the mo nyng by tymes: their strength shal consum. & hell shal be their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou affrayed, whan one is made ryche, & the glory of his house increased. For he carryeth nothing: as maye w him when he dyeth: nether shal his pompe folowe him. Wle he lyeth, he is counted an happyer

The Psalter.

so longe as he is in prosperite, me speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light any more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compar'd vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The XLIX. A psalme of Asaph.

The LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the wolde from the ysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sien appeareth the glorious bectie of God. Oure God shal cōme, and not kepe silence there goeth before him a consuminge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, these y set more by the couenaunt then by any offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his rightuousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprocue thee not because of thy sacrifice, y burntofferinges are allwaye before me. I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gores out of thy foldes. For all the bestes of the filde are my re, and thousandes of cattell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the soules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the feide are in my sight. If I be hongrie, I wil not tell he: for y whole wolde is myne, and all that herin is. Thyntest thou, that I wil eate the flesh of oxen, or drynke the bloude of geaues? Offre vnto God prayse and thankes yeyng, and paye thy vowes vnto the most yest. And call vps me in the tyme of trouble, so wil I heare the, that thou shalt thanke me. But vnto the vngodly sayeth God: Why doest thou preache my lawes, and takest my couenaunt in thy mouth? Where is thou hatest to be reformed, and castest ny wordes behynde the? If thou seist a hefe, thou runnest with him, and art partaker with the aduouterers. Thou lettest y routh speake wickednesse, & thy tonge payneth disceate. Thou syttest and speakest agaynst thy brother, yee and slaundrest thine vne mothers sonne. This thou doest, why? I holde my tonge: and thinkest me to be e soch one as thy self but I wil reprocue the, set my self agaynst the. O conside this, that forget God: lest I plucke you awaie, so there be none to deliuer you. Who so reeth me chafes and prayse, he honoureth me: & this is the waye, whereby I wil shewe him the sauynge health of God.

The L. A psalme of David.

Gue mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, & accordinge vnto thy great mercies, do awaye myne offences. Wash me well fro my wickednesse, & cleanse me fro my synne. For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the hane I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges, and shaldest ouercome when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the true, and hast shewed me secreete wysdome. O reconale me with hope, and I shal be deuere: wash thou me, and I shal be whiter than snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face fro my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. Make me a cleane herte (o God) and renue a right spirete within me. Cast me not awaie fro thy presence, and take not thy holy spirete fro me. O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy spirete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Deliuer me from bloude guyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy rightuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

For yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the: but thou delystest not in burntofferinges. The sacrifice of God is a troubled spirete, a broken and a cōrte herte (o God) shalst thou not despise. O ke favorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Ierusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of rightuousnesse, with the burntofferinges and oblations: then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine altar.

The LI. A psalme of David.

Why boastest thou thy self (thou Tyraunt) that thou canst do mysche? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge smuggeth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vngodlynesse more then good, so talke of thyne re then rightuousnesse. Sela.

The Psalter.

Thou louest to speake all wordes y maye do hurte, O thou false tōge. Therefore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the lyvinge. Sela.

The rightuous shal se this, & feare, and laugh him to scorne. Lo, this is the mā, y take not God for his strength, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, & was mightie in his wickednesse. As forme, I am like a grene olyuete in y house of God: my trust is in the tender mercy of God for ever & ever. I wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the, for that thou hast done: and wil hope in thy name, for thy sayntes like it well.

The LII. A psalme of David.

The foolish bodies saye in their heresy: Ensh, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abominable in their wickednesse: there is not one, that doth good. God looked downe from heauen vps the children of men, to se yf there were any that wolde vnderstande, or seke after God. But they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How can they haue vnderstōdinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bread, & call not vpon God? They are afrayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that beseege the: thou puttest them to confusion, for God despiseth them. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out of Sien: Oh that the LORDE wolde deliuer his people out of captiuitie. Then shulde Jacob reioyse, & Israel shulde be right glad.

The LIII. A psalme of David.

Kepe me (o God) for thy names sake, and deliuer me in thy strength. Heare my prayer (o God) conside the wordes of my mouth. For straungers are risen vp agaynst me, and the mightie (which haue not God before their eyes) seke after my soule. Sela. But lo, God is my helper: it is he that vpholdeth my soule. He shall rewarde euell vnto myne enemies, and in thy treuth shalt thou destroye them. A fire wil offeringe wil I geue the, and prayse thy name O LORDE, because it is so comfortable.

For thou hast deliuered me out of all my trouble, so that myne eye seyth his desyre vps myne enemies.

The LIV. A psalme of David.

Hear my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self fro my petition. Take heede vnto me and heare me, how pitously

The liij. psalme. Ho. xxi.

I mourne & cōplaine. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschese, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of deatch is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath overhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a dove, that I might fle somwhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (o LORDE) and deliue them, for I se vnrighuousnes & strife in y cure. This geeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschese and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therein, disceate and gyle go not out of his stretes. If it were myne enemy that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell wil dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companyon, my gyde and myne owne familer frēde. We had swete & secreete communicacion together, and louyn gly walked wtogether in y house of God.

Let deatch come hastely vpon them, and let them go downe quicke into hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellinges.

As forme, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shal helpe me. In the eueninge, mourninge and at noon daye wil I mourne and cōplaine: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that deliuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite forme: for they are many agaynst me. Receue God that endureth for ever, shal heare me, and bringe them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. See they laye hontes vpon soch as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smooother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. O cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal nourish the, and not leaue the rightuous in vniquietnesse. But as for them, thou (o God) shalt cast them downe in to the pitte of destruction. The bloude thurstie and disceatfull shal not lyse out half their daies. Their thelesse my trust is in the.

Neuerthelesse, whē I am afraied, I put my trust in the. I wil comforte my self in Gods worde, yee I wil hope in God, and not feare: What can flesh then do vnto me?

They were me daylie in my wordes: all y^e they ymagin, is to dome euell. They holde all together, & kepe them selues close: they marke my stappes, how they maye catch my soule. But in wayne, for it shal escape the: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe such people. Thou tellest my flatteringes, thou puttest my teares in thy bottell, and nembresthem. When so ever I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. Yee in God do I trust, & am not afraied: what can man the do vnto me? Vnto the (o God) wil I paye my vowes, vnto y^e wil I giue thakes & prayse. For thou hast deliuered my soule fro death, & my fete fro fallinge, y^e I maye walke before God in y^e light of y^e iuyng.

The LVI. A psalme of Dauid.

Be mercifull vnto me (o God) I emercifull vnto me, for my soule trusteth in y^e: & vnder the shadowe of thy wynges shal be my refuge, vntill wickednesse be euerpast.

I call vnto God y^e most hyest, enē y^e God y^e shal helpe me vp agayne. He shal sende fro heauen, & saue me fro the reproche of him that wolde swallowe me vp. Sela.

This shal God sende, for his mercy and faithfulness sake. I lye with my soule amonge the cruell Lyons: euē amonge the children of men, wherethe are speares and arrows, and their tonge a sharpe swerde.

Set vp thy self o God aboue the heauens, and thy glory aboue all the earth. They haue layed a nett for my fete, & pressed downe my soule: they haue dygged a pyt before me, and are fallen into it them selues.

Sela. Tilly here is ready (o God) my here is ready, to synge and geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute and harpe, I my self wil awake right early. I wil geue thakes vnto the (o LORDE) amonge the people, I wil synge prayse vnto the amonge the heithē. For y^e greatnes of thy mercy reacheth vnto the heauens, and thy faithfulness vnto the cloudes. Set vp thy self o God aboue the heauens, & thy glory aboue all y^e earth.

They godly are frowarde, enē from their mother wombe: as soone as they be boune, they go straie & speake lyes. They are as furrow as the serpent, euē like the deafe Adder that stoppeth hir eares. That she shuld heare the voyce of the charmer, chauncer neuer so wysely. Breake their teeth (o God) in their mowthes, smyte the chaste bones of the Lyons whelpes in sonder, o LORDE.

That they maye fall awaye, like water runneth a pace: and that when they shew their arrows, they maye be broke. Lettē consume awaye like a snail, & like the vntimely frute of a woman, and let them not see the Sonne. Or euē youre thornes be sharpe, the wiatch shal take them awaye quicke, like a stormy wynde. The righteous shal reioyse when he seyth the vengeance, and shal wash his fete in the bloude of the me godly. So that men shal saye: verely, there is a rewarde for y^e righteous: doubtles, there is a God that iudgeth the earth.

The LVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Deliuer me fro myne enemies (o my God) & defende me fro the y^e rse y^e agaynst me. O deliuer me fro the wicked doers, & saue me fro the bloudy man. For lo, they lye waytinge for my soule y^e mighte me are gathered together agaynst me, w^o out eny offence or fault of me, o LORDE. They rine & prepare the felues, w^o my fault: Arise, come thou helpe me, & beholde. Stode vp o LORDE God of hostes, thou God of Israel, to vyset all heithen: be not mercifull vnto the y^e offende of malicious wickednesse. Sela. Lettē go to fro, & runne aboute the cite youlinge like dogges. Beholde, they speake (agaynst me) in their mouth, swerdes are vnder their lippes, for who retrioueth the? But thou (o LORDE) shalt haue them in derision, thou shalt laugh all heithē to scoone. My strength do I ascribe vnto the, for thou (o God) art my defender. God sheweth me his goodnesse plentifully, God letteth me see my desyre vnto myne enemies. Slaue the net, lest my people forget it: but scatthe the abroad with thy power & put the downe, o LORDE our defender. For y^e synne of their mouth, for the words of their lippes, & because of their pride, lettē be taken: & why? their preaching is of cursynge & lyes. Consume them in y^e wrath, consume the y^e they maye perishe, & knowe y^e is God, which ruleth in Jacob and in all the

The LIX. A psalme of Dauid.

God, thou y^e hast cast vs out and scattered vs abroad, thou y^e hast bene so so redyspleased at vs, & doorte vs agayn. Thou y^e hast remoued the lode & denyed it, heale the sores therof, for it shal the. Thou hast shewed thy people heuy thinges, thou hast geuen vs a drynte off wyne, y^e we slobis withall. Yet hast thou geue a cokē for such as feareth the, y^e they maye cast it vp in y^e trowth. Sela. That thy beloued might be deliuered, helpe them with thy right hande, and heare me. God hath spokē in his Sactuary (which thinge reioyseth me) I wil denye de Siche, & mere oute the valley. Suchoth Galad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strength of my heade, Juda is my captayne. Moab is my washpote, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who will lede me in to the stronge cite? Who will bringe me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it, o God, thou y^e hast cast vs out: thou God, y^e wentest not w^o of hostes? O be thou our helpe in trouble, for wayne is the helpe of man. Tho w^o God we shal do grete actes, for it is he that shal treade downe oure enemies.

The LX. A psalme of Dauid.

Hear my crienge (o God) geue hede vnto my prayer. From the entes of y^e earth wil I call vnto the, whē my herce is in trouble: Oh helpe me vp vnto an hyer occe. For thou art my hope, a stronge tower farr agaynst the enemye. I will dwell in thy tabernacle foreuer, that I maye be safe vnder the couerynge of thy wynges. Sela. For thou (o LORDE) hast herde my desyres, thou hast geuen an heritage vnto those that feare thy name. Thou shalt graunte the thyngē a lōge life, that his yeares maye endure thow out all generacions. That he maye dwell before God foreuer: Oh let thy louynge mercy & faithfulness preserue him. So wil I allwaye synge prayse vnto thy name, y^e I maye daylie pefourme my vowes.

The LXI. A psalme of Dauid.

My soule waiteth only vpon God, for of him cometh my helpe. He only is my strength, my saluacion, my defence, so y^e I shal not greatly fall. How longe wil ye ymagin myschese agaynst euery man? ye shal be slayne all y^e sorte of you: yee as a tottinge wall shal ye be, & like a broken hedge. Thou benyceis only how to put him out, their delysse is i lyes: they geue good wordes in their mouth but curse w^o theu here. Sela. Neuertheles, my soule abydeh only vpon God, for he is my God. He only is my strength, my saluacion, my defence: so y^e I shal not fall. In God is my health, my glory, my might, & in God is my trust. O put yo^r trust in him allwaye (ye people) poure out yo^r herres before him, for God is oure hope. Sela. As for men, they are but wayne, me are disceatfull: vnto the weighees they are al together lighter then vaine it self. O trust not in wronge & robbery, geue not yo^r selues vnto vanite: yf riches increase, set not yo^r herce vpon them. God spake once a worde, & wyse haue I herde the same: that power belongeth vnto God. That thou LORD haue me a full, & that thou rewardist euery man a cōtinge to his woikes.

The LXII. A psalme of Dauid.

God, thou art my God: early wil I seke the. My soule thirsteth for the, my flesht longeth after the in a bare & drie lode, where no water is. Thus do I lōte for the in thy Sactuary, that I might behelde y^e power & glory. For thy louynge kynde nesse is better then life, my lippes shal prayse the. As lōge as I liue wil I magnifie the, & lift vp my hondes in thy name. My soule is satisfied euē as it were with marry & satness, when my mouth prayseth the with ioyfull lippes. In my bedde wil I remembre y^e, & whē I wake, my callynge shal be of the. For thou hast bene my helper, & vnder the shadowe of y^e wynges wil I reioyse. My soule hangeth vpon the, thy right honde vp holdeth me. They seke after my soule, bus in wayne, for they shal go vnder the earth. They shal fall into the swerde, & be a poitē for foxes. But y^e kynge shal reioyse in God: all they that sweare by hym, shal be commended, for the mouth of lyers shalte stopped.

The LXIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Hear my voyce (o God) in my cōplayn. He, preserue my life fro feare of y^e enemye. Hyde me from the gatheringe together of y^e frowarde, fro y^e braye of wicked doers. Which whette their edges like a swerde, & shute w^o their venimous wordes like arrows. That they maye piously hurte y^e innocent, & so delye to hit him w^o cut eny feare.

and all they y^e are true off herte, shall be glad therof.

The LXIII. A psalme of David.

A Thou (o God) art prayesed in Sion, and Thou hearest the prayer, therfore commeth all flesh unto the. Oure mysdedes prepayle agaynst vs, oh be thou mercifull unto oure synnes. Blessed is the man who thou chosest and receauest unto the, that he maye dwell in thy court: he shall be satisfied with the pleasures of thy house, even off thy holy temple. Heare vs accordinge vnto thy woderfull rightuousnesse, o God oure saluaciō:

thou that art the hope of all the endes of y^e earth, and off the brude see. Which in his strength setteth fast the moste ayres, z is gy-ded aboute with power. Which stilleth y^e raginge of the see, the roaringe off his wawes, and the woodnes of the people. They that dwell in y^e vtremost partes are afayed at thy tokens, thou makest both the meynynge and euerynge statres to prayse y^e. Thou visitest the earth, thou watrest it, and makest it very plenteous. The ryner of God is full of waters, thou preparest man his come, ad

watrest hir forowes, thou breakest the harde clottes therof, thou makest it soft with y^e dropes of rayne, and blestest the increase of
it. Thou crownest the yere with thy good, dwellinges of the wilderness are fatt also, y^e shepe, the valleys stonde so thicke with corne

Therfore wil I go into thy house wth ob-

I promysed wth my lippes, and spake with my mouth, when I was in trouble. I wil offer

They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auantage. Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceave it? is there knowledge in the most hiest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prosper in the worlde, the se haue riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in wayne (thoughe I) & wash my bondes in innocency? Wherfore shulde I be then purgshed daylie, & be chastened every momynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thoughe I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Treade upon them with thy feet, & cast them downe to the grounde, for the enemy hath destroyed altogether in the Sanctuary. Thy adversaries roare in thy houses, & see up their banners for tokens. Men maye see the axes glister above, like as those that haue in the wood. They cutt downe all the sylinge worke of y^e Sanctuary wth bylles & axes. They haue set fyre vpon y^e Sanctuary they haue defiled y^e dwelling place of y^e name, eue vnto the groude. Yet they saye in the heartes: Let vs spoyle the all together, thus haue they brent vp all the houses of God in the londe. We se oure tokens nomore, there is not one piophet more, no not one that vnderstandeth anymore. Oh God, how longe shal the aduersary do this dishonoure? how longe shal the enemy blaspheme thy name? for cuer. Why with drawest thou thine hande? why pluckest thou not thy right hande out of thy bosome, to consume thine enemies? But God is my kynge of olde, the helpe that is done vpon earth he doth it himself. Then denydest y^e see the row thy power, thou beatest the heades of the dragons in the waters.

Thou syncest the heades of Lemathan in peeces, & geneist him to be meate for the people in the wilderness. Thou dyggest vp welles & brokes, thou dryest vp myghtie waters. The daye is thine, & the night is thine: thou hast prepared the lightes & the Sonne. Thou hast set all y^e borders of the earth thou hast made both Summer & wynter. Remembre this (o LORDE) how the enemye buteth, & how the foolish people blaspheme thy name. O denyer not the soule of thy turtle dove vnto the beeste, & forget not the congregacon of the poore for cuer. Loke vpon the couenant, for the darcke houses of the earth are full of wickednesse. O let not the synple go awaye ashamed, for the poore & nedye geue prayes vnto thy name. Arise (o God, & maneyne thine owne cause, remembre how the foolish man blasphemeth the daye lie. Set not up youre homes any more. Speake not with a stiff necke. For piety commeth neether from the east nor from the west, ner yet fro the wilderness. And why? For in the honde of the LORDE there is a cuppe full of stronge wyne, & poureth out of the same: As for the beggers therof, all y^e vngodly of the earth shal drinke them, & sucke them out. But I wil talke of the God of Jacob, & prayse him for euer. In the houses of the vngodly will I beate, & in the houses of the righteous shal be spoken.

Hath the LORDE forgotten to be gracious? O, hath he shut vp his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? the right honde of the most hert can change all.

Therefore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and call to mynde thy wonderous of old tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shal be of thy doinges.

Thy maye (o God) is holy, who is so greater mightie as God? Thou art the God, that doth wonders, thou hast declared thy power amonge the people. Thou with thine arm hast deliuered thy people, euen the sonnes of Jacob and Joseph. Sela. The waters saue y^e (o God) y^e waters saue y^e, & were dryed: y^e depthes were moued. Thy waye was in the see, and thy pathes in the greates waters, yet condempn man knowe thy foete steppe. Thou leddest thy people like a flocke vnto the honde of Moses and Aaron.

The LXXVII. A psalme of Asaph.

Extremy lawe (o my people) encline y^e eares vnto y^e wordes of my mouth. I wil open my mouth in parables, and speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowe, and soch as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we shulde not hye them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his mighte and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenant with Jacob, and gaue Israel a lawe, which he commaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their posterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vnbome.

To the intent y^e when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, & not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his commandementes. And not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and euerywarre generacion, a generacion that set not their hearts right, and whose sperte was not true towards God. ge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenant of God, & wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgat what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Marueles thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egypt, euen in the felde of Zoan. He denyed the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. In the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloathed the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greates deynth. He broughte waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the rhyuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hyest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their heartes, and requyred meate for the fr lust. For they spate agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wilderness. Shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, & gaue the waters streames gushed out, and the fountaynes flowed withall: but how can he be generated and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth, for the fyre was kyndled in Jacob, and benyng displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they belued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he commaunded the cloudes above, and opened the doores of heauen. He rayned downe Manna vnto them for to eat, and gaue them bred from heauen. Thine ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. He made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and gathered soules like the sonde of y^e see. & let it fall amonge their tentes rounde aboute their habitacions. So they ate & were fylled; so he gaue them their owne desire. They were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whyle y^e meate was yet in theyr mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vnto the, & slew y^e welchiest of the, & smote downe y^e chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, & belued not his wonderous workes. Therefore their dayes were consumed in vanite, & suddenly their yeres were gone. When he slew them, they sought him, and turned them cailly vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redeemer. Nevertheless, they dyd but flatter him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tongues. For their herte was not whole with him, neither continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yet many a tyme turned he his wrath away, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. For he considered y they were but fleshye; even a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft haue they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme haue they provoked him in the deserte? They turned backe & tempted God, and moved the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hnde, in y daye when he deliuered them from the hande of y enemye. How he had wrought his miracles in Egipte, and his wonders in the londe of Zoan. How he turned their waters into bloude, so that they might not drynke of the ryuers. How he sent lyse amonge them, to eatethem up, and frogges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catirpiller, and their laboure vnto the gresshopper. How he bett downe their vynyardes with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their catell with haylestones, and their flockes with hore thoder boltes. How he sent vpon them y furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euell angels. When he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciō, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their eall ouer to the pestilence. When he smote all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in y dwellinges of Lam.

But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wilderness like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and overwhelmed their enemies with the see. He carried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuaries: even in to this hill, which he purchased with his right hande. He dyd cast out the heithen before them, caused their londes to be denyded amonge them for an heretage, and made y tribes of Israel to dwell in their tētes. For all this they tempted and displeased the most hye God, and kepte not his ceuenaunt. But turned their backs and fell awaye like their forefathers, startinge asyde like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their hie places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel.

So that he soughte the tabernacle in Silo, enen his habitation wherein he dwelt amonge men. He deliuered their power in to captiuyte, and their glory in to the enemyes hnde. He gaue his people ver into the swerde, for he was wroth with his heretage.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydes were not geuen to mariage. Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giante refused with wyne. He smote his enemies in y hynder partes, and put them to a perpetual shame. He refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Neuerthelesse, he chose y trybe of Juda, with the hill of Sion which he loued. And there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed y fundacion of it like y grounde, that it mighte perpetually endure. He chose Dauid also his seruant, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was followinge the yowes greete with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritaunce. So he fed them with a staff full and true bat, and ruled them with all y diligence of his power.

The LXXVIII. A psalme of Asaph. God, y heithen are fallen in to chate heretage: thy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Jerusalem an heape of stones. The deed bodie of thy seruantes haue they geuen vnto y foules of the ayre to be deuoured, and the flesh of thy sayntes vnto y bestes of the londe. Their bloude haue they shed like water on euery syde of Jerusalem, and there was no mā to burye them. We are become an open shame vnto our enemies, a very scorne and derision vnto them that are rounde about vs.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou be angry? shal thy gelyus burne like fyre for ever? Poure out thy indignacion vpon the heithen that knowe the not, and vpon the kyngdomes that call not vpon thy name.

For they haue deuoured Jacob, and layd waste his dwellinge place. O remembre not our olde synnes, but haue mercy vpon vs: that soone for we are come to grace myselfe. Helpe vs O God o' Sanyo' for y glory of y name: o deliuer vs, & forgiue vs o' synnes for y names sake. Wherefore shall y heithen saye: where is new their God? Hear o thou shepherde of Israel, thou y ledest Jacob like a flocke of shepe: shewe y selfe thou y syttest vpon y cheubins. Before Ephraim, Be Jamin & Manasse: shew vpon thy power & come helpe vs. Turne vs agayne (o God) shewe the light of thy countenaunce & we shal be whole. O LORDE God of hoostes, how longe wilt thou be angry over the prayer of thy people? Thou hast fed the with the bred of reares, yee thou hast geuen the plenteousnes of reares to drynke. Thou hast made vs a very strife vnto o' neighbours, & o' enemies laugh vs to scorne.

Turne vs agayne (thou God of hoostes) shewe the light of thy countenaunce, & we shal be whole. Thou hast brought a vynyarde out of Egipte, thou didest cast out y heithen, & plant it. Thou maydest rowme for it, & canst it to take roote, so y it fylled the lode. The hills were covered with the shadowe of it, & it were the stronge Cedretrees w the bowes therof. She stretched out hir braunches vnto the see, & hir bowes vnto the water: Why hast thou then broken downe hir hedge, that all they which go by, plucke of hir grapes?

The wilde boare out of the wod hath wunt it up, & the bestes of the felde haue deuoured it. Turne y agayne (thou God of hoostes) lode downe from heauen, beholde & visit this vynyarde. Manteyne it, that thy right hnd hath planted, & the sonne whom thou maydest somoch of for thy selfe. For why? it is brēt with fyre, & yett waist: o let the perishe at the rebuke of thy wrath.

Let thy honde be vpon the man of thy right honde, & vpon the man whō thou maydest somoch of for thine owne selfe. And so wil not we go backe from the: oh let vs lyue, & we shal call vpon thy name. Turne vs agayne O LORDE God of hoostes, shewe the light of thy countenaunce, & we shal be whole.

Blowe vpon the troyettes in the new Moone, vpon o' solpne feast daye. For this is the vs in Israel, & a lawe of the God of Jacob. This he ordered in Joseph for a testimo-

Whē thou calldest vpon me in trouble, I helped the & herde the, what tyme as the storme fell vpon the, I proued the also at the water of strife. Sela.

Hear o my people, for I assure the o' Israel, yf thou wilt herten vnto me: There shal no straunge God be in the, neither shalt thou worshippe eny other God. I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the lode of Egipte: open thy mouth wyde, & I shal fylle it. But my people wolde not heare my voyce, & Israel wolde not obeye me. So I gaue the vnto their owne hertes lust, & let the folow theiur owne ymaginacions. O y my people wolde obeye me, for yf Israel wolde walke in my wayes. I shulde soone put downe their enemies, & turne myne hnde agaynst their aduersaries. The haters of y LORDE shulde mysse Israel, but their tyme shulde endure for ever. He shulde fede them with the synest wheate floure, & satisfie them with honny out of the stony rocke.

The XCII. psalme.

The LORDE is kynge, and hath put on glorious apparell, the LORDE hath put on his apparell, & gyded himself with strength: he hath made the round world desolure, that it can not be moved. From that tyme forth hath yf seate bene prepared, thou art from euclastinge. The floudes arise (o LORDE) the floudes lift vp their noyse, yf floudes lift vp their wawes. The wawes of the see are mightie, & rage horribly: but yet the LORDE that dwelleth on hye, is mightier. Thy testimonies (o LORDE) are very sure, holynesse becommeth thyne house for euer. The XCIII. psalme.

LORDE God, to whom vengeance ce beløgeth: thou God to whom ven geance belongeth, shewe thy self.

Arise thou iudge of the worlde, & rewarde the proude after their deseruynge. · LORDE, how longe shal the vngodly, how longe shal the vngodly tryumpher? how longe shal all wicked voers speake so disdaynedly, and make soch proude boastyng? They synye downe thy people (O LORDE) and trouble thine heretage. They murthure the widow and the straunger, and put the father leſſe to death. And yet they ſaie: T uſh, the LORDE ſeyth not, the God of Jacob regar ſtonde? He that planted the eare, ſhal he mayest geue him pacience in tyme of aduer-

people, neither wil he forsake his inheritance. And why? iudgment shal be turned a-gayne vnto rightuousnesse, and all such as be true of hert shal folowe it. Who ryseth vp

When I sayde: my foot hath slipped, thy mercy O LORD helpe me vp. In y multitude of the sorowes that I had in my herte, thy comfortes haue refreshed my soule.

Wilt thou haue any thinge to do with the stole of wickednesse, which ymagineth myschefe in the lawe? They gather them together agaynst the soule of the righteous, & condemn the innocent bloude. But the LORD is my refuge, my God is the strength of my confidence. He shall recompence the their wickednesse, and destroyethem in their owne malice: yee the LORD our God shall destroyethem.

The XCIII. psalme.

Come, let vs prayse the LORD, let vs hertely reioyse in the strength of oure saluacion. Let vs come before his presence with thankesgynge, & shewe oure self glad in him wth psalmes. For the LORD is a greates God, and a greates kynge above all goddes. In his honde are all y corners of the earth, and the strength of the hilles is his also. The see is his, for he made it, and his hondes prepared the diuallode.

O come, let vs worshippe and bowe downe oute selues: Let vs knele before the LORD our maker. For he is oure God as for vs, we are the people of his pasture, and the shepe of his hōdes. Todaye yf ye wil heare his voyce, hardē not youre hertes, as whē ye prouoked in tyme of temptacion in the wilderness. Where y^r fathers tēpted me, proued me, and sawe my workes. XL. yeares longe was I grieved with that generacion, & sayde: they ener erre in their hertes, they verely haue not knowne my wayes. Therefore I sware vnto the in my wrath, that they shulde not enter in to my rest.

The XCV. psalme.

Synge vnto the LORD a new songe, synge vnto the LORD all the whole earth. Synge vnto y LORD, & prayse his name, betellynge of his saluacion from daye to daye. Declare his honoure amonge the heithē, and his wonders amonge all people. For y LORD is greates, and can not worthely be prayfed: he is more to be feared then all goddes. As for all y goddes of the heithē, they be but Idols, but it is the LORD that made the heauē.

Thankesgynge and worshippe are before him, power and honoure are in his Sanctuary. As crybe vnto the LORD (o ye kinredes of the heithen) as crybe vnto the LORD worshippe and strength. As crybe vnto the LORD the honoure of his name, bryn-

Tell it out amonge the heithē, that the LORD is kynge: and that it is he which hath made the rounde worlde so fast, that it can not be moued, and howe that he shall iudge the people righteously. Let the heauens reioyse, and let the earth be glad: let the sea make a noyse, yee & all that therein is. Let the felde be ioyfull and all that is in it, let all the trees of the wodd leape for ioye. Before the LORD, for he commeth: for he cometh to iudge the earth: yee with righteousnesse shall he iudge the worlde, and y people with his trueth.

The XCVI. psalme.

The LORD is kynge, the earth may be glad therof: yee the multitude of the Iles maie be glad therof. Cloudes and darcknesse are rounde aboute his righteousnesse and iudgment are the habitation of his seate. There goeth a fyre before him, to burne vp his enemies on every syde. His lightenynges geue shynne vnto the worlde, the earth feyth it & is afraied. The hilles melt like waxe at the presence of y LORD, at the presence of the LORD of the whole earth. The very heauens declare his righteousnes, & all people his glory. C founded be all they that worshippe ymagin, and delire in their Idols: worshippe him all y goddes. Sion heareth of it and reioyscheth: yee all y daughters of Iuda are glad because of thy iudgements, O LORD. For thou LORD art the most hyst over all the earth, thou art exalted farre above all goddes. O ye that lone the LORD, se that ye hate the thinge which is euill: the LORD preserveth the soules of his sayntes, he shall deliuer the from the honde of the vngodly. There is spronge vp a light for the righteous, and a ioyfull gladnesse for soch as be true herted.

Reioyse therfore in the LORD, ye righteous: and geue thankes for a remembraunce of his holynesse.

The XCVII. psalme.

Synge vnto the LORD a new songe, for he hath done maruelous thinges. With his owne right honde and with his holy arme hath he gotten the victory. Let the floodes clappe their hondes, and let all the hilles be ioyfull together. Before the LORD, for he is cometo iudge the earth. Yee with righteousnes shall he iudge the worlde, and the people with equite.

The XCVIII. psalme.

The LORD is kynge, be the people neuer so vnpatient: he syteth vpon the Cherubins, be the earth neuer so vnquyte. The LORD is greates in Sion, & hye above all people. O let men geue thankes vnto thy greates & wonderful name, for it is holy. The kynges power loneth wth iudgment, thou preparest equite, thou executest iudgment & righteousnes in Jacob. O magnifie the LORD our God, fall downe before his forte stole, for he is holy. Moses & Aaron amonge his priestes, Samuel amonge soch as call vps his name: these called vpon the LORD, & he herde the. He spake vnto the out of the cloudy piler, for they kepte his testimonies, & the lawe that he gaue them.

Thou herdest the (O LORD our God) thou forgavest the O God, & punishedst their own iniquities. O magnifie the LORD our God, and worshippe him vps his holy hill, for the LORD our God is holy.

The XCIX. psalme.

Be ioyfull in God (all ye lōdes) serue the LORD wth gladnes, come before his presence wth ioye. Who so pruely slaundereth his neghboure, him wil I destroye: Who so hath a proude lōt & an hye stomacke, I maye not a waye with him. Myne eyes shal lōt for soch as be faithfull in the lōde, y they maye dwell with me: and who so ledeeth a godly life, shal be my seruauit. There shall no disceatfull personne dwell in my house, he that telleth lyes shal not tary in my sight. I shal soone destroye all the vngodly of the lōde, that all wicked doers maye be roted out of the cite of the LORD.

The CI. psalme.

Hear my prayer (O LORD) and let my crye come vnto the. Hydenoth thy face from me in the tyme of my troubles: encline thine eares vnto me when I call, O heare me, and that righte soone. For my dayes are consumed awaye like smoke, & my bones are burnt vp as it were a fyre brande.

My herte is synned downe and wythered like grasse, so that I forget to eate my bried.

For the voyce of my grynge, my bone wil scarfe cleue from my flesh. I am become like a pellicane in the wilderness, and like an Owle in a broken wall. I wake, and ameuen as it were a sparrow sittinge alone vpon the house toppe. Myne enemies reuyle me all the daye longe, they laugh merof some, and are sworne together agaynst me. I eat ashes with my bried, and mengle my drynke with wepyng. And that because of y indignacion and wiath, for thou hast taken me vp, and cast me awaye. My dayes are gone like a shadowe, and I am wythered like grasse. But thou (O LORD) endurest for ever, and thy remembraunce thoroow out all generacions.

Arise therfore and haue mercy vpon Sion, for it is tyme to haue mercy vpon her, yee the tyme is come. And why? thy seruantes haue a lōt to hir stones, & it pitieth them to se her in the dust. The heithen shal feare: by name (O LORD) and all the kynges of the earth thy maiesty. For the LORD shal buyld vp Sion, and shal apeare in his glory. He turneth him vnto the prayer of the poore destitute, and despyseth not their dysyre. This shalbe written for those y come after, that the people which shalbe borne, maye prayse the LORD.

For he lōteth downe from his Sanctuary, out of the heauen doth the LORD beholde the earth.

The Psalter.

That he maye heare the mournynges of
such as be in captiuite, and deliuer the children of death. That they maie preach the name of the LORDE in Sion, and his worshipec at Jerusalem. When the people are gathered together, and the kyngdomes also to serue y^e LORDE. He hath brought dow nemy strength in my iourney, and shortened my dayes. Yet wil I saye: O my God, take me not awaye in y^e myddest of myne age:
as for thy yeaes, they endure thow out all generations. Thou LORDE in the begyn-nyng hast layed y^e foundacion of the earth, and the heauens are the workes of thy hon-
des. They shal perishe, but thou shalt endure: they all shall weye olde as both a garment, & as a vesture shalt thou chaunge the,
and they shalbe chaunged. But thou art the same, and thy yeaes shal not fayle.

The children of thy seruantes shal continue, & their sede shal prosper in y^e sight.

The CII. psalme of Dauid.

Rayse the LORDE (O my soule) & all that is within me prayse his holy name. Prayse the LORDE O my soule, & forget not all his benefites. Which forgeteth all thy synnes, and healeth all thy infirmities. Which sauerth thy life from destruc-cion, and crowmeth the with mercy & longynge kyndnesse. Which satisfieth thy desyre with good thynges, makynge the yonge and lusty as an eagle. The LORDE executeth righteousnesse and iudgment, for all them y^e suffre wronge. He shewed his wayes vnto Moses, and his workes vnto the children of Israel. The LORDE is full of compassion and mercy, longe sufferinge, and of greates goodnesse. He wil not allwaye be chydin-ge, nether wil he kepe his anger for ever.

He hath not dealt with vs after oure syn-nes, ner rewarded vs accordinge to oure wickednesse. For loke how hye the heauē is in comparison of the earth, so greates is his mercy also toward them that feare him.

Loke how wyde the east is from the west,
so farre hath he set oure synnes from vs.

As like as a father pitieth his owne children, even so is the LORDE mercifull vnto them that feare him. For he knoweth wher-of we be made, he remembereth that we are but dust. That a man in his tyme is but as is grasse, & flourisheth as a floure of the felde.

For as soone as the wynde goeth ouer it, it is gone, and the place therof knoweth it no mogels of his, ye that be mightie in strength, fil-of his, that do his pleasure. O speake gon of the LORDE all ye workes of his, in euery place of his dominion: prayse thou the LOR-DE, O my soule.

The CIII. psalme.

Rayse the LORDE O my soule: O LORDE my God, thou art become ceadinge glorious, thou art clothed with maiesty and honoure. Thou dost thy self with light, as it were wth a garment, thou spreddest out the heauen like a curtayn.

Thou voltest it aboue with waters, thou makest the cloudes thy charet, and goest vpon the wynges of the wynde. Thou makest thine angels spires, and thy ministres flammes of fyre. Thou hast layed y^e earth vpon hir foundacion, that it neuer moueth at any tyme. Thou courest it with the pelike as with a garment, so that the moun-tonde aboue the hilles. But at thy reble they fle, at the voyce of thy thonder they are afayed. (Then are the hilles sene alote, & the valleys beneth in their place which thou hast appoynted for the.) Thou hast set them their boundes, which they maye not passe, that they turne not agayne to count the earth. Thou canstest the welles to springe vp amonge the valleys, and the water runne amonge y^e hilles. That all the beas-tes of the felde maye haue drynke, & that the wylde asses maye quench their thyrste.

Aboue vpon the hilles haue the fowles of the ayre their habitation, and synge amonge the braunches. Thou waterest the hyles from aboue, the earth is fylled with y^e fr-tes of thy workes. Thou bringest forth grasse for the catell, and grene herbe for the seruyce of men. Thou bringest forth out of the earth: wyne to make glad y^e herte of ma-oyle to make him a chearfull countenance, & bried to strength mans herte. The trees of the LORDE are full of sappe, even the trees of Libanus which he hath planted. The re make the bydes their nestes, and the fyne trees are a dwellinge for the storkes. The hilles are a refuge for the wylde goates, and so are the stony rockes for y^e conyes. Thou reare after the praye, and set their meate at

get them awaye together, and lyethem down in their denues. Then goeth man forth to his worke, and to till his londe vntill the evenyng. O LORDE, how manifeste are thy workes, right wysely hast thou made the all: yee the earth is full of thy riches. So much greates and wyde see also, wherin are thynges crepinge innumerable, both small and greates beastes. There go the shippes sea, and there is that Leviathan, whom thou hast made, to cate his pastyme therein.
They wayte all vpon the, that thou mayest gather them meate in due season. Whē thou blast it them, they gather it: whē thou openest thine honde, they are fylled with good.
But when thou hydest thy face, they are fawfull: yf thou takest awaye their bryth, they dye, & are turned agayne to their dust.
Agayne, when thou lattest thy bryth go forth, they are made, and so thou renuest the face of the earth. The glorious magesty of the LORDE endureth for ever, and the LOR-DE shal dwell in his workes. The earth tremeth at the lode of him, he doth but touch y^e hilles and they smote. I will synge vnto the LORDE as long as I lyue, I wil pray-se my God whyle I haue my beinge. O that my wordes might please him, for my breis in the LORDE. As for synners, they shalbe consumed out of the earth, and the wylde shal come to an ende: but prayse thou the LORDE, O my soule. Halleluya.

The CIII. psalme.

Confessantes vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name: tell the people what thynges he hath done. O let your songes be of him: prayse him, and let your altynge be of all his wonderous wor-
kes. Give his holy name a good reporte, let their hertes reioyse that seke the LORDE.
Get the LORDE, and his strength, seke his face euermore. Remember the maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders and the iudgements of his mouth. O ye seed of Abraham his seruant, ye children of Jacob his chosen. He is the LORDE oure God, whose punishmentes are thorow out all the world. He is allwaye myndfull of his commaunt, and promysse that he made to a thousand generations.

The ciij. psalme. Ho. xxx.

See the covenante that he made wth Abraham, and the oath that he swore vnto Isaac. And apoynted the same vnto Jacob for a lawe, and to Israel for an everlastinge testament. Sayenge: vnto the wil I geue the londe of Canaan, the lode of youre heretage. When there was yet but a fewe of them, and they straungers therein. What tyme as they wente from one nacion to another, from one kyngdome to another. He suffred no man to hurte them, but reproveth even kynges for their sakes. Touch not myne anoynted, do my prophetes no harme.

Moreover he called for a deth vpon the lode, and destroyed all the prouysion of bried.

But he had sent a man before them, even Joseph which was solde to be a bondser-uaunt. They hurte his feet in the stockes, they yron pearced his herte. Vntill the tyme that his worde came, and till the worde of y^e LORDE had trieth him. Then sent the kin-ge and caused him be delynered, the prynce of the people bad let him go. He made him lorde of his house, & ruler of all his substance. That he might enfourme his prynces after his wil, and teach his Senatours wysdome. Israel also came in to Egipte, and Jacob was a straunger in the lode of Ham.

But he increased his people exceedingly,
and made them stronger then their enemies.

Whose herte turned, so that they hated his people, and dealt vntuly with his seruantes.
Then sent he Moses his seruant, and Aaron whom he had chosen. These dyd his tokens amonge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. He sent darcknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde. He turned their waters in to bloude, and slewe their fishe. Their londe brought forth frogges, yee enen in their kynges chambers. He spake the worde, & their came all maner of flies & life in all their quarters. He gaue them hale stones for rayne, and flammes of fyre in their lode. He sm-te their vynyards & fige trees, and destroyed the trees that were in their coastes. He spake y^e worde, and there came greshoppers & catirpillers innumerable. These ate up all the grasse in their lode, and deuoured the frutes of their groude. He smote all y^e first borne in their lode, even the chese of all their substance. He brought them forth wth syluer & golde, there was not one feble personne amonge their trybes. Egipte was glad of their departinge, for they were a fyled of the land.

He spied out a cloude to be a couerynge,
and fyre to geue light in the night season.

At their desyre, there came quales, and he filled them with the bled of heauē. He opened the rocke of stone, & the waters flowed out: so that ryuers ranne in the wilderness.

For why; he remembred his holy promyse which he had made vnto Abraham his seruant. Thus he brought forth his people with ioye, and his chosen with gladnesse.

And gaue them the lodes of the heithē, where they toke the labours of the people in possession. That they might kepe his statutes, and obserue his lawes. Halleluya.

The CV. psalme. Halleluya.

Gue thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever. Who can expresse y noble actes of the LORDE, or shewe forth all his prayse? Blessed are they that all waye kepe iudgment, and do righteuousnes. Remembre vs (O LORDE) accordinge to the fauour re that thou bearest vnto thy people: vs set vs w thy sayinge health. That we might see the pleasure of thy chosen, that we might reioyse in the gladnesse of thy people, and geue thanks with thine inheritaunce. We haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Oure fathers regarded not thy wonders in Egypte, they kepte not thy greate goodnesse in remembrance: but were disobedient at the see, eue at the reed see. Neuertheles, he helped the for his names sake, that he might make his power to be knowne. He rebuked the reed see, and it was dried vp: so he led the thow the depe as in a wilderness. Thus he saved them from the honde of the hater, & deliuered them from the honde of the enemye.

As for those y troubled them, the waters overwhelmed the, there was not one of the left. Then beleued they in his worde, and songe prayse vnto him. But within a why le they forgot his workes, & wolde not abyde his counsell. A lust came vpo them in the wilderness, so that they tempted God in the deserte. Yet he gaue them their desyre, and sent the ymough at their willes. They angered Moses in the tētes, and Aaron the saynt of the LORDE. So the earth opened & swallowed vp Dathan, and couered the congregaciō of Abiram. The fyre was kyndled in their company, the flame bent vpon the vngodly. They made a calfe in Horeb, and worshipped the molte ymage. Thus they turned his glory into the similitude of a calfe, y eareth haye. They forgot God their Saviour, which had done so greate thinges in Egypte. Wondrous workes in the lon de of Ham, and fearfull thinges in the see. So he sayde he wolde haue destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stonde before him y gapped to turne awaie his wrath full indignacion, lest he shulde destroye the.

Ree they thought scorne of y pleasaunce, and gaue no credence vnto his word. But murmured in their tentes, and hated not vnto the voyce of the LORDE.

Then lift he vp his honde agaynst them, to overthrowe them in the wilderness. He cast out their sede amonge the nations, & to scatter them in the londes. They ioyed themselves vnto Baal peor, and ate the fringes of the deed. Thus they provoked him vnto anger with their owne inuencion, and the plague was greate amonge them.

Then stode vp Phineas and executed iustice, & so the plague ceased. And that was counted vnto him for righteuousnes, amonge all posterities for evermore. They regarded him also at the waters of strife, so the Moses was punished for their sakes. Because they provoked his spere, and he rebuked them planely with his lippes. He destroyed they the heithen, as the LORDE commaunded them. But were mingled amonge the heithen, and lerned their workes.

In so moch that they worshipped the ymages, which turned to their owne decay.

Ree they offered their sonnes & their daughters vnto denels. And shed the innocē bloude of their sonnes and of their daughters, whom they offered vnto the ymages of Canaan, so that the londe was defiled w bloude. Thus were they stayned w their owne workes, and wente a whoringe w their owne inuencions. Therefore was the wrath of the LORDE kyndled agaynst the people, in so moch that he abhorred his owne inheritaunce. And gaue them out in to the honde of the heithē, and they hated them, were lordes ouer them. Their enemies oppressed the, and had them in subjection. Many a tyme dyd he desyre the, but they prouoked him with their owne inuencions, and were broughte downe for their wickednesse. Neuerthelesse whē he sawe the aduersitee, he herde their complaynte. He thought vpo his conuenaunt, and pitied the accordinge vnto the multitude of his mercies. Ree he made all those y had led the awaye captiue, to pitie them. Deluyte (O LORDE) oure Ged, & gather vs from amonge the heithen: that we maye geue thanks to thy holy name, & make oure boast of thy prayse. Blessed be the LORDE God of Israhel, he sheweth his people the power of his workes, that he maye geue them the heretage of the heithen. The workes of his hēdes are verite & iudgment, all his commaundementes are true. They stonde fast for ever & are done in truerh & requite. He sent redemption vnto his people, he hath commaunded his conuenaunt for ever, holy & reuerent is his name. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, & good understandinge haue all they that do theras in the prayse of it endureth for ever.

The CXI. psalme. Halleluya. Blessed is the man y feareth the LORDE, & hath greate delite in his commaundementes. His sede shall be mightie vpon earth, the generacion of the fute full shalbe blessed. Riches & plereousnes shalbe in his house, & his righteuousnes endureth for ever. Vnto the godly there arseth up light in the darcknesse: he is mercifull, longyng & righteous. Wel is him that is mercifull, & lendeth gladly, & pōdeth his wordes w discrecion. For he shal neuer be moved, the righteous shal be had in an euerlasting remembrance. He wil not be asayed for any euell trydnges, his heretage shal be fast, & beleneeth in y LORDE. His heretage shal be fast, he wil not shyncke, vntill he be his desyre vpon his enemies. He hath spoken abroad, & genē to the poore, his righteousnes remayneeth for ever, his home shal be exalted w honore. The vngodly shal seke to greue him: he shal gnash w his teeth, & consume awaye, & the desyre of the vngodly shal perish. The CXII. psal. Halleluya.

Raise the LORDE (O ye seruautes) O prayse the name of the LORDE. Blessed be the name of the LORDE fro this tyme forth for evermore. The LORDES name is worthy to be praysed, fro the fūge vpo of the Sonne vnto the goynge downe of the same. The LORDE is hye above all heithen, and his glory aboue the heathen. Who is like vnto the LORDE our God, y hath his dwellinge so hye, which humbleth himself, to beholde that is in heauen & earth. Which taketh vpon the symple of the dust, and lifeth the poore out of the myre. That he maye seth. mamon the prynces, euen amonge the prynces of the people. Which maketh the baren woman to kepe house, and to be a ioyfull mother of children. Halleluya.

The CXIII. psalme. When Israhel came out of Egypte, & the house of Jacob from amonge the strange people. Iuda was his Sanctuary, Israhel his dominion. The see sawe that, and fled, Jordan turned backe. The mountaynes slipped like rammes, & the litle hilles like yonge shepe. Salomons Proverbes.

These are the proverbes of Salomon the sonne of David kynge of Israel: to lerne wysdome nurtoure, vnderston-dinge, prudence, righteousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal come by more wysdome: and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstande a parable, and the interpretacion therof: the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speaches of the same.

The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome. But fooles despise wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

My sonne, heare thy fathers doctrine, and forsake not the lawe of y mother: for that shal bryn-ge grace vnto thy heade, and shal be thyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, come not vnto synners, yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for blonde, and lurke preuely for the innocēt wythout a cause: let us swallowe the vpon like y hell, let us deuoure the quicke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we finde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyle. Cast in thy lott among us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, re-frayne thy feete from their wayes. For their feete rūne to euill, and are haistie to shed blonde. But in dayes y net layed forth before the bydes eyes. See they the selues laye wayte one for another blonde, and one of the wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauyshe anothers life.

Wysdome crieth without, and putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before y congregacion in y open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow y cite, sayenge: O ye children, how longe wil ye loue chydishnesse: how longe wil y scorners delyte in scornynge, and y enmyes be enemies vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstande my wordes. Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my coun-cels haue ye despysed, and set my correccion at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in y destruccion, and mocke you, when y thin-geth that ye feare cometh vpon you: euen whē y thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in so-benly like a storme, and y misery like a tempest: yee whā trouble and heuynesse cometh vpon you. Then shal they call vpon me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And y because they hated knowlege, and receaved not y feare of y LORDE, but abhoyed my counsell, and despysed my correccion. Therefore shal they cate y frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counceles: for y turnynge awaye of y vnwyse shal slaye the, and y prosperity of fooles shal be their owne destruccion. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell safely, and haue ynough without eny feare of euill.

My sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my commaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye her-ten vnto wysdome, applie thine herte to vnderstandinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, and callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: The shal theu vnderstande y feare of the LORDE, and fynde y knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geneth wysdome, out of his mouth commeth knowlege and vnderstandinge. He preserueth y welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them y walke innocently: he kepeth them in y right path, and preserueth y waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstande righteousnesse, iudgment and equi-te, yee and euery good path. If wysdome entre in to thine herte, and y soule delyte in knowlege: then shal counsell preserue the,
and vnderstandinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be deliuered fro y euell waye, ges. From soch as leaue the hye strete, and

The III. Chapter.

My sonne, forget not my lawe, but se thyne hert kepe my commaundmentes. For they shal prologe thy dayes & yeares of thy lyfe, & brynge thy peace. Let mercy & faithfulness neuer go from thy bynde: theye about thy necke, & wyte them in the tables of thine herte. So shalt thou fynde fauour and good vnderstandinge in the sight of God and men. Put thy trust in the LORD with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordeine thy goynges. Be not wyse in thine owne conceite, but feare the LORD and departe from euill: so shal thy nauel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

Honoure the LORD with substance, & with firstlinges of all thine increase: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despise not the chastenynge of the LORD, neither saynte when thou art rebuked of him. For who the LORD loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet deliuereth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, & opeyneth vnderstandinge, for the gettyng of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, & the profite of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth then precious stoncs, & all thynges that thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, & vpon hir left hande is riches & hono.

Her wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

With wysdome hath the LORD layed the foundacion of the earth, & thorow vnderstandinge hath he stablished the heauens. Thorow his wysdome the depthes brake vp, & the clowdes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thynges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my counsell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, & grace vnto thy mouth.

Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, & thy fote shal not stembble. If thou sleepest, thou shalt not be a frayd, but shalt take thy rest & slepest sweetly. Thou needest not to be a frayd of eny sodane feare, neither for the violent rushing in of the vngodly, when it cometh.

The iiij. Chap.

For the LORD shal be besyde the, & kepe thy fote, & thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shalde haue it, for loner as thine hande is able to do it. Say not vnto thy neighbour: go thy waye & come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue thee when as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neighbour, feynge behouperth to dwell in rest by the. Strive not lightly wth eny man, where as he hath done thee no harme. Solowe not a wicked man, and chuse none of his wayes: for the LORD abhorreth the frowarde, but his secret is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORD is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous. As for the somefull, he shal laugh at to some, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue hono in possession, but shame is the promociō that foolis shal haue.

The III. Chap.

Eare O ye children the fatherly exortaciō, & take good hede, that ye may lerne wysdome. See I shal geue you a good rewarde, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. For when I myself was my fathers deare sonne, and tenderly beloued of my mother, he taught me also, sayenge: let thine heart receaue my wordes, kepe my commaundmentes, and then shalt lyue.

Get the wysdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not thy wordes of my mouth, & shal kepe them from thine. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chiefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyslyng to opeyn the vnderstandinge. Make moche of her, and she shal promote the: & yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto hono.

She shal make the a gracious heate, and garnish the with the crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that thy yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the the waye of wysdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So than yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse bynde the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. Take fast holde of doctryne, let her not go: kepe her, for she is thy life.

Come not in the path of the vngodly, and walke not in the waye of the wicked. Eschewe it, & go not therin: departe ashyd, & passe ouer by it. For they can not slepe excepte they haue first done some mysdeed.

Salomons Prouerbes.

Neuer take they eny rest, excepte they haue first done some harme. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drinke the wyne of robbery. The path of the righteous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighte & brighte vnto the perfecte daye. But the waye of the vngodly is as the darcknesse, wherein me fall, or they be awarre.

My sonne, marcke my wordes, and encline thine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that fynde the, and healeth vnto all their bodies. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life. Put awaye from the a frowarde mouth, and let the lippes of slaunder be farre from the. Let thine eyes beholde the thyng that is right, & let thine eye lyddes lōke straight before the. Pōdure the path of thy fete, so shal all thy waye be sure. Turne not asyde, neether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but witholdeth thy fete from euill.

The V. Chapter.

My sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, & bōdethine eare vnto my prouidence: yf thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nūrtoure.

For the lippes of an harlot are a droppynge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at the last she is as bitter as worme wood, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir stepes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir wayes: that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therfore (O my sonne) and departe not fro the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye thy doers of hir house. That thou geue not thine hono vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell.

That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, & that thy labours come not in a straunge house. See that thou moune not at the last, when thou hast spent thy body and goodes, and then saye: Alas, why hated I nūrtoure, why dyd my hert despise correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, & hearkened not vnto them that informed me? I am come almost in to all my fortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne sprynges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, & not straungers with the.

The vi. Chap. Fo. xxxix.

Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Kee: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For every mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORD, and he pōdereth all their goynges. The wickednesse of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greare foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The VI. Chapter.

My sonne, yf thou be suertie for thy neighbour, thou hast fastened thine hōde vnto another mā: yee thou art bofide with thine owne wordes, and taken wth thine owne speach. Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come in to thy neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, & intreate thy neighbour: let not thyne eyes slepe, neer thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo fro thy hono, & as a byrde fro the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Lemmer (thou slogarde) & cōsidre hir wayes, & lerne to be wyse.

She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, & gathereth hir foode together in harvest. How longe wilt thou slepe, thou slogish mā? Whā wilt thou arys: out of thy slepe? See slepe on still a litle, slōber a litle, sōdethine handes together yet a litle, that thou mayest slepe: so shal pouerte come vnto the as one yf traunyleth by the waye, & necessitye like a wapened man. A dissimblynge person, a wicked man goeth with a frowarde mouth: he wyndeth with his eyes, he tokeneth wth his fete, he poynteth wth his synners, he is euer ymagyninge myschefe & frowardnesse in his hert, & causeth discorde. Therfore shal his destrucciō come hastily vnto him, suddenly shal he be all tobroken, and not be healed.

There be syre thynges, which the LORD hateth, & the sūenthe he utterly abhorreth: A proude lōke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte yf goeth aboute wth wicked ymaginaciōs, fete that be swift in remynge to do myschefe, a false wytnesse yf bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers commaundmentes, & forsake not the lawe of thy mother. Put the vntogether in thine herte, and bynde the aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & yf when

Sal. 12. 0 thou awakest, thou mayest talke of the (For the commaundment is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chaffenyng & nurtoure is y waye of life) that they maye kepe the fro the enell woman, & from the flatteryng tonge of the harlot: y thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be take w hir saye lo kes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bried, but a married woman wil hunt for y pie cious life. Maye a man take fyre in his be some, and his clothes not be burnt? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so car goeth in to his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. Men do not utterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satisfie his soule, when he is hungerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes as much, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so conuitteth aduoutrie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruction. He getteth him self also shame & dishon^r, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wiath of the mā wil not be treated, no though thou woldest ofre him greate giftes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

The VII. Chapter.

Ent. 11. a. Nu. 15. d. A sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vpon my commaundmentes by the. Repe my commaundmentes & my lawe, euē as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fyngers, & wryte the in the table of thine herte. Saye vnto wysdome: thou art my sister, and call vnderston dinge thy kynswoman: that she maye kepe y fro y straunge womā, & fro y harlot which ge neth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thow the treclies, & be held the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye to ward the harlottes house in the twylight of of the euenyng, when it begane now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a dis ceatfull, waton & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in y house, now is she without, now i y stretes, & lurketh i euery cor ner) she caught y yonge mā, & yssed him & was not ashamed, saye ge: I had a vow to paye, & this daye I perfourme it. Therfore came I forth to mete the, that I might see thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckt my bed with couerings & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrrour, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of money with him, who can tell whā he cometh home? Thus with many swete wordes he ouercame him, and with hir flatteryng lip pes she wanne him.

Immediately he foloweth her, as it was an orelod to the slaughter (and like as it was to the stockes, where foolcs are punysshed) he longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darke like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life lyeth there vpon. Heare me now therfore (o my sonne) and marke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandie in hir wayes, & be not thou disceined in hir pathes. In many one hath she wounded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Her house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

The VIII. Chapter.

Quoth not wysdome crie: doth not vnderstondinge put forth hir voyce? Seendeth she not in the hye place in the stretes & wayes: doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of men) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto know ledge o ye ignorant, be wise in herte o ye foolcs. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate mat ters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that is right. For my throte shal be talkyng of f truth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are rightuous, there is no frowardnesse nor falsede therein. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstande, & righte to the that fynde knowlege. Re ceauue my doctrine therfore and not synne, & knowlege more then synne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, & all the thinges that thou castt desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

I wysdome haue my dwellyng w know ledge, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and y eschuyng of euell. As for pryde, disdain, an euell waye, & a moueth that speaketh wicked thiges, I utterly abhorre the. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstondinge, I haue strength.

Thow me, kynges reigne: thow me, pri ces make iust lawes. Thow me, lordes beate rule, and all iudges of y earth execute iudg ment. I am louyng vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are to me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is bet ter the golde & precious stone, & myne encrea semore worth then synne syluer. I walke in y waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudg ment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

The LORDE himself had me in possessio in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he began his workes aforetyme. I haue bene ordered fro euerlastige, & fro y begynnynge n euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes nor springes of water. Before the foundations of y mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. For when he made the hea uen, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordie: whā he hanged the cloudes abo ue: whā he fastened the sprynges of the de pe: whā he shutt the see within certayne boundes, that y waters shulde not go ouer their marches. When he layed the founda tions of the earth, I was with him, ordinge all thinges, deluyng daylie & reioysyng all waye before him. As for the rōnde cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioysfull, for my dely tis to be amōge the childre of men.

Therfore harken vnto me (o ye childre) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurtoure, be wise, and refuse it not. Blessed is y man that heareth me, watchyng daylie at my gates, & geuyng attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal opayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The IX. Chapter.

Wysdome hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seven pilers: she hath slaughterd, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crye vpon the hyest place of the cite: Who so is ignorant, let him come hither. And to the virgins she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bried, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. For sake ignorance, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstondinge.

Who so reproveth a scornefull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, slayneth himself.

Reproue not a scomer, lest he owe the e uell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil louethe. Geue a discrete man but an occa sion, & he wil be the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderston dinge. For thow me y dayes shal be pro longed, and the yeares of thy life shal be ma ny. If thou be wise, y wysdome shal do y selfe good: but yf thou thynkest scorne ther of, it shal be thine owne harme. A foolish restless woman, full of wordes, and sedychone as hath no knowlege, fytteth in the dores of hir house vpon a stole aboute in the cite, to call soch as go by and walke straight in their wayes. Who so is ignorant (sayeth she) let him come hither, and to the vngodly she sayeth: stollen waters are swete, & the bried that is pieuely eaten, hath a good taste.

But they consider not that death is there, and that hir gastes go downe to hell.

The X. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

Wysse some maketh a glad father, but an vnderstandinge sonne is the heuynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wic edly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuous nesse deluyreth from death. The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth y vngodly fro his de fyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quyk laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Semmer, is wyse: but he that is slothful in harvest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louyng and fauor able is the face of the rightuous, but y fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and piumptuous. The remonall of the iust shal haue a good repote, but the name of the vngodly shal stynte. A wyse man wil recea ue warnyng, but a foole wil sooner be shryt ten in the face. He that leadech an inno cent life, walketh surely: but who so goeth a wōge waye, shal be knowne. He y wynteth with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shal be beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but y mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vpon strife, but loue conereth y multitude of synnes.

In y lippes of him y hath vnderstondinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but y rebbe bels geth to y backe of y foolish. Wyse mā laye vpon knowlege, but y mouth of y foolish is nye destruction. The rich mā goodes are his strō ge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The righteous labourer to do good, but the vngodly useth his increase vnto synne.

C To take hede vnto y chastenynge of nurture, is y waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wydge. Dissimblynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slander, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysst of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the righteous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for carefull traualle, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly & maketh but a spoote of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to beware of sych.

D The thinge that the vngodly are afrayed of, shal come vpon them, but the righteous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer & is nomore seene, but the righteous remaineth sure for euer. As vyner is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto y eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of y LORDE maketh a longe life, but y yeares of y vngodly shal be shortened. The patient abydinge of the righteous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a coraige vnto y godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The righteous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, but y vngodly shal not remaine in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the righteous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The XII. Chapter.

A False balaunce is an abhominacion vnto the LORDE, but a true weighe pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealynge of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaichfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destruccion. Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse deliuereth frō death. The rightuousnes of y innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The rightuousnesse of the iust shal deliuer them, but the despyers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynesse. When an vngodly man dyeth, his hope is gone, the confidence of riches shal perish. The righteous shalbe deliuered out of trouble, & the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thow y mouth of y dyssembler is his neighbour destroyed, but thow knowledge shal the iust be deliuered. Who is goeth well with the righteous, the citie is merry: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealch, the cite prospereth: but when the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bringeth vps slander of his neighbour, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. A dyssemblynge person wil discover preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealch. He that is suertie for a straunger, hurteyth himself: but he that medleth not with suertieshippe, is sure. A gracious woman manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. He hath a gentle liberall stomacke, is mercifull, but who so hurteyth his neighbour, is a tyrant.

The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuousnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bringeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bringeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fawned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndeysed. It shal not helpe y wicked, though they laye all their bondes togeather, but the seide of the righteous shalbe pursued. A fayre woman without discretemners, is like a ryng of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust labore for peace and tranquylite, but the vngodly for dysquietnesse.

Some man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but y nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is in pouerte. He that is lyberall in geuynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vps his come, shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessinge shal lichte vpon his head that selleth it. He that labourerth for honesty fyndeth his desyre: but who so seeketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall, but y righteous shal flourish as the grene leaf.

Who so maketh dysquietnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heritage, and the foole shal be seruant to the wyse.

The frute of the righteous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wynteth mens soules. If y righteous be recōpensed vps earth, how moch more the vngodly & y synners

The XII. Chapter.

Who so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hateth to be reformed, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE, but y wicked wyl he condempne. A man can not endure in vngodlynesse, but y roce of y righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir husbonde: but she that behaueth herself vnonestly, is a coruption in his bones. The thoughtes of y righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye waye for bloude, but the mouth of y righteous wil deliuer them. O euer thou canst turne the abouce, the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde. A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despyed. A simple man which labourerth and workerth, is better thane that is gorgeous and wanteth bried.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his carrell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. He that eiliet his lōde, shal haue plenteuousnesse of bried: but he y foloweth ydylnes, is a very foo'e. The desyre of y vngodly hungeth after myschefe, but the roce of the righteous bringeth forth frute. The wicked fall in to the snare thow y malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of perrell. Eueri man shal enioye good accorde vnto the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his handes shal he be rewarded. Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be colicled. A foole vttereth his wiath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgoeth wronge. A iust man will tell the truth, & sheweth the thinge y is right: but a false witness disceaueth. A slanderous personne picketh like a swerde, but a wyse mans tongue is wholesome. A true mouth is euer content, but a dyssemblinge toge is soone chaunged. They that ymagin euell in their mynde, wil disceane: but the counsellors of peace shal haue ioye folowynge the. There shal no mysfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. The LORDE abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that labour for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Henry nesse disceateth y herte of man, but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberall vnto his neighbour, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceane them selues. A disceatfull man shal fynde no vantage, but he that is content wth that he hath, is more worth the golde. In the waye of rightousnesse there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The XIII. Chapter.

A Wyse sonne wyl receaue his fathers warnynge, but he y is scornfull, wyl not heare when he is reprimed. A good mā shal enioye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that keperth his mouth, keperth his life: but who so speaketh vnaduyced, synneth harme. The slogarde wolde sayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligent shal haue plenty. A righteous man abbeueth lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Rightousnesse keperth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse shal ouerthrowe the synner.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge: agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes eueri man deliuereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reprimed. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull, but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysment, there is wysdome. Hastely gattē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dyfferred, greueth y herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyeth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the cōmaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstōdinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despyers. A wyse man doeth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messenger bringeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitor is wholesome. He that chyneth come to be reformed, cometh to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honoure. When a desyre is brought to passe, it deliuereth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschueth euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a company of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschese foloweth vpon synners, but the righteous shal haue a good reward. Which their childrens children shal haue in possessio, for the riches of the synner is layed vp for y inst. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the felbes of the poore, z shalbe increased out of measure. He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, hol deth him euer in nurture. The righteous eateth, and is satisfied, but y bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

The XIII. Chapter.

Wyse womā vpholdeth hir house, but a foolish wife plucketh it downe.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: z regardeth not him that abhorreth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boasting of lordshipe, but y lippes of y wyse wil be warre of soch. Where no oren are, there the crybb is empty: but where the oren laboure, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scornfull body seteth wysdome, z syn deth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstonde. Se y thou medle not with a foole, z do as though thou haddest no knowlege. The wysdome of him that hath vnderstandinge is, to take he de vnto his waye, but the foolishnesse of the vnywyse disceaueth. Fooles make but a sporte of synne, but there is favourable loue amō ge the righteous. The herte of him that hath vnderstandinge wil nether dispare for eny sorrow, ner beto presumptuous for eny so dane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouerthrowne, but the tabernacles of y righteous shal floureshe. There is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof le deth vnto death. The herte is sorowfull euen in laughter, and the ende of mych is he wyne. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignorant body beleneth all thinges, but who so hath vnder stondinge, loketh well to his goings. A wyse man, feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpatient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The ignorant haue foolishnes in possessio, but the wyse are crowned with knowlege.

The euell shal bowe them selues before y

good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the res of the righteous. The poore is ha cuen of his owne neighbours, but the rich hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neghbo, doth amysse: but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that yn gin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpo good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Dylig labo bryngeth riches, but where many vne wordes are, truly there is scarcenes.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse belyuereth so les, but a liar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto he he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the fume of death. The increase and prosperite of the cemonis is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusio of the prynce. Patience is a token of wisdom, but wrath and haustie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A merry herte is the lust of the body, but rancoure consumeth away the bones. He that doth a poore man wronge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is a frayd of euery path, but the righteous hath a good hope vnto death. Wysdome resteth in the hart of him that hath vnderstandinge, and he wil teach them that are vnlerned. Righteous nes secreteh vp the people, but wickednes bryngeth folke to destruccio. A disau seruant is a pleasure vnto y kyng, but y is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The XV. Chapter.

Softe aswere puttech downe displea sure, but frowarde wordes prouoketh vnto anger. A wyse tonge commeth deth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbereth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in every place, boch vpon good and badd. A wholesome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a lye ten mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correecion, but he y taketh he dwan he is reprobued, shal haue y more vnderstandinge.

In the house of the righteous are grate riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysorde. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but y herte of the foolish doth not so. The LORDE abhorreth y sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominacio of LORDE, but who so foloweth righteousnes, him he loneth.

He that forsaketh y right strete, shalbe sore punysshed: z who so hateth correecion, falleth in to death. The LORDE shal payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men.

The XVI. Chapter.

The feare of y LORDE is y right scyz ce of wysdome, and lowlynes goeth before hond. A man maye well put

y tonge cometh of y LORDE. A mā thin keth all his wayes to be clen, but it is y LOR DE y fashioneth y myndes. Commytte thy woites vnto y LORDE, and loke what thou deuysesh, it shal prospere. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne sake, yet z when he tepeh y vngodly for y daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all presumptuous z proude hertes, there maye nether strength ner power escape. With louynge mercy z faithfulness synners be forgiven, and who so feareth y LORDE eschueth euell. When a mans wayes please y LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle chinge w righteousness, the greater rentes wrongeously gotten. A mā denyseth a waye in his herte, but it is y LOR DE y ordreth his goings. When y prophe cy is in y lippes of y kyng, his mouth shal not go widge in iudgment. A true measu re z a true balasce are y LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a greate abhominacio when kynges are wycked, for a kynges seate shulde be holden vpo righteousness.

Righteous lippes are pleasaunt vnto kynges, and they lone him y speaketh y truthe.

The kynges displeasure is a messaunger of death, but a wyse man wyl pacifie him.

The cherefull countenance of y kyng is life, and his louynge sand is as the enemyng dewe. To haue wysdome in possession is better then golde, and to get vnderstondyn ge, is more worth then syluer. The path of y righteous eschueth euell, z who so loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne soule.

Presumptuousnes goeth before destru cion, and after a proude stomake there fol loweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde w the lowly, then to deuoyde y spoyle w y proude. He y handleth a matter wyse ly, opteyneth good: z blessed is he, y putteh his trust in y LORDE. Who so hath a wy se vnderstandinge, is called to counsell: but he y can speake saye, getteth more riches.

Vnderstandinge is a well of life vnto him y hath it, as for y chastenyng of fooles, it is but foolishnesse. The herte of the wyse enfourmeth his mouth, and amendeth y doe tryne in his lippes.

Saye wordes are an honycombe, a refres hinge of y mynde, z health of y bones.

There is a waye y men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeh vnto death. A troublous soule disquyeteth hir selfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly personne stereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whore burnyng fyre.

Salomons Proverbes

A frowarde body causeth strife, and he is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh denvision amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neghbō, & ledeyth him & waye is not good.

He that wyndeth his eyes, ymagineth myschefe: and he that byteth his lippes, wyl do some harme. Age is a crowne of worshippe, yf it be founde in the waye of righteousnes.

A pacient man is better then one that is strōge: and he that can rule himselfe, is more worth then he that wyrmeth a cite. The lottes are cast in to the lappe, but their fall stōdeth in the LORDE.

The XVII. Chapter.

Better is a drye moysell to quyetnesse, then a full house and many farr catell to stryfe. A discrete seruāt shal haue more rule then the sonnes & haue no wysdome, and shal haue like heretage to the bichren. Like as syluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the founace, even so doth the LORDE proue the herres. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, & a dyssemblynge person geueth eare to a disceatfull tēge. Who so laugheth & poore to scorne, blasphemeth his maker: and he that is glad of another mans hurte, shal not be unpunished. Childers children are a worshippe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the hond of the children. An eloquent speech becometh not a foole, a dyssimblinge mouth also besimeth not a pryncce.

Liberalite is a precious stone vnto him that hath it, for where so euer he becometh, he prospereth. Who so couereth another mans offence, seeketh loue: but he that discloseth the faulte, setteth frendes at variannce. One reprofe only doth more good to him that hath vnderstōdinge, then an C. stripes vnto a foole. A sedicious person seeketh myschefe, but a cruell tressaunger shal be sent agaynst him. It were better to come agaynst a she were robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynst a foole in his foolishnes. Who so rewardeth euell for good, the plage shal not departe frō his house. He that soweth discorde & strife, is like one that dyggeth vp a water broke: but an open enemy is like the water that breaketh out & reneith abrode. The LORDE hateth as well him that iustifieth & vngodly, as him that condemneth the innocent. What helpeth it to geue a foole money in his hōde, where as he hath no mynde to bye wysdome? He is a frende that all waye loneth, and in aduersite a man shal knowe who is his brother. Who so promisseth by the hande, & is furtie for another, he is a foole. He that loneth strife, delyteth in synne: & who so setteth his doie to bye, seeketh after a fall. Who so hath a frowarde herte, can neeth no good: and he that hath an outworn tonge, shal fall in to myschefe. A wicked body bryngeth himselfe in to sorowe, and father of a foole can haue no ioye. A herte maketh a lusty age, but a sorrowfull de dryeth vp & benes. The vngodly taketh gistes out of the hōsme, to wastethem of iudgment. Wyse dome shyneth in the face of him that hath vnderstōdinge, but the foolles wandreth thorow out all lōdes. A discrete senne is a grese vnto his father, & heynesse vnto his mother & bare him. A pynnysh & innocent, and to synne & pryncce geue true iudgment, are both euell. He that is and discrete, & tempereth his wordes, he is a mā of vnderstōdinge, & maketh of his spere. A very foole (when he deth his tonge) is counted wyse, and vnderstōdinge, when he shuteth his lippe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Who so hath pleasure to sowe vnde, picketh a quarell in euery thing. A foole hath no delyte in vnderstōdinge, but only in those thinges which heere reioyseth. Where vngodlynes is, there is also disdayne: & so there foloweth shame & dishonour. The wordes of a mā are like depe waters, and the well of wisdom is like a full streame. It is not good regard to persone of the vngodly, or to backe & righteons in iudgment. A foolles pes are euer brawlinge, and his mouth vnto batayll. A foolles mouth is his owne destruccion, and his lippes are a snare for his owne scule. The wordes of a slouthfull are very wofuldes, and go thorow the ynnest partes of the body. Who is slouthfull and slacke in his labō, is a brother of him that is a waister. The name of the LORDE is a stronge castell, & righteous synne maketh it, and shal be saued. But a rich mā geueth are his stronge holde, yee he taketh them an hye wall reide aboute him. A frende cometh destruccions, and hond after leueth. He that geueth sentence in a matter before heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be condemned. A good stomacke dryneth awaye a disease, but when a spere is vexed, when abyde it? A wyse herte labourerth for the lege, and a prudent eare setteth vnderstōdinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to hond worshippe, & setteth him amonge great men. The righteous accuseth himselfe first of all yf his neghbō come, he shal fynde him. He that pacifieth & variannce, & parteth & migh asunder. The vnite of brethren is stronge

then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satiffied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that loneth it, shal enioye the frute therof. Who so syndeth a wife syndeth a good chynge, & receaiveth an wholsome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth nightly, but the riche geueth a rough answer. A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frendshipe, and sticketh faster vnto him than a brother.

The XIX. Chapter.

Better is the peccie that lyeth gably, then the blasphemour that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fore, stumblith hastily. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, & then is his herte impatient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsake of his owne frendes. A falsenynesse shal not remayne unpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hiteth vpo grete men, & euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his birthrem yee his owne frendes forsake him, & he that geueth credence vnto wordes, greeteth nocht with him: he that is wyse, loneth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstōdinge, shal prosper. A falsenynesse shal not remayne unpunished, & he that speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becometh not a foole, moch more vnseluely is it, a bonde man to haue & rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, & it is his hond to let some fautes passe.

The kynges disfaund is like & roaringe of a lyō, but his frendshipe is like the dewe vpo & grass. An vndiscrete sonne is & heynesse of his father, & a brawlynge wife is like the topp of an house, where thorow it is euer diappynge. House & riches maye a mā haue by & heretage of his elders, but a discrete woman is the giste of the LORDE. Slouthfulness bryngeth slepe, & an ydell soule shal suffer hōger. Who so kepeth the comāndement, keperth his owne soule: but he that regardeth not his waye, shal dye. He that hath pitie vpon the poore, ledeyth vnto the LORDE: & loke what he layeth out, it shalbe payed him agayne. Chastite & some whyle there is hope, but let not & soule be moued to slaye hi. For grete wrath bryngeth harme, therfore let him go, and so mayest thou teach him more nurture.

geue eare vnto good counsell, & be content to be reformed, that thou mayest bewyse here after. There are many deuices in a mā's herte, neuertheles the counsell of the LORDE shal stōde. It is a mans worshippe to do good, & better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler. The feare of the LORDE preseruethe the life, yee it geueth plētousnes, without the visita- cion of any plage. A slouthfull body shuteth his honde in to his bosome, so that he can not put it to his mouth. If thou synnest a scornful personne, the ignorant shal take better hede: & yf thou reprouest one that hath vnderstōdinge, he wil be & wyser. He that hurteyth his father or shuteth out his mother, is a shamefull & an vnworthy sonne. My sonne, heare nomore the doctrine that leadeyth the awaye from the wordes of vnderstōdinge.

A falsenynesse laugheth iudgment to scorn, & the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wisdom. Punyshmentes are ordened for the scomefull, and stripes for foolles backes.

The XX. Chapter.

Wine is a voluptuous thinge, & drōkennes causeth sedicion: who so belyteth heerin, shal neuer be wyse. The kyng ought to be feared as the roaringe of a lyō, who so prouoketh him vnto anger, offendeth agaynst his owne soule. It is a mans honoure to kepe himselfe from strife, but they that haue pleasure in brawlinge, are foolles eueryone. A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therfore shal he go a begginge in sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstōdinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledeyth a godly and an innocent life, happie shal his children be, whom he lea- ueth behynde him.

A kyng that setteth in iudgment, and lo- keth well aboute him, dryneth awaye all euell. Who can saye: my herte is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his wordes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of the eye, the LORDE hath made the both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto pouer- te: but open thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, it is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

A mouth of understanding is more worth then golde, many precious stones, and costly Jewels. Take his garment that is suretie for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for the weaker mans sake. Every man liketh the bread that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thow counsell the thinges that men deuise go forward: with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Noble not with him that bewrayeth secrettes, and is a slanderer, and disceaueth with his lippes.
Who so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of dark-nesse. The heretage that commeth to hasty-ly at the first, shal not be praysed at the en-
de. Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, and he shal defende thee. The LORDE abhorreth two ma-ners of weightes, and a false balace is an euell thinge. The LORDE ordreth euery mans goinges, for what is he, that vnderstandeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blaspheme that which is holy, and then to go aboute with vowes. A wyse kynge destro-yeth the vngodly, and bringeth the whele euer them. The lanterne of the LORDE is the bryght-nes of man, and goeth thorow all the inward par-tes of the body. Mercy and faithfulness preserue the kynge, and with louynge kyndnes his seate is holden vp. The strength of yonge men is their worshipec, and a gray heade, is an honour vnto the aged. Woundes dryue awaye euell, and so do stripes the inward partes of the body. The XXI. Chapter.

The kynge's heart is in the hande of the LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer he wyll. Every man thinketh his owne wa-ye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth the heretes. To do rightuousnesse and iudgement is more acceptable to the LORDE then sacrifice.

A presumptuous lorde, a proude stemacke, and the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuises of one that is diligent, bringe plan-teousnes: but he that is madrysed, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches with disceatfulness of his tongue, he is a foole, and like vnto them that seeketh their owne death.

The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruction, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the forward are strange, but the workes of him that is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder the house toppe, then with a braulinge woman in a wyde house.

The soule of the vngodly wyssheth euell, and hath no pitie vpon his neghbour.

When the scoonesull is punished, the ignorant take the better hede: and when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vnderstandinge. The righteous enformeth the house of the vngodly, but the vngodly goon still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the cryng of the poore, he shal crie himself and not be heard. A preuie reward pacifieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stillerth furiousnesse.

The iust deliuereth in doyng the thyng that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhorre the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remaine in the congregacion of the deed. He that hath pleasure in banquettes, shal be a poore man.
Who so deliuereth in wyne and delicacies, shal not be riche. The vngodly shal be gilty for the righteous, and the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernes, then with a chydng and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greate treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spar-deth vp all. Who so foloweth righte-nesse and mercy, fyndeth both life, righte-nesse and honour. A wyse man wynneth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength they trust in, he bringeth it downe. Who so keepeth his mouth and his tongue, the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He that is prou-de and presumptuous, is called a scoonesull, which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull his owne death, for his handes wyll not labore.

He coueteth and desyret all the daye longe, but the righteous is allwaye geyng kepe nothinge backe. The sacrifice of the vngodly is abheminacion, for they offer the thinge that is gotten with wickednes. A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he that wil be constant to heare, shal allwaye haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth with ly, but the iust resourmeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, there is no vnderstandinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst the daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth the victory.

The XXII. Chapter.

Good name is more worth then grete riches, and louynge fauour is better then syluer and golde. Whether rich or poore do mete vs, it commeth all of God. A wyse man seeth the plage and deth himself, but the foolish go on still and are punished. The ende of lordes is the scare of God, is riches, honour, prosperite and health. Speares and snares are in the waye of the forward, but he that wil kepe his soule, let him be slowe. If thou reachest a childe in his youth what waye he shulde go, he shal not leave it when he is olde. The rich ruleth the poore, and the borrower is seruaunt to the lender. He that loveth wickednesse, shal reape sowe, and the rodde of his plage shal destroye him. A louynge eye shalbe blessed, for he getteth of his bried vnto the poore. Cast out the scoonesull man, and so shal scrise go out with him, yee variacion and slander shal cease.

Who so deliuereth to be of a cleane herte and of gracious lippes, the kynge shal be his frende.
The eyes of the LORDE preserve knowledge, but as for the wordes of the despyteful, he bringeth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyde with me, I might be slayned in the streete. The mouth of an harlot is a depe pytt, wherein he falleth that the LORDE is angrie withall. Foolishnes sticketh in the herte of the lad, but the rodde of correccion driueth it awaye. Who so doth a poore man wronge to increase his owne riches, geueth (comely)

unto the rich, and at the last commeth to pouerth himself. My sonne, lorne downe thine eare, and hearken vnto the wordes of wysdome, applye thy mynde vnto my doctrine: for it is a pleasant thinge yf thou kepest in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allwaye put thy trust in the LORDE.
Hauent I warned thee very oft with counsell and lerninge: I might shewe thee the treuth and that thou to the verite nighest answeresthem: I laye eny thinge agaynst thee? Seest thou robbe not the poore because he is weak, and oppresse not the simple in iudgement: for the LORDE himselfe wil defende their cause, and do violence vnto them that haue used violence.

Make no frendshipe with an antique wyllfull man, and kepe no company with the furious: lest thou lerne his wayes, and receaue hurt vnto thy soule. Be not thou one of them that bynde the hande vnto the pryemyse, and are suretie for deth: for yf thou hast nothinge to paye, they shal cast awaye thy bedd from vnder thee.

Thou shalt not remeue the lande marcke, which thy forefathers haue sett. Seest thou not, they which be diligent in their busines stande before the kynge, and not amonge the simple people?

The XXIII. Chapter

When thou syttest at the table to ea-te with a lorde, ordre thy selfe maner-ly with the thinges that are set before thee.
Measure thine appetite: and yf thou wilt rule thine owne selfe, thou shalt not euer grede of his meate, for meate begyleth and disceaueth.

Take not our greate trauaile and labore to be riche, beware of such a purpose. Why wilt thou see thine eye vpon the thinge, which suddenly vanissheth awaye? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight like an eagle into the ayre. Eate not thou with the enuyous, and desyre not his meate, for he hath a marvelous herte. He sayeth vnto thee: eate and drynke, where as his herte is not with thee. See the morsels that thou hast eaten shal thou perbreake, and lese those sweete wor-des. Tel nothinge in to the eares of a foole, for he wil despyse the wysdome of thy wor-
des. Remoue not the olde lande marke, and come not within the felde of the fatherlesse: for he that deliuereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the. Applye thine herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowledge. Witholde not correccion from the childe, for yf thou bearest him the rodde, he shal not dye thereof. Thou syn-nest him with the rodde, but thou deliuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf thy herte recea-ue wysdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee my reynes shal be very glad, yf thy lippes speake the thinge that is right. Let not thine herte be gealous to folowe synners, but kepe thee still in the scare of the LORDE all the daye longe:
for the ende is not yet come, and thy patient aboyng shal not be in vayne. My sonne, weare thee thy wyse, so shal thine herte prospere in the waye. Kepe no company with wyne bebers and ryotous eaters of fleshy: for such as be dronke and ryotous, shal come to pouerth, and he that is geuen to much slepe, shal go to a ragged cote. Gene care vnto thy father that leueth thee, and despyse not thy mother when she is olde. Labore to get the treuth: sell not awaye wysdome, neyther vnderstandinge for a righteous father is marne-lous glad of a wyse sonne, and deliuereth him so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare thee, shal reioyse. My sonne, geue me thy herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. For an whole is a depe pytt, and an harlot is a narrow pytt. She lur-keth like a thefe, and those that be not aware she buygeth vnto her. Where is woe? where is sorrow? where is strife? where is brawlynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seeke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed it is, and what a cold it getteth in the glasse.

It goeth downe softly, but at the last it by-th

teth like a serpent, and styngeth as an adder. So shal thine eyes lōte vnto straunge women, & thine herte shal muse vpon frowarde chinges. See thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in thy myddest of thy see, or vpo thy troppe of the mast. They wounded me (shalt thou saie) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. When I am wel wakened, I wil go to thy daynte agayne.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Not thou gelous ouer wicked men, & desyre not thou to be amonge them. For their herte ymagineth to do hurte, & their lippes talke of myschese. Thow wylsome an house shal be buylded, & vnderstandinge it shal be set vp. Thow discrecion shal & chābers be fylled wth all costly & pleasunt riches. A wysle mā is strōge, yee a mā of vnderstōdinge is better, thē he is mightie of strēgth. For with discrecion must warres be takē in hande, and where as are many & can geue counsell, there is victory. Wysdome is an hie chinge, yee cūe to thy foole, for he darre not open his mouth in fgate. He & ymagineth myschese, maye wel be called an vngacious personne. The thought of thy foolish is synne, & thy seemefull is an abhominacion vnto me. If thou be ouersene & negligēt in tyme of nede, thē is thy strēgth but small. Deluyeth thē & go vn to death, & areled a waie to be slaine, & be not negligēt therin. If thou wilt saie: I knewe not of it. Thyngest thou & he which made thy hertes, doth not cōsidre it? & he which regardeth thy soule, saith it not: Shal not he recōpence every man acordinge to his workes? My sonne, then carest thou & thy swete hony cōbe, because it is good & swete in thy mouth. When so shal thy knowledge of wysdome be vnto thy soule, as soone as thou hast gotten it. And there is good hope, yee thy hope shal not be in vayne. Laye no pryuy waite wickedly vpon thy house of thy righteous, & disquiete not his restinge place. For a iust mā falleth ten tymes, & ryseth vp agayne, but thy vngodly fall in to wickednes. Reioyce not thou at thy fall of thine enemy, and let not thine herte be glad when he stōmbleth.

Let thy LORDE (when he seyth it) be angrie, & turne his wrath from him vnto the. Let not thy wrath & gelousy moue thee, to foolew thy wicked and vngodly. And why? thy wicked hath nothinge to hope for, & thy candle of the vngodly shal be put out. My sonne, feare thou thy LORDE & thy kinge, & kepe no cōpany wth thy slaunders: for their destruction shal come suddenly, & who knoweth thy fall of the both?

These are also thy saliges of thy wyse.

The xxv. Chap.

It is not good, to haue respect of any personne in iudgment. He & saith to thy vngodly: thou art righteous, him shal the people curse, yee & cōmōd shal abhorre him. But they & rebuke thy vngodly shal be cōmēded, & a riche blessinge shal come vpo the. & he & keth him self to be well loued, that geueth good answer. First make vp thy worke & then out, & loke well vnto thy which thou hast in thy felde, & thē buylde thine house. Beware false wytnesse agaynst thy neghbō, & hurt him not wth thy lippes. Saye not: I wil haue him, euē as he hath deale wth me, & wil reme de every mā acordinge to his dedes. Iure by thy felde of thy slouthfull, & by thy vngodly of the foolish mā. And lo, it was all cōnered wth nettles, & stode full of thistles, & stone wall was broke downe. This I saw, & cōsidered it wel: I loked vpo it, & toke it in a warnyng. See slepe on still a litle, slē a litle, f. lde thine hōdes together yet a litle, so shal pouerte come vnto the as one & thy waylēt by thy waye, & necessity like a rapned man.

The XXV. Chapter.

These also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias king of Iuda gathered together. It is the hond of God to kepe a thinge secret, & the kinges hond is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, & earth is depe, and thy kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take thy dresse from thy syluer, & there shal be a cleane vessel of. Take awaye vngodlinesse fro thy thynges: his seate shal be stablised wth righteousness. Put not forth thy self in thy presence of thyng, & please not in to thy place of grea tē. Better it is & it be sayde vnto thy: come hither, then thou to be set downe in thy place of thy pryncce, when thou seyst wth thine eyes. Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre thy self so at thy last, & thy neghbō put thy to shame. Handle thine secret wth thy neghbō himself, & discover not another mans secret: lest when men heare of it, it turne to thy dishonōr, & lest thine euill me do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe.

The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden chayne and a Jewell of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the harnest, so is a faithfull messangere to him that sent him, & refresheth his masters mynd.

Who so maketh grea tē boastes & geueth nothinge, is like cloude & wynde without rayne. With patience maye a pryncce be pacified, & wth a soft tonge maye rigorousnes be broke. If thou findest hony, eate so much as is sufficient for thy: lest thou be ouerfull, & thou breake it out agayne. With thyne & thou thy neghbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neghboure, he is a vespere, a swearde & a sharpe arrowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten roth and a slippery foote. Who so smyth a sonnet to a wicked herte, clotheth his ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalker. If thine enemye hunger, feed him: yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shal thou heape coales of fyre vpo his head, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a backbiter longe. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, then to be a brawlyng woman in a wyde house. A good repute out of a fatte countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a springe & is destroyed. Like as it is not good to eate to moch hony, euen so he that wyl search out thy thynges, it shal be to heay for him. He that can not rule himself, is like a cite, which is broken downe, and hath no walles.

The XXVI. Chapter.

Like as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in harvest: euen so is worshipe vnseemly for a foole. Like as thy byde and the swalowe take their flight and se here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not lichte vpon a man. Vnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a bydle, and a rodde to the foolles backe. Geue not the foole an answer a fter his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make thy foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceite. He is lame of his feet, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteh eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thig to haue legges & yet to halce, euē so is a parable in thy foolles mouth. He & setteth a foole in hye dignite, & is euē as yf a mandyd cast a precious stone vpo thy galous. A parable in a foolles mouth, is like a thorne & pricketh a droncken man in thy hande. A man of experience discerneth all thynges well, but who so heareth a foole, heareth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne a fresh. If thou seyst a man & is wyse in his owne conceite, there is more hope in a foole then in hi. The slouthfull sayeth hither is a koparde in thy waye, and a lyon in thy myddest

of the stretes. Like as the dove turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull wester himself in his bedde. The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh himself wyser, then vii. men that syt and teach.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one & taketh a dogg by thy eares. Like as one shutteth deadly arrowes and darteres out of a pryuy place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neghboure. And then sayeth he: Ioyd it but in spoite. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: and where the bachyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd & fyre: euen so doth a brawlyng fellowe stire vp variaunce. A slaunders wordes are like slatery, but they pearse & inwarde partes of thy body. Vonymous lippes & a wicked herte, are like a potsherde covered wth syluer dyesse. An enemye dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth myschese: but whā he speaketh saye, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominacions in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. Who so byggeth vp a pyre, shal fall therin: and he & wyltreth a stone, shal stōmble vpon it hymselfe. A dyssemblinge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a slateryng mouth worketh myschese.

The XXVII. Chapter.

Like not thy boost of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā praysethe, & not thine owne mouth: yee other folles lippes, and not thine. The stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a foolles wrath is heuyer then they both. Wrath is a cruell thig, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde enuye? An open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but thy kysse of an enemye are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an hony combe: but vnto him that is hōgric, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde & forsaketh his nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that can geue good counsell, reioyseth a mans neghboure. Thyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

The xxx. Chap. Ho. xlii.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brocher farre of. My sonne, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shall make an swere vnto my rebuters. A wyse man seynge the plague wyl hyde himself, as for fooles they go on still, and suffer harme. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, & take a pledge of him for the vnkownemans sake. He that is to hastie to praise his neghbour above measure, shalbe taken as one geuerth him an euell repute. A bawdyng woman and the rose of the house droppynge in a raynie daye, maye well be compared together. He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde, and holdeth oyle fast in his hōde. Like as one yrd whetteth another, so doth one man comforte another. Who so kepeth his fyge tre, shal enioye the frutes therof: he that wayreth vpon his master, shal come to honoure. Like as in one water there appeare dyuerse faces, euē so dyuerse men haue dyuerse hertes. Like as hell & destruction are neuer full, euē so the eyes of me can neuer be satisfied. Syluer is tryed in the moude, & golde in the soynace, & so is a man, whan he is openly praysed to his face. Though thou shuldest bray a foole w a pestell in a mortar like oremeell, yet wil not his foolishnesse go from him. Se y thou knowe the nombre of thy cattell thy self, and loke well to thy flockes. For riches abyde not alwaye, & the crowne endureth not foreuer. The hay groweth, & grasse cometh vp, & herbes are gathered in & mournaies.
The lambes shal clothe the, & for the goates thou shalt haue money to y husbandry.
Thou shalt haue goates mylke ynough to fede the, to vpholde thy husholde, & to sus-teyne thy maydens.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him, but the righteous stendeth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne y lon-de doth oft chaunge hir prynee: but thorow men of vnderstandinge & wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynual rayne that destroyeth y frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse y vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. Wicked men discern not the thinge y is right, but they that seeke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. A poore man ledynge a godly life, is better then the rich that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstandinge: but he y fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vantage & wyngge, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. He that turneth awaye his ear from hearinge y lawe, his prayer shalbe hoired. Who so ledeth y righteous man an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pryne, but y iust shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstandinge, can perceane him wel ynough. When rich men are in prosperite, the doth honore floushy: but when the vngodly come vp, state of men chaungeth. He that hyde-th his synnes, shal not prosper: but who knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shal haue mercy. Well is him that siddeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischese. Like as a rearinge lyon and an hongrie beer, war-
is an vngodly prynee ouer the poore people.

Where the prynee is without vnderstan-dinge, there is greate oppression & wronge:
but yf he be soch one as hateth couetisenesse, he shal longe raigne. He that by vilence sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a nagare vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to succor him. Who so leadeth a godly and an innocēt life, shal be safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shal once hame fall. He y sylleth his londe, shal haue pla-teousnesse of bried: but he that foloweth y nesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faith-full man is greatly to be commended, but that maketh to moch haist for to be rich, shal not be vngiltie. To haue respect of personnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euē for a people of bried. He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shal come vpon him. He that rebucketh a man, shal fynde more fauoure at y last, the he that flattereth him. Who so reb-beth his father and mother, and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a monke.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stretcheth vpon strife: but he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shal be well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that releth wisely, shal be safe. He that getteth to the poore, shal not wante: but he that re-neth awaye his eyes from soch as be in need fite, shal suffre greate pouerte himself.

Whan the vngodly are come vp, man-are sayne to hyde them selues: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

The XXIX. Chapter.

That is stiffnecked & wyll not be reformed, shal suddenly be destroyed & out eny helpe. Where y righteous haue the ouer hande, y people are in prospe-rite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, the y people mourne. Who so loueth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: but he y kepeth harlotres, spendeth awaye y he hath.
Witherne iudgment y kynge setteth vp the loude, but yf he be a man y taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flattereth his neghbō, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of y wicked is his owne snare, but y righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considereth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderston-dinge. Wicked people bringe a care in decay, but wyse men set it vp agayne. As a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The bloudethyriste hate the righteous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his spere all together, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

As a prynee delyce in lyes, all his seruants are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lighteneth both their eyes. The seate of the kynge y faithfully indgeth the poore, shal continue sure for evermore. The rodde and correccion mynistr wysdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, he bringeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the righteous shal fithar fall. Turoure thy soune with correction, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perish: but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruait wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstande, yet wil he not regarde them.

If thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnadvisyd, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryn-geth vp his seruait from a childe, shal mate him his master at length. An angrie man stretcheth vpon strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. After pryde cometh a fall, but a lowly spere bringeth greate worshippe. Who so kepeth company w a kete, hateth his owne soule:
he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to honō. Many there be that seke y prynces fauoure, but eny mans iudgment commeth from the LORDE.

The righteous abhorre the vngodly: but as for those that be in y right waye, y wicked hate them.

The XXX. Chapter.

The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

The prophetic of a true faithfull man, whō God hath helped, whom God hath comforted & nourished. For though I am y leest of all, & haue no mā vnderstodinge: for I neuer lerned wysdome, yet haue I vnderstandinge & am wel eniourmed in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp i to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence?
Who hath holden y wynde fast in his hade? Who hath comprehended y waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of y weilde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shyld vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therfore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde as a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remove from me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouer-te nor riches, ony graunte me a necessary lyuynge. Lest yf I be to full, I denye y, & saye:
what filowe is y LORDE? And lest I beinge constrayned therow pouerte, fall vnto scalinge, and forsweare the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruait vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte. He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vpon the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clensed from their fylthy-nesse. There are people y haue a prentice loke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. This people tethe are swerdes, and with their chafe bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore fremamonge mā.

This generacion (which is like an hoisleche) hath two daughters: y one is called,
fetch hither the other, brynge hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saith neuer hoo. The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. Who so laugheth his father to scorn, and setteth his mothers commaūdement at naught: the rauen pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yongle Eagles.

There be thre thinges to hye for me, and
as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

Salomons Prouerbes.

The waye of an Aegle in y ayre, & waye of a serpent ouer y stone, & waye of a shippe in y see, & y waye of a mā w a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyse y breaketh wedlocke, which wyppeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, & sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. Thowowthe thinges the earth is disquieted, & the fourth maye it not beare: Thowow a sernaūt y beareth rule, thowow a foole y hath greate riches, thowow an ydle houswife, & thowow an handmayden y is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wysdome they excede the wyse. The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in y harvest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder labourerth w hir hādes, & y in y kynnes palace.

There be thre thinges y go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodliest of all. A Lyon which is kynge of beastes, & geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kynge y goeth forth w his people.

Yf thou be so foolish to magnifie y self, or medlest w eny soch thinge, the laye thine hāde vpon y mouth. Who so chyneth mycl, maketh butter: he that rubberth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, byngeth forth strife.

The XXXI. Chapter.

These are the wordes of kynge Lamuel, & y lesson y his mother taughte him. My sonne, thou sonne of my booby: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substantiū & mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō euē of kynnes. O Lamuel, geue kynnes no wyne, geue kynnes & prynces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, & regarde not y cause of the poore, & of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, & wyne vnto those y mourne: that they maye drynke it, & forget their misery & aduersite. Be thou an aduocate & stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme & sicourles. With y mouth defende y thinge y is lausfull and right, and y cause of y poore and helpelesse.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithful wo-mā, she is moch more worth the perles. The herte of hir husbāde maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles.

She wil do him good & not euell all y dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll & flax, & laboureth gladly w hir handes. She is likē a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in y night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, & foode for hir maydens. She considreth hēde, & byeth it, and w the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courage y hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir husbū wifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, & hir hande taketh holde of y rode.

She openeth hir hande to y poore, yet she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not y the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde feltes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self sayre ornātes, hir clothige is whyte sylk & purple. Hir husbāde is moch set by in y gates, whē he sitteth amonge y rulers of y londe. She maketh cloch of sylke & sellēth it, and deliuereth a gyrdle vnto y marchaūt.

Strength and honoure is hir clothinge, & in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wysdome, & in hir ge is the lawe of grace. She lokech wel to the wayes of hir housholde, & eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise & call hir blessed, & hir husbāde maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be y gather ches together, but thou goest abouethē all.

As for fauō, it is disceatfull, and beutic is a vaynethinge: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayfed. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

Chap. II. In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mētion of the wordes and cōuersacio of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the onely emelastinge God.

Chap. III. Every thinge hath a tyme. There is no thinge, but God hath put redyousnesse and tranayle in it, to exercise men withall. What soeuer a man enioyeth of his labour, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IV. A cōsideracion of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the duty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shal be brought lowe.

Chap. V. Agaynst foolish and temerarious vowes. Let no man maruaile that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the ruche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI. Agaynst those richē mē that dare not enioy their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII. A man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thinge it is to haue a good name. The profite of wysdome.

Chap. VIII. Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despyed. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the wordes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX. Like thinges happen vnto all men: therefore with myrth and thankfulness shulde men enioy the giftes of God. Wyssdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI. In these two chapters are many wysstand profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.

Chap. XII. In this chapter the preacher she with his whole meanyng, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the conclusion, that there is nothyng stedfast and durable but God himself, whō men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmandementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first. Chap. Ho. xlvij.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of David, kynge of Ierusalem.

All is but vanite (saith y preacher) all is but playne vanite.

For what els hath a mā, of all the labō y he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another cometh, but the earth abyderth still. The Sonne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, & he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth to warde y South, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himself agayne. All floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, y no mā can exprefe them. The eye is not satysfied w sight, the eare is not fylled w hearinge. The thinge y hath bene, cometh to passe agayne: & y thinge y hath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoe in the tymes y haue bene before vs. The thinge y is past, is out of remēbrance: Euen so the thinges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vps amōge thē that come after. I myself y Preacher, beyngē kynge of Irael & Ierusalem, applyed my mynde to seke cut & search for the knowlege of all thiges y are done vnder hea-

uē. Soch tranayle & labō hath God geue vnto y childē of mē, to exercise thē seluesther.

Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sonne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexacion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the sawtes cā not be nobred. I cōmoned w myne owne herte, sayyng: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wysdome, thē all they y haue bene before me in Ierusalem. See my hert had greate experieēce of wysdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: y I might knowe what were wysdome & vnderstōdinge, what were errō & foolishnes. And I perceaued y this also was but a vexacion of mynde: for wher moch wysdome is, there is also greate tranayle & disquietnes: & y more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The II. Chapter.

The sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: for in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art mad, and to myrth: what doest thou?

He sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: for in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art mad, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdraue my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyshdome, and to comprehend foolishnes vntill the tyme that (amonge all thynges which are vnder the Sonne) I might see what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

^{6. 7} ded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. I made poles of water, to water the grene and frutesfull trees withall. I bought ser^{reg. 4. 2} nantes and maydes, and had a greate hennholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substance of them, then all they were before me in Jerusalem. I gathered syluer and golde together, euen a treasure of kynges and lordes.

B I provided me syngers and women which coude playe of instrumentes, to make me myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyng cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater and in more wysshipe, then all my predecessors in Jerusalem. For wysdome remained with me: and I toke what so euer myne eyes desired, I let them haue it: and wherein so euer my herte desired or had any pleasure, I withheld it not from it. Thus my herte reioysed in all that I dyd, and this I toke for the portion of all my trauayle. But when I considered all the woikes that my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, and nothinge of any value vnder the Sonne. Then turned I me to considere wysdome, erroure and foolishnesse (for what is he among men, that might be compared to me?) I ynge in such woikes: and I sawe, that wysdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole geeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thoughte I in my mynde: If it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labour any more for wysdome? So I confessed within my harte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as the foole. Thus began I to be weery of my life, in so much that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde: yee I was weery of all my laboure, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be sayne to leane them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, what he shalbe a wysse man or a foole? And yet shal he be lord of all my labours, which I with such wysdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all such trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so much as a man shulde wey him self with wysdome, with vnderstandynge and opportunitie, and yet be sayne to leane his labours vnto another, I neuer sawe for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a man of all his laboure and trauayle of his mynde, that he hath vnder the Sonne, but heynesse, sorrow and quyetnes all the dayes of his life? In so much that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a man to eate and drynke, and be soule to be merry in his labour? yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: for who maye eate, drynke, or lrynge any thinge to please without him? And why? he geueth vnto man, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wysdome, vnderstandynge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynes and sorrow, that he maye gather and heape together the thinge, that afterwarde shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and vexacion of mynde.

The III. Chapter.

Every thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath his comen season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. There is a tyme to plante, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, that is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to danse: A tyme to cast awaye stones, and a tyme to gather stones together: A tyme to embrace, and a tyme to refrayne from embrace: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lyste: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sette together: A tyme to kepe sylence, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, and a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a man (that doth any thinge) but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the trauayle and carefullnesse which God hath geuen vnto me, I see that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All they that he ordered marudons goodly, to enery charge his due tyme. He hath placed ignorance also in the hertes of men, that they shulden not fynde out the grounde of his woikes, which he doth from the beginninge to the ende. So I perceaued, that in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, then to be merry, and to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all that a man eateth and drynke, yee what so euer a man enioyeth of all his laboure, that same is a gifte of God. I considered also what so euer God doth, it continueth for ever, and that nothinge can be put vnto it nor take from it: and that God doth it to the intent, that men shulde feare him. The thinge that hath bene, is now: and the thinge that is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Moreover, I sawe vnder the Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, and iniquite in steade of righteuousnesse.

Then thoughte I in my mynde: God shal separate the righteous from the vngodly, and then shal he retyrne and iudgment of all counte-ailes and woikes. I comoned with myne owne herte also, concerninge the chyldre of men: how God hath chosyn them, and yet letteth them as they were beastes: for they happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, as the one dyeth, so dyeth the other: yee they haue both one maner of birth, so that (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust agayne.

Who knoweth the spere of man, that goeth vnto the heuyn, and the birth of the beest, that goeth downe in to the earth? Wherfore I perceaued, that there is nothinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his portion. But who wil brynge him to see the thinge, that shal come after him?

The III. Chapter.

So I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of such as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde deli-uer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherfore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be almyne: yee him that is yet vnbome to be better at ease then they both, because he seith not the miserable woikes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauayle and diligence of labour was hard of every man. This is also a vayne thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole fol-deth his handes together, and eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better then rest, the beech and handes full with laboure and trauayle. Moreover, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe nor brother: yet is there no ende of his carefull trauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, and saye:) For whom do I take such trauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their labour. If one of them fall, his companion helpeth him vp agayne: but who is him, that is alone, for if he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be overcome, but two maye make resistance: A thre folde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kynge, that doth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. Some one cometh out of prison, and is made a kynge: and another which is borne in the kynngdome, cometh vnto pouerte. And I perceaued, that all men lrynge vnder the Sonne, go to the seconde childe, that cometh vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their toye the greater thoro him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. When thou comest in to the house of God, kepe thy self, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: that is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The V. Chapter.

Not hastie with thy mouth, and let not thine herte speake any thinge rashly before God. For God is in heauen, and thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wordes be fewe. For where much carefullnesse is, there are many dreames: and where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. If thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowe, he hath no pleasure in them. If thou promyse any thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shouldest promise, and not paye. Use not thy mouth to cause thy flesh for to synne, for thou sayest not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in my fault.

For the God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all þy workes of thine handes.

Eccles. 4. 2 And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: but loke þy thou feare God. If thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongously dealt withall, so þy equite & the right of the lawe is waisted in the londe: maruell not thou at such iudgment, for one grea t nā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe the selues together. The whole londe also with the felde and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto þy kinge.

B For that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delireth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them a waye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouring man slepeth sweetly, whether it be little or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a sore plage, which I haue seene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him þy hath them in possession.

Job 1. 6 For oft tmes they perishe with his grea t em. fery and crouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carrieth nothinge a waye with him of all his laboure. This is a miserable plage, þy he shal go awaye enen as he came. What helpeth it him then, þy he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darke, with grea te carefulesse, sicknesse & sorow.

Eccles. 2. 1 Therefore me thinke it a better and a sayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his laboure, þy he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his laboure: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The VI. Chapter.

A Here is yet a plage vnder þy Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge me: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desire: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spideth them. This is a miserable thinge & a miserable plage. If a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in number, and yet can not enioye his good, he be buried: as for him I saye, that an vnly byrth is better then he. For he cometh to nought, & goeth his waye in to darkness, and his name is forgotten. Moreover, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of none neither here ner there: Yes though he liue two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the labour that a man taketh, is for himselfe, and yet his desire is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the lywyng? The sight of the eyes is better, then that he shalde so departe a waye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse in mynde. What is more excellent then man, yet can he not in the lawe get the victory: him that is mightier the he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but not to haue a man elo?

The VII. Chapter.

For who knoweth what is good for man lywyng, in þy dayes of his lyf? ne life, which is but a shadowe: For who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? A good name is more worth then a precious oymment, and the daye of death is better the þy daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mourning, then in to a banquet house. For this is the ende of all men, and he that is lyfyng, taketh it to herte. It is better to be silent then to laugh, for whē the countenance is heavy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of the wyse is in the mourninge house, but the herte of the foolish is in the house of mirth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, then to heare the songe of foolles. For the laughinge of foolles is like crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And this is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth the gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The patient spere is better then the hie mynde. Be not haistely angrie in þy mynde, for wrath dwelleth in the bosome of a foole. Saye thou: What is the cause that þy dayes of olde tyme were better, then they þy be now? for that were no wyse question. Wyse is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Use well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of myssfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

C These thinges also haue I considered in þy tyme of vanite: þy the iust man perissheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore berthou neither to rightuous ner ourt wyse, þy thou perissh not: be neither to vngodlynes also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let þy go out of thy hande. For he þy feareth God shal escape them all.

Wysdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the cite: for there is not one iust vpo earth, þy doth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto euery worde þy is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruante curse the: for thine: wne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue I pronounced because of wysdome: for I thoughte to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee & so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out science, wisdom and vnderstandinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotynge foolles. And I founde, that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes. Who so please þy God shal escape from her, but the synner wil be taken of her.

Beholde I sayeth þy preacher: this haue I diligently searched out & pruned, þy I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. So, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust & right, but they seke dyuerse subtilties, where as no man hath wysdome & vnderstandinge, to geue answer there vnto.

The VIII. Chapter.

Wysdome maketh a mā face to shyne, but malice putteth it out of fauour. Kepe the kynges commaundment: I warne the: & the oath þy thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, & se thou cōtynue in no euell thinge:

ge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, þy doeth he. Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundment is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? Who so kepe the commaundment, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulnes & sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him? Neither is there eny mā þy hath power ouer þy spere, to kepe stū þy spere, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, ne ther maye vngodlynes deliuer him þy medleth withall.

All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene þy vngodly brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch þy they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye & grea te reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punysshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundred tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with the that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shal not be well with him, neither shal he prolonge his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shal he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of þy rightuous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therefore I commend gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his laboure all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to lerne wysdome, and to knowe the trayle that is in the worlde (and that of such a fashion, þy I suffred not myne eyes to slepe neither daye ner night) I vnderstode of all þy workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto þy workes that are done vnder þy Sonne: and though he bestowe his laboure to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto the: yee though a wyse man wolde undertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The IX. Chapter.

All these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seeke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes all so are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the righteous as with the vngodly: with the good & cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not like as it goeth with the veredone, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is a frayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges that come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, & madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as long as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As long as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyet dogg (saye they) is better than a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe that they shall dye: but they that be dede, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they any more. For their memoriall is forgotte, so that they be nether loued, hated ner envied: nether haue they any more parte in this worlde, in all that is done vnder the Sonne. So thou that waye then, eate thy bread with ioye, & drynke & wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God.

C Let thy garmentes be all waye whyte, & let thy heade want no oyncment. Use thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all the daies of thy life (which is but vayne) & God hath geuen thee vnder the Sonne, all the dayes of thy vayne: for this is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labours & trauaile that thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so ever thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amonge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowlege ner wysdome.

D So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder the Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swifte in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to sedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sure: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in tyme & fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshes are catched with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Euen so are men taken in the perillous tyme, when it cometh suddenly vpon them.

This wysdome haue I sene also vnder the Sonne, & me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, & a fewne within it: so there came a greate kynge & beseged it, & made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which with his wysdome deliuered the cite: yet was there no body, that had any respecte vnto such a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. & I sawe the les, a symple mans wysdome is despysed, & his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre aboue the crienge of a captaine amonge fooles. For wysdome is better then harnesse: but one that trust alone destroyeth much good.

The X. Chapter.

Ald flies & corruppe sweete oyncment & make it to stynke, are for thinge more worth then the wysdome & honoure of a foole. A wise mans hat is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hat is vpon the left. A doctinge foole thinketh, that he may doo as foolishly as himself. As a principall spere be geuen the to beare rule, be not negligēt in thine office: for so shalt thou grete wickednesse be put downe, as it were a medecyne. Another plague is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, ignorance & is comonly amonge prynces: a foole sitteth in greate dignite, & the rich are sett downe beneath: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses, & prynces goynge vpon their feete as it were seruantes. But he that diggeth up a pytt, shall fall therein himself: & who breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shall bite him. Who so removeth stones, shall haue trauaile withall: and he that heareth not, shall be hurt therewith.

When an yron is blone, and if poynt not sharpened, it must be whetted againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome solow diligence. A babler of his tounge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without byssynge. The wordes out of a wise mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyll then make him to make a conclusion? The labour of a foolish is greuous vnto the, while he knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Woe vnto the (O thou realme and londe) whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banderettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kynge is come of nobles, and whose prynces are in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thowow slouthfulnesse the baltes fall downe, and thowow ydle handes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh, and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euill in thy thought, and speake no hurte of thy ryche in thy priuey chambrie: for a byrde of the ayre shall betraye thy voyce, and who his fathers shall he bewraye thy wordes.

The XI. Chapter.

Ende thy vytayles over the waters, and so shalt thou fynde the after many yeres. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what miste it shall come vpon earth. When the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And when it falleth, (whether it be toward the south or north) in what place so ever it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth & wyndeth, shall not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shall not reape. Nowe like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how thy bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the worke of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therfore with thy handes to sowe thy seede, whether it be in the morninge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shall prosper, & if they both take, it is the better. The light is sweet, & a pleasant thinge is it for the eyes to lōke vpon the Sonne. As a man lyue many yeres, and be glad in them all, let him remember the dayes of darknesse, which shall be many: & when they come, all thinges shall be but vayne. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and let thine hert be merry in thy yonge dayes: folow the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shall bringe thee in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The XII. Chapter.

Remoue displeasure out of thy hert, & remoue euill from thy body: for childehood and youth is but vayne. Remember thy matter in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and on the yeres drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, & light. & Moone and the starres be darkened, and on the cloudes turne agayne after the raynes when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and when the stronge men shall bowe themselves: when the Myllers stone shall be because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shall waie dymme: when the dores in the stretes shall be shutt, and when the voyce of the Myller shall be layed downe: when men shall rise up at the voyce of the byrde, and when all thy daughters of musyck shall be brought lowe: when men shall feare in hye places, and be a frayd in the stretes: when the Almonde tree shall be despysed, the greshopper come out, and when greates poutre shall breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go about the stretes. O euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and on the golden benche be broken: O the pott be broken at the well, & the whele vpon the Cisterne: O dust be turned againe vnto earth from whence it came, and on the spere retorne vnto God, which gaue it. All is but vayne (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vayne.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hert, sought out the grosse and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of truthe. For the wordes of a wyse are like pikes and nailes that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therfore beware (my sonne) that about the se thou make the not many & innumerable bootes, nor take diuers doctrine in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Let vs heare the conclusion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that concheth all men: for God shall iudge all workes and secreete thinges, whether they be good or euill.

The ende of Ecclesiastes, called the Preacher.

Salomons Balettes,

called Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

A That thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for y brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment; therfore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kynge hath brought me into his preyre chambie. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes, and as the hanginges of Salomon: but yet am I faire & well fauoured withal. Maruell not at me & I am so black, & why? & Sonne hath shyned vpon me. For whan my mothers childie had euell wil at me, they made me & keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I sayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) wherethou fideest, wherethou restest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companyons.

As thou knowe not y self (o thou fayrest amonge women) chaunce y waye forth after y foote stepes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede y goates besyde y shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) w myne hoost & with my charrettes, which shal be no fewer then pharaos.

C Then shal thy cheskes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged w spages & goodly iuwels: a neck bande of golde wil we make y w syluer bottons. When the kynge syteth at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a boddell of Myre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cyprus, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well fauoured art thou? Oure bed is deckt with floures, & sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypressse.

The ij. Chap.

The II. Chapter.

I Am the floure of the felde, and lylle of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He hath geth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me w grapes, & som me with apples, for I am sick of lone. He lefthade lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embuseth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes & byndes of the felde, & w make not vpon my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

We thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there cometh he hoppinge vpon y mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roe or a yong hart. Beholde, he stondeth behynde y wall, he loketh in at the wyndow, & peepeth throught the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stode vpon my loue, my dove, my bentyfull: come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are comen vpon the felde, the twystringe tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle dove is herde in carleade. The sygetre bryngeth forth hir figge, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

O stode vpon my loue, my bentyfull, and a me (my dove) out of the caues of the rocke, out of the holes of the wall: O let me see thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Get vs the fores, yee the litle fores that haue y vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth anidger the lylles) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come & gayne pryncely (o my beloued) like as a Roe or a yong hart vnto the mountaynes.

The III. Chapter.

I might in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him; but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all y stetes will I see him whom my soule loueth: but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute y cite, saue me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

Salomons Balettes

So whan I was a litle past them, I founde him whom my soule loueth. I haue got him holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go, till I brynge him into my mothers house, and into hir chambie that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes and byndes of the felde, that ye make not vpon my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Who is this, that cometh out of y wyl-domesslike pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myre, frankincense and all maner spices of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboure Salomons bedstede the stande LX valeauur men of the mightie in Irael. They holde swordes every one, & are appare in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpon his thet, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bedstede of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, & scate of purple, & grounde pleasauntly paved for the daughters of Ierusalem.

So forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and beholde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherewith his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnes of his hert.

The IIII. Chapter.

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. Thy haire lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clippyd, which go first vpon the washinge place: where every one beareth two twynes, and not one vnfrutefull amonge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are lovely: thy cheskes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyeth hid within. Thy neck is like the tower of David buylded with bulwoikes, wher vpon there haue a thousande sheldes, & all the weapes of the gyaltes. Thy two brestes are like two twynes of yonge roes, which fede amonge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myre, and to the hill of frankynsenser: till the daye breake, and all the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spott is there in the.

Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppe of Aman, from the toppe of Samir and Hermon, from the Lyons denmes and from the mountaynes of y leoparides. Thou hast wounded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one

theyne of thy neck. O how fayre and lovely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse: Thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the honny combe, yee mylke and honny is vnder thy renge, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsenser.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water sprynge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradyse of pogranares & swete frutes: as Cypressse, Nardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myre, Aloes, and all the best spices. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of lynyng waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vpon thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vpon my gard, that the smell therof maye be caried on every syde: & that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therein.

The V. Chapter.

C Ome in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myre & my spice. I wil eate my honny and my honny cobb, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylke. Eate o (ye frenches) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert was ynge, I herde the voyce of my beloued, wha he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my dove, my darlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y lockes of my haire are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how can I do it on agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued to warde him: so that I stode vpon to open vnto my beloued. My handes dropped w Myre, & the Myre ranne downe my fingers vpon y lock. Neuerthelesse wha I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: & enen so now I sought him, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answer. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, saue me, smere me, and wounded me: & they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my gamet fro me. I charge you therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for lone.

Who is thy loue aboue other louers. O thou

sayest amonge women? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other lovers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my lone, he is whyte and reade coloured, a singuler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are busshed, browne as the euenynge: his eyes are as the eyes of dones by the water brokes, washen with mylck, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: his chetes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaries place all maner of swete thinges: his lippes droppe as the floures of the most princypall Myue, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, decre ouer with Sapphyres: his legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sockettes of golde: his face is as Libanus, and as the bewery of the Cedre trees: his throte is swete, yee he is altogether lonely. Soch one is my lone (o ye doughters of Jerusalem) soch one is my lone.

Whither is thy lone gone? (o thou sayest amonge women) whither is thy lone departed, that we maye see him with the?

The VI. Chapter.

A lone is gone downe in to his garden, vnto a swete sinelling bedde, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My lone is myne, and I am his, which feedeth amonge the lilies.

Then art pleasaunt (o my lone) even as loneliness itself, thou art sayre as Jerusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their banners (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude) Thy hayre lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon a mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe that be clypped, which go out of the washing place: where every one beareth two twynes, and not one vnfrutefull amonge them. Thy chetes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge women without nombre. But one is my done, my derlyng. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, and deare vnto her that bare her. When the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: yee the quenes and concubines pray sed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the momynge? sayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their banners?

I wente downe in to the natt garden, to see what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde flourished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of my prince of my people made me suddenly as a yed. Turne againe, turne againe (O thou damite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that I maye loke vpon the.

The VII. Chapter.

What pleasure haue yemore in Jerusalem, than when she dawne amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadings with thy shes, thou princys daughter. Thy chetes are like a sayre iewell, which is wrought by a cunningge workmaster: Thy nauell is like a redde goblett, which is neuer without drynke. Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, set aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twynes of yonger oes: Thy neck is as were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like water poles in Zesebon, besyde the poynt of Barchabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which looketh towarde Damasus. That heade that stondeth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like thynges purple folden vpon in plates.

O how sayre and lovely art thou (my derlyng) in pleasures: Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vpon in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes shall be as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrils like the smell of apples, and thy chete like the best wyne.

This shall be pure and cleare for my lone, his lippes and teth shall haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my lone, and he shall turne him vnto me. O come on my lone, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take our lodginge in the vyllages. In the momynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, and yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shall the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde our dore: There (o my lone) haue I kept vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The VIII. Chapter.

What I might fynde the without tisse, whom I lone as my brother, which suckte my mothers brestes: that thou woldest not be offended, yf I take the and brought the in to my mothers brestes: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, and his right hande embraeth me.

Salomons Balettes.

The viii. Chap. Fo. lii.

then am I as one that hath founde fauoure in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde deliuered he vnto the keper: y every one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geneth the a thousande, and two hundred to the keepers of the frute.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companyons maye hearken to the same. O get the awaye (my lone) as a roe or a yonge hart vnto the swete sinellinge mountayn.

The prophet Isay.

This is the prophesy of Isay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Ieru salem: In the tyme of Osi as, Ioathan, Abas, and Izechias kynges
of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

Hear o heauen, hearken o earth,
for the LORD speaketh: I ha ue nourished & brought vp chil dren, and they are fallen awaye fro me. An oxe knoweth his LORDE, and an Ass his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no understandinge. Alas for this synful peo ple, which are experte in blasphemies, a fra garde generacion, vnnatural children. They haue forsaken the LORD, they haue prou oked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherfore shulde ye be plaged any more? For ye are euer fallinge a waye. The whole heade is sick, and the he re is very heuy. From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all ye body: but all are woundes, botches, fiss and strypes, which can nether be hel ped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with any ointment.

Your londe lieth waiste, youre cities a re burnt vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be sayne to stonde, and lo ke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Norouer yf daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vyny arde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged cite. And excepte the LORD of hostes had left vs a few alyue: we shulde ha ue bene as Sodoma, & like vnto Gomorra.

Heare the worde of the LORD ye ty rantes of Sodoma: and hearken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
Why offere ye so many sacrifices vnto me? I am discontent for the brent offringes of we

The i. Chap. Ho. ii.

thers, and with yf fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye appeare before me, who requyretch you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblations, for it is but lost labour. I abhorre youre incense. I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, yours Sabbathes and solempne dayes. Your fastinges are also in wayne. I haue youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very hart. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out ye hon des, yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

Wash you, make you cleane, put awaye ye euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deluyne the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come be fore you. Now go to (saith the LORD) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though yours synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyte then snowe? And though they were like purple, shal they not be like whyte wool? Is it not so? If ye belouynge & obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. But yf ye be obstina te and rebellious, ye shal be denoured with the swerde: for thus the LORD hath pro mised with his owne mouth.

How happneth it then that the right uous cite (which was full of equyte) is beco me vnfaithfull as an whore: rightuousnes dwelt in it, but now murther. Thy siluer is turned to drasse, and thy wyne myrte w water. Thy princes are traytours and com panyons of theues. They loue giftes altoge ther, and solowre rewarde. As for the fa therles, they halpe him not to his right, ne ther wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therefore speaketh the LORD God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah
I must ease me of myne enemies, and a ven ge me vpon the. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drasse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, & seth thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senators as they were from yf begynnynge. Then shalt thou be called the rightuous cite, the faithful ci
tie. But Sion shal be redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiue with rightuousnesse. For the transgressours and vngodly, and such as are become unfaithfull unto the LORDE, must all together be utterly destroyed.

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oke trees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to due strawe, and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The seconde Chapter.

Worouer this is the worde that was openned vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Juda and Jerusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shal be ycheefe amonge hilles, and exalted aboue all litle hilles. And al heithen shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: vp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of y God of Jacob: y he maye shewe vs his waye, and y we maye walke in his pathes. For y lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swordes and speares, to make scythes, scythes & sawes therof.

From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether shal they lerne to fight from thensforth. It is to the that Icrie (o house of Jacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abroad with thy people (o house of Jacob) for ye go farre beyonde y fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers whem ye haue as the phylistynes had: or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charrettes: Inmediatly was it ful of Idols also, even workes of youre owne hondes, which ye your selues haue facioned, and youre fingers haue made. There knelth the man, there falleth the man downe before them, so y thou canst not bunge him awaye from thence.

And therfore get y soone in to some rock, and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from y glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe y high lookes of presumptuous personnes, and byngeth lowe the pryde of wā, and he only shal be exalted in y daye. For the daye of y LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde & pascid, vpon all the that exalte the selues. shal bunge them all downe: vpon all high stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the otes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all castowres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thing y is glorious and pleasaunt to lōt vpon.

And it shal bunge downe the pryde man, and laye mans presumptuousnesse lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the tory in that daye. But the Idols shal fully be rotted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of the earth, and in to caves of the earth, from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from the sight of his magesty: what tyme as he shal come vnto to shake the earth. Then, he shal cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which) he neuertheles had made to honour the) vnto Molles and Baas: the he maye the better crepe in to the caves and rocks, and into the cliffes of hard stone, from y sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The thirde Chapter.

Weryman can eschue a persone moued in danger, for what doth he wysly? But shal y LORDE of hostes take awaye frō yrusale & Juda, all possessions & power, all meat and drinke, y capteyne and the souldyer, y iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of hystorie year, and the honorable: the Senatours, and mā of vnderstandinge: the masters of craft and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saith the LORDE) & babes shal haue the rule of you. One shal euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Recone shal take a frende of his own kynred by y bosome, and saye: thou hast done this thinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and perill.

Then shal he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether murer clothinge in my house, make me no murer of the people. For Jerusalem and Juda must decaye, because that both their lawdes and counsels are agaynst the LORDE: they pyncke the presence of his magesty to anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they becom their owne synnes themselves, as the mites, & hyder the not. Wo be vnto their sonnes, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happy are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. But wo be to y vngodly and vntighteous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaundes oppresse y, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders beceane the, and trade out the waye of thy footsteppes. The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stonde to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, and shal saye thus vnto them: Ye is ye that haue burnt vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherfore do ye oppresse my people, and marre y faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saith y LORDE: Seinge the daughters of Sion are become so prynces, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycey with their feet: Therefore shal the LORDE haue the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgeousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cherymes, parlettes, and colares, bracelets and hoodes, y goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymet, busshes and headbandes, rynges and garlandes, holy daye clothes and vales, kerches and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe stynd amonge them. And for their gyddles there shalbe lowse bondes. And for wellice there shalbe baldnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth, and for their bewtye whorednesse and sonneburnyng. Their busbondes and their mightie men shal perish with the swerde in batell.

The fourth Chapter.

What tyme shal their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal sit as desolate folde vpon the earth. Then shal seven wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and cloothinge together in conon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprose maye be take from us. After that tyme shal the brannch of y LORDE be bentiful and mightie, and y frute of the earth shalbe saye and pleasaunt for those Israelites that shal spryng therof. Then shal the remnant in Sion and the remnant at Jerusalem be called holy: namely all such as are witten amonge the luynges at Jerusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shal wash awaye the desolacion of the dough-ters of Sion, and poure the bloude out from Jerusalem, w y wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE proude a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynninge of a flammynge fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserved. And Jerusalem shal be as a tabernacle for a shadowe because of herte in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The V. Chapter

Well than, I will synge my beloved frende a songe of his vnyearde. My beloved frende hath a vnyearde in a very frute full plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therein. And afterwarde when he looted y it shulde bunge him grapes, it brought forth thomes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Cityens of Jerusalem and whole Juda:) Judge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynegarding. What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherfore then hath it geuen thomes, where I looted to haue had grapes of it?

Well, I shall tell you how I will do w my vnyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe y wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shal nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thomes and breares. I wil also forbyd y cloude, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vnyarde of the LORDE of hostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Juda his sayre plantinge. Of these he looted forequyte, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bunge one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hostes rowneth me thus in myne eares: shal not many greater and more gorgeous houses be so waist, that no man shal dwell in the? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sedge shal geue but thre.

The prophet Esay.

Do be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in drouthynges, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, tabrettes and p. pes, and wyne. But they regard not the worke of the LORDE, and consider not the operaciō of his hondes. Therefore cometh my folck also in captiuite, because they haue no vnderstandyng. Their glory shalbe mynre with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therefore gapeth he, and openeth his mouth marvellous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdom, with such as reioyse therein, maye decrease in to it.

Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hostes, y holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equitye and righteuousnesse after this maner. Then shal y lambs cate their apoynted feder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto the, as it were with a corde: and synne, as it were with a cart repe. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and go forth w his worke, that we maye se it. Let the council of y holy one of Israel come, and drawe me, y we maye knowe it.

Do vnto them that call euil good, and good euil: which make darcknesse light, and light darcknesse, y make sower sweete, and sweete sower. Do vnto them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstandyng. Do vnto them, y are comynge men to suppe out wyne, and expecte to set vp dyckes. These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the righteous.

Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful) their blossom shal vanishe awaye like dust or smoke for they despise the lawe of the LORDE of hostes, and blasphemie the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kynded also agaynst his people, and he shal stretch his honde at them: yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carres shal lye in the open stretes, like myre. After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, and call vnto them in a farr countrie: and beholde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one faynt nor feeble amonge them, no not a sluggish nor sleepy parson. There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, nor loose the lacher of his shue. Their arrows are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoes are like flynt, and their cartwheles like a stormy wynde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons helpees. They shal reare, and hatch vp the praye, and no man shal reconer it or get it from the. In that daye they shal be so feare vpon them, as the see. And yf a clyte vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yf we loke to be anen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vii Chapter.

In the same yere y kynge Osias dyed, y Iane the LORDE sittynge vpon an high and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled y palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphims, a herof enery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech covered his face, w twayne his fere, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hostes. The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee the geastes and dorecheles moued at the cryenge, and the horse was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: Who is me. For I was aslōmshed: that I (which am a man of vncleppes, and dwell amonge people y hath vncleppes also: Shulde y y kynge and LORDE of hostes with my ne eyes.

Then fletwe one of the Seraphims vnto me, hauinge a hore cole in his honde, a hich he had taken from the altare with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, and thy vnghteousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgiven. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge aduysment on this maner: Whom shal I sende, and who will eoure messanger? The I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shall lye in bedde, but ye shal not vnderstande, ye shal plant lyse, and not perceaue. Yee art en the hart of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not w their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnderstande not with their hartes, and connecte and be healed.

Then spake I: LORDE, how longe shall

stand: vntil the cities be utterly without inhabitours, and y houses without men, all the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnburyed. For the LORDE shal take the men far awaye, so that the londe shal lye waste. Nevertheless, the tenth parte shal remayne therein, for it shal conuerte and be frute full. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Okerrees bunge forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.

The seuenth Chapter.

It happened in the tyme of Ahas the sonne of Ionathas, which was the sonne of Joathan kynge of Iuda: that Rezin the kynge of Siria, and Poca Romelesonne, kynge of Israel: wente vp to ward Jerusalem to besedge it (but wanne it not). Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his hartequed (yee and y herres also of his people) like as a rie in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mere Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Jasub) at the heade of y ouer pole, in the fore path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thyself and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyrebrandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelesonne: because that the kynge of Siria Ephraim and Romelesonne haue wickedly conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vnto the, and bringe them vnder vs, and set a kynge there. euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saeth the LORDE God thereto, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head cite of y Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threescore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chiefe cite of Ephraim is Samana, but the head of Samaria is Romelesonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.

Moreover, God spake vnto Ahas, sayen. I requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depe, beneth or towarde y hight above. The sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not enough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of himself. Beholde, a virgin shal conceaue and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emmanuel. Butter and hony shal he cate, y he maye knowe the enel, and chose y good. But ouer that childe come to knowlege, reedhne the enel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so asfayde for) shalbe decclate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vnto thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme y Ephraim departed from Iuda) thore w y kynge of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whisle for the flyes y are aboute the water of Egypte, and for y Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in y vountes of stone, vpon all grene thynges, and in all comers.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shane the hayre of the heade and the fere and the beard cleue of, with the rasoure that he shal paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kynge of the Assirians. At the same tyme shal a man lye with a corve, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundance of mylk, he shal make butter and eat it. So that every one which remaineth in the londe, shal cate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluer linges) shalbe turned to briers and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arrows and bowes, so shal all the londe become briers and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are heuenedowne, thou shalt not come vnto them, for feare of briers and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viii Chapter.

Where the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: Orias the prest, and Zacharias y sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had concealed and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maher schal hafchbas, that is: a speedier robber, an hastie spoyle. For why, ouer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and y substance of Samaria be take awaye, thore w the kynge of y Assirians.

The x. Chap. Fo. v.

B The LORDE spake also unto me, sayenge: for so much as the people refuse the still running water of Silo, and put their belite in Rezin and Remelies some: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water upon them: namely, y kyng of the Assirians with all his power.
Which shal poure out his fury vnto euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes.
And shal breate in vpon Iuda, increasynge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe w his brode wynges, O Emmanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, hearken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, yet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prosper. Excepte Emmanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and tokeme by y hon-de, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walke in the waye of this peple. He sayde moreover: rounde wth none of the, who so ever saye: yonder people are bounde together. Neuertheles feare them not, necher be a frayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifyinge, and stone to stomble at, y rock to fall vpon,
a snare and net to both the houses: to Irael, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stumbe, fall, and be broke vpon him: yee they shal be shamed and taken.

D Now laye the witness together (sayde the LORDE) and seale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Jacob, and I loke vnto him. But lo, as forme, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Irael, for the LORDE of hostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therfore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soothsayers, widders, charmers and conurers, then make them this answere: Is there a people enywhere, that asketh not counsel at his God: whether it be concernynge the dead, or the lyuynge?
Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stumblith and suffreth hunger.
And yf he suffreth hunger, he is out of pacience, and blasphemeth his kyng and his God. Then loke he vwarde, and dow-ne warde to the earth, and beholde, there is trouble and darcknesse, vexacion is rooude aboute him, and the cloude of erroure And out of soch aduersite, shal he not escape.

The ix. Chapter

Well sene, that y londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nephtali (where thow the see waye goeth ouer Iordane in to the l-de of Galilee) was at the first in litle trouble, but after ward sore vexed.

Neuertheles y people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwelin the londe of the shade we of death, vpon them shal the light shine. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in harvest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breate the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and therof of his oppresseure, as in y daye at Massah.

Moreover all temerarious and sedicious power (ye where there is but a cote flywtkloude) shal be burnt, and fede the sm-ke. For vnto us a childe shalte borne, and to us a sonne shalte geue. Vpon his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shal be callid w his owne name: The wondrous geue of counsel, the mightie God, the everlastinge father, the prynce of peace, he shal make ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal sit vpon the seate of Dauid and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to stablish it with equyte and righteuousnesse, from thence forth for encremore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hostes bringe to passe.

The LORDE sent a worde into Iacob, the same is come in to Irael. All the peple also of Ephraim, and they that dwelt in Samarita, can saye with pryde and hystomakes, on this maner: The tyle wordes fallen downe, but we will buyde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ystten, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemye agaynst the, and so dre their aduersaries, that y Syrians shal lye holde vpon them before, and the phistynes behynde, and so denunce Irael wth open mouth.

After all this, the wrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shal be stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether

do they seke the LORDE of hostes. Therfore the LORDE shal rote out of Irael both heede and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heede, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by y tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceainers.
Soch as men thynke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

Therfore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge men, necher fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For they are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake fely. After all this shal not the LORDEs wrath cease, but yet his honde shal be stretched out still. For the ragedly burne, as a fyre in the briers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wode or a redbush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal y wrath of the LOR-DE of hostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shal be consumed, as it were with fy-re, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal same, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Every man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal ea-te Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this
shal not the LORDEs wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The tenth chapter.

Go vnto you y make vnrightheous lawes, and deuyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: where thow the poore are oppressed, on euery syde, and the in-nocentes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wydowes maye be your praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitacion and destruction, that shal come from farre: To whom will ye reuene for helpe: or to whom will ye geue your honoure, that he maye kepe it: that ye come not amonge the prisoners, or lye amonge the dead? After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

Go be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punishment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypocritish poeple, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfauour: I shal send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanynge is not so, necher thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye much people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as ea-sie to wynde, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynde the kyngdome of the Idolaters and their gobbes, but not Ierusalem and Samaria.

Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and the ir ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone
as I haue performed my whole worde vpon the hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: the will I also visyte the noble and stouthe kyng of Assiria, with his wysdome and pry-
de. For he stondeyth thus in his owne coceate: This do I, thow the power of myne owne honde, and thow my wysdome: For I am wysse, I am he that remoue the lon-des of the people, I robbe their prynces:
and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath foun-de out the hostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were lay-de here and there, are gathered together:
So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, y darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whisper.

But doth the axe boast itself, agaynst him y heweth therewith, or doth the sawe make eny frakinge, agaynst him that ri-leth it? That were euen like, as yf the reddyde exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though y staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. Therfore shal the LORDE of hostes sende him po-uerie in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. But the light of Irael shal be y fyre, and his Sanctuary shal-be the flame, and it shal kynde, and burne vp his thornes and briers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and felde shal-be consumed with body and soule. As for himself, he shal be as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shal be of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

After y daye shal the remnaunt of Irael, and soch as are escaped out of the honse of Jacob, seke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal comforte themselves with faithfulnessse and treuth in the LOR-

Moreover the LORD of hostes shall pre- pare a scourge for him, like as was the pu- nyshment of Madiā vpon y^e mount of Oreb. And he shall lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd sometye ouer the Egipcians. Their shall his burthen be taken from thy shul- ders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the sa- me yock shall corrupte for very farnesse. He shall come to Aiath, and go thowward toward Nitron. But at Machmas shall he muster his hoste, and go ouer y^e foorde. Gaba shall be their resting place, Abuma shall be a fra- yde, Gaba Saul shall flee away. The voy- ce of y^e noyse of thy houses (o daughter Gal- lim) shall be herde vnto lais and to Ana- thoth, which alio shall be in trouble. Mad- mena shall tremble for feare, but the citie of Sabin are many, yet shall he remayne at Tobehar daye. After that, shall he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and a- gainst the hill of Jerusalem. But se, the LORD God of hostes shall take awaye the prou- de from thence, w^{ch} feare. He shall hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shall be rooted out w^{ch} yion, and Libanus shall haue a mightie fall.

After this there shall come a rod forth of y^e synnede of Jesse, and a blossome out of his rote. The spere of the LORD shall light vpon it: the spere of wysdome, and vnderfoundinge: the spere of counsell, and strength: y^e spere of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shall make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shall not gene sentence, after the thinge y^e shall be brought before his eyes, nether repone a matter at the first hearinge: but with righteousness shall he iudge the poore, and with holynes shall herefourme the symple of the worlde. He shall smyte y^e wolde with y^e staff of his mouth, and with y^e breath of his mouth shall he slaye the wicked. Righteousnesse shall be the gyrdle of his loynes, truth and faithfulness the gyrdinge vp of his rap- nes. The shall y^e wolfe dwell with the labe, and the leopard shall lye downe by the go- te. Bullokes, lyons and catel shall kepe com- pany together, so that a litle childe shall dryue them forth. The cowe and the Doe shall fede together, and their yongones shall lye together. The lye shall eate strawe like the ore, or the corne. The childe whyle he sucketh, shall haue a desyre to the serpent nest, and whe he is weened, he shall put his hande in to the Cockatrice denne. No man shall do enel to another, no man shall destruy another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth shall be ful of y^e knowlege of y^e LORD, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shall the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Jesse (which shall be set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shall be glorious. At the same tyme shall the LORD take in honde agayne, to conque- y^e remnant of his people (which are lefte alyne) from the Assirians, Egipcians, Ara- bians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, An- tiochians and Iddes of the see. And he shall set vp a rote amonge the Gentiles, and ga- ther together y^e dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Juda from the foure cor- ners of y^e worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and y^e enmyte of Juda shall be cleue rooted out. Ephraim shall beare no enel wile to Ju- da, and Juda shall not hate Ephraim: but they both together shall flye vpon the shul- ders of the philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell to- ward the East. The Ioumytes and the Moabites shall let their hodes fall, and the Ammonites shall be obedient vnto them.

The LORD also shall cleue the tuniges of the Egipcians see, and with a mightie wynde shall he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shall smyte his fenē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shall he make a waye for his people, y^e remayneth from the Assirians, like as it happened to y^e Is- raelites, what tyme they departed out of the lande of Egypte.

wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. Beholde, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not a frayde. For the LORD God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shall be my re- fuge. Therefore with ioye shall ye drawe wa- ter out of the welles of the Sauoure, and then shall ye saye: Let vs gene thankea vnto the lorde, and call vpon his name, and de- clare his counsels amonge the people, and de- pte them in remembraunce, for his name is exal- led. O synge praises vnto the LORD, for he doth greates thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greates is thy pun- ar the holy one of Israel.

The xiii. Chapter.

This is y^e heuy burthe of Babilō, which Esay the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some rote to the hie hills, call vnto them, holde vp youre hode, that the prynces maye go in at the doore. For I will sende for my de- lices and my gyautes (sayeth the LORD) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as cry- myn in my glory.

With that, me thought I herde in the mountaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greates people: and a russhinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come to- gether. (And the LORD of hostes was the captaigne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauens: Eue- the LORD himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lode. Mour- ne therefore, for the daye of the LORD is at honde, and cometh as a destroyer from y^e allmyghty. Then shall all bondes be letten downe, and all mens herres shall melt awaie, they shall stonde in feare, carefulesse and so- rowe shall come vpon them, and they shall ha- be payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. One shall eue be abashed of ano- ther, and their faces shall burne like y^e flame.

For o, the daye of the LORD shall co- me, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the lande waiste, and to root out the synners thereof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shall not gene their light, the Sonne shall be quenched in the rysinge, and the Mo- ne shall not shyne with his light. And I wil punyssh the wickednesse of the worlde, and the synners of the vngodly, sayeth the LORD. The byestomackes of the proude will I ta- ke awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of cyrautes. I will make a man deare the- sine golde, and a man to be more worth, the a golden wedge of Ophir. Moreover, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shall remo- out of hir place.

Thus shall it go w^{ch} Babilon, in the wrath of the LORD of hostes in y^e daye of his fearfull indignacio. And Babilon shall be as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke w^{ch} out a shepherde. Every mā shall turne to his owne people, and fle echone into his owne lon- de. Who so is founde alone, shall be shot thro- row: And who so gather together, shall be des- troyed w^{ch} the swerde. Their children shall be slayne before their eyes, their houses spoy- led, and their wyues rauyned. For lo, I shall bringe vp y^e Medes agaynst the, which shall not regarde syluer, nor be desyrons of golde. Then shall yonge mens bowes be knapped asunder. The Medes shall haue no pitie vpon womē w^{ch} childe, and their faces shall not spare y^e childe. And Babilō (y^e glory of kyngdomes and bertie of the Caldees hono-) shall be des- troyed, eue as God destroyed Sodom and Go- mora. It shall neuer be more inhabited, ne- ther shall there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

Gen. 19. e

The Arabians shall make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wybe bestes shall lie there, and y^e houses shall be full of greates Oules. Estriches shall dwell there, and Apes shall daunce there: The litle Oules shall crie in the palaces, one after another, and Draggos shall be in the pleasaunt perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, and hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The xiiii. Chapter.

But y^e LORD will be mercysfull vnto Ia- cob, and will take vp Israel agayne, and set the in their owne lode. Strangers shall cle- ne vnto the, and get the to y^e house of Jacob. They shall take y^e people, and cary the home w^{ch} the. And y^e horse of Israel shall haue the in possession, for seruautes and maydes in y^e lode of y^e LORD. They shall take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: and rule those, y^e had oppressed the. When y^e LORD now shall bringe y^e to rest, fro y^e trauayle, fea- re, and harde bondage y^e thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon y^e kinge of Babilon, and saye: How happeneth it y^e y^e oppressour leaueth of? It y^e golden tri- bute come to an ende? Doubtes the LORD hath broken the staff of the vngodly, and the cepter of y^e lordly. Which whe he is wroth, smyteth y^e people w^{ch} durable strokes, and in his wroth he persecuteth the, and tamereth the coti- nually. And therefore y^e whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, and men synge for ioye.

Bec even the fyne trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now & thou art layde downe, there come no mo vp to destroye vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge, All mightie men and prynces of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vp fro their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we: art thou become like vnto vs: Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: No thes shalbe layde vnder the, & wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

LUC. 10. c

AP. 9. u. d

CHow art thou fallen from heauen (o Lucifer thou faire morninge childe: hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that not withstandinge) dydest subdue the people: And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I will clymme vp in to heauen, and make my seate aboue the starres of God, I will syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I will clymme vp aboue the clondes, & will be like the highest of all. Therefore I saye, & thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. They that se the, shal narrowly loke vpon the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made & kingdomes afraide: Is this he that made the wolde in a maner wast, & and layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his pusoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, every one at home in his owne palace, with worshippe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are short thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead carse that is treden vnder fete: and art not buried w them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lode, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without hono, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childre, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fyll the wolde ful of castles and townes.

DI wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hostes) and root out & name and generacion of Babilon (saith the LORDE) & wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water podels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruccion, sayeth the LORDE of hostes. The LORDE of hostes hath sworne an ooth, sayenge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: & shalbe fulfilled as I haue denyed. The Assyrians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder foot. Wher thorow his yocke shal come from you, & his burthen shalbe taken from youre shulders. This deuoyce hath God taken thorow the whole wolde, and thus is his honde stretched out ouer all people. For yf the LORDE of hostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysnulle it? And yf he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

The same yere that kyng Achas dyd, God threathened by Esay on this maner: Reioyse not thou whole Palestina (as though & rod of him & beatech the were broken: for out of & serpentes rote, there shal wexe a bratice, & the frute shalbe a fyne worne. And the poore shal fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. Thy rem wil I destroye w hunger, and it shal slay & remnaunt. Mourne ye portes, wepe ye clowes. And feare thou o whole Palestina: for thou shal come fro the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall mainteyne the messages of the Gentyles? But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the power of my people shal put their trust in him.

The xv. Chapter.

This is & heuy burthen vpon Moab: Arise Moab was destroyed (as methought) in the night season: The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanisshed awaye. They were to Baith and Dibon in the hie place: for to wepe Moab did mourne fro Medba: All their heades were colled, and their bearded shauen. In their stretes they gyded aboute with sack cloth. In the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and weping. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Jahaz. The worthies of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moab sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a sayre fruteful bullock, they went to Lubbich, wepinge. The waye toward Hironaim was ful of lamentacion for & hant. The waters of Nimrim were dreyed up, & grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed: what necessary grene thinge there was left. In like maner the thinge & was left of their substance, they carried it by waye of Arabie. The crie went ouer the whole land of Moab: from Eglaïm vnto Beer, and there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of blonde, for & me had sent thither a bonde of man, & as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them y were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

Insent the lordes of the lode a man of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion: For as for the daughter of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byde, y is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon: which messenger sayde: gather youre counceyl, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chafed, & bewaie not the that are fled, let the persecuted dwell amonge you, be our open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppresseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyrant dryeth vs out of oure londe. But yf Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it w faitfulnesse & treuth in the house of David, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly: accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs prynces (shal they answer) it is wel knowne. And all though they be excellent, prynces, arrogant, & hemynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therfore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now yf they be smytten, they take their deuoyce by the bryck wall, and make their complaynt.

The suburbs also of Hesebon were made wast, & the prynces of the Gentyles bewed downe y vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spied vnto Jazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their felmes forth beyonde the see. Therfore I mourne for Jazer, & for y vynyardes of Sibma of greates sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their harvest & gatheringe of their grapes: Allynch and chere was gone out of y felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sunge. There were no reuerber into the wynepresse, their meryche was layde downe. Wherfore my bely robbled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, & myne inward members, for the bryck wall. So it happened thus also: when Moab sawe that she was turned vpon syde downe, she went vpon an hie in to hir sanctuary to make hir prayer there, but she myght not & helpe. This is the deuoyce, which the LORDE made in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In three yere shal y power of Moab w their pope (which is greate) be munched, like as y burthe of an hyred seruaunt: And as for y remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not refened moch worth.

The xvij. Chapter.

This is the heuy burthe vpon Damascus: Beholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe wast. The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye the awaye. Ephraim shal no more be stroge, & Damascus shal no more be a kingdome. And as for y glory of y remnaunt of y Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childre of Israel, saith y LORDE of hostes. At that tyme also shal y glory of Jacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to the, as when one sheareth in harness, which curteth his handful w the sickle, & when one gathereth y sheaves together in the valley, of Rephaïm, there remayneth yet some ears ouer. Or as when one sheareth an elyue tre, which syndeth but two or three olyue beries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

And shal not turne to the altars that are y worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaves & ymages, which his fingers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once y forsake plowes & come, which they forsake, for feare of y children of Israel.

4. Re. 7. b

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God y Samion re, & hast not called to remembraunce y rock of thy strength, Wherfore thou hast also set a sayre plāte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thy fete: But in the daye of harvest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that rush in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like grente waters. For though son any people increasc as the flowinge waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hie, and as the whyle wynde thorow a stone. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with the, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

See all ye y^e hie in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpo^s the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the home bloweth, then hearken to, for thus hath y^e LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde me downe, and pondred the matter in my houle, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in harvest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grene. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the bumes and the braunches, & dyd cast the awaye. And thus they were layde waiste, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for y^e bestes of the earth together. So y^e the foules sat ther vpon, and the bestes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is the this: y^e desperate and pyllod folke (whose lande is deuoyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

And the goddes of Egypte shal trymble at his comynge, and the hert of Egypte shal quake within her. For thus saith the LORDE: I wil stere vp the Egyptians one agaynst a nother amonge them selues, so that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neighbour, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egypte shalbe choked in hir self. Whe they are counsel at their goddes, at their prophetes, at their soothsayers and witches: then will I bunge their counsel to naught.

awaye. Rede and rush shal fayle, the gras se by the waters syde or vpon y^e ryuers bankes, yee and what so euer is sowne by the waters, shalberwythered, destroyed, & brought to naught. The fyshers shal mourne, all soch as cast angles in the water, shalcomplayne, & they that spiede their nettes in the water, shalbe saynt harted. Soch as laboure vpon flax & sylcke, shal come to pouerte, & they also that weue fyne woikes. All the poundes of Egypte, all the policie of their Moates & ditches shal come to naught.

See the vndiscere prynces of Zoan, the counsel of the wyse Senacours of Pharaos, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast & saye of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people, I am come of y^e olde regall progeny. But here are now thy wyse men? Let them tel the & shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egypte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, & proude are the prynces of Moph: yee they dysceane Egypte with the nobilitie of the stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egypte dionck with the spere of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: enclike as a dionck ma goeth spewing aboute. For Egypte shal lacke good counsel, so y^e they shal not knowe what to do, nether begynnynge nor ende, nether vpon the lode nor water. The shal y^e Egyptians be like vnto wem, a frayde & affriced, at the lifteinge vp of the hode, which y^e LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp over them.

The lande of Iuda also shal make the Egyptians a frayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that is cause of the counsel, which y^e LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyne cities of Egypte speake with the naanites tange, and sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, & Helio polis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an alter in the myddest of the lode of Egypte, with this tittle ther by: I am the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testamny vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the lande of Egypte, when they shal crye vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that shal sende them a captayne and a Sauter to deliuer them.

Moreover, Egypte shalbe bought of the LORDE, and the Egyptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reverence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promise him offringes, yee & paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal synce Egypte, & heale it agaynst shal they turne to y^e LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpo^s them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egypte into Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egypte, and the Egyptians in to Assiria. The Egyptians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egypte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blessed is my people of the Egyptians, Assur is the worke of my hodes, but Israel is myne inheritaunce.

The xx. Chapter.

A The same yeare that Sarchan came to Aschod, where Sargé the kinge of the Assirians sent him, what tyme as he also be frid Aschod, & wane it y^e same season: The spake the LORDE vnto Esaye y^e sonne of Amos, sayenge: go and lowse of y^e sack cloth fro thy loynes, and put of y^e shues from thy feet. And so he dyd, goinge naked & barefoote. Then sayde the LORDE: where as my seruante Esaye goeth naked and barefoote, it is a token and signifieng of the thinge, that after thre yeare shal come vpo^s Egypte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefoote, out of Egypte and Ethiopia, And shal dyscouer y^e shame of Egypte. They shalbe also at their witte ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egyptians of the Morians, and the Morians of the Egyptians, at the sight of the glory.

Moreover they that dwell in y^e Isles shal saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is our hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be deliuered from the kinge of y^e Assirians. How will we escape?

The xxi. Chapter.

A This is the heuy burthen of the waiste fec: A greuous visio was shewed vnto me, like as when a stomie of wynde and rayne rufsheth in from the wyldernes, that terrible lande. Who so maye dysceane (sayde the voyce) let him dysceane: Who so maye dystroye, let him dystroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. With this, the raynes of my backe were full of payne: Panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir transyle. When I herde it, I was abasshed: and whe I looked vp, I was as frayde. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

ye captaynes, take you to youre shyldes, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchman, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whe he had wayted diligently, he sawe two hoismen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the yon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With y^e came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: Babilon is fallen, she is turned vpsyde downe, and all y^e ymages of hir goddes are smytten to y^e grounde. This (o my felowes throschers and sanners) haue I herde of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the waye toward Dedanum. Mere the thurstie with water, (o ye citifens of Tema) mere those with bried that are fled. For they shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawe swerde, from the ber bowe, and from the greute batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: ouer a yeare shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the of fice of an hyred seruante goeth out: And, the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, shalbe very fewe. For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

The heuy burthen, apon the valley of Vision.

What hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppe, o thou cite of miracles, sedicious and willfull: seunge, thy slayne me are nether killed wth swerde, ner deed in batell? For all thy captaynes gat them to their houses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaned y^e, I sayde: a waye fro me, y^e I maye wepe bitterly. Take no labour for to cofoite me, as touchinge the destruction of my people. For this is y^e daye of the LORDE of hoostes, wherein he will plage, treade downe, and wa be out the valley of Visids, and breake downe the walles, with such a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

B I sawe the Elamites take the quyners to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnessse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coueringe of Iuda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the cymbrie house. There shal ye see the riftes in the walles of the cite of Dauid, wherof there shal be many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Ierusalem, and breake of some of the reape of walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwixt the two yne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal the LORD of hostes cal me to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulness, slaughter oxen, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, and drynke wyne: let vs eate and drinke, tomorrow we shal die. Neuertheless whē the LORD of hostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shal be remitted, ye must die for it. This hath the LORD God of hostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORD God of hostes: Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? and from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORD shal cast the out by violence, he will decke the of another fashion, and put vpon the a strange clothe. He shal carie y into a farre countre, like a ball with his handes. There shal thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charrettes haue an ende: thou wyllayne of the house of thy LORD: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruaunt Eliakim, y sonne of Helkiah, and araye him with thy cote, and gyde him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shal be a father of the citisens of Ierusalem, and of the kynred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shut, and yf he do shut, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulnessse, and he shal be vpon the glorious throne of his fathers house. They shal hage vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childen, all apparel small and great, all instruments of measure and musike. This shal come to passe, (saith the LORD of hostes) when the nale, y is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulnessse: shal be plucked of. And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peeces. For the LORD himself hath sayde it.

The xxij. Chapter.

N Henry burthen vpon Tirus. Mourn ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is thowne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The dwellers of the Ilandes, the marchauntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the sea (of whom thou wast ful some tyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of all people. Sidon is sory for it, yee and all y power of the see complaneth, and saith: O y I had neuer trauelled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, y I had nether nourished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egypte perceaueth it, she wil be as sory as Tirus it self. Go over the see, Mourn ye y dwell in the Isles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite, whose natyues dwellinge farre of, comende her so greatly? Who hath deuysed such thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of salates, whose marchauntes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? Quē the LORD of hostes hath deuysed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and diminish all the glory of the worlde. Go thou w thy londe (o thou doughter of the see) as men go over the water, and there is not a gyde more.

Thus the LORD that remoneth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out: hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrrh (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethes. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enimie wil carie the, wherethou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample) The Caldees were such a people, that no man was like them, Assur buylded them: set vp his castles and palaces, and brokethem downe agayne. And therfore mourn (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shal be thowne downe.

The prophet Esay.

After that, shal the lxx yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kynges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happen to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the cite, thou art yet an vnknowne wench, make pastyme with dyuerse ballettes, wherby, thou mayest come into acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. The LORD shal visit the cite of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hy Marchaundise, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiege and wynnynge, shal be halowed vnto the LORD. For then shal they laye vpon nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaundise of Tirus shal beloge vnto the citisens of the LORD, to the feedinge and sustenynge of the hūgrie, and to the clothynge of the aged.

The xxij. Chapter.

Behold, y LORD shal waiste and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, and scatre abroad y inhabitours therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that ledeyth vpon vsury, like him y boroweth vpon vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal y worlde be waisted and clene destroyed. For y LORD hath so determed in himself. The earth shal be heuye and decaye: The face of y earth shal perishe and fal awaye, the proude people of y worlde shal come to naught, for y earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why they haue offended y lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerglastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therfore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they y dwell therin, haue synned. wherfore they shal be hient also, and those that remayne, shal be very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shal be weake, and all y haue bene meety in harte, shal sighe. The myrrh of tabrettes shal be layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrrh, the beer shal be hytter to the that drinke it, the wicked citis shal be broken downe, all houses shal be shut, that no man maye come in.

In the stretes shal there be lift vp a crie because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the citis, and the gates shal be smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smytech downe y olyues, y are left vpon the tre: or sekerth after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, and shal magnifie the glory of the LORD, euen from the see, and prayse the name of the LORD God of Israel, in the valeis and Ilandes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the righteuous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therfore I must speake: O my vnfruitfulnessse, o my pouerte, woe is me, all is ful of synners, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shal be takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shal be opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a fore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stagger like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Her misdeeds shal lie so heuye vpon her, y she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORD mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and y kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shal be coupled together as prisoners be, and shal be shut in o one warde and punished innumerable daies. The Moone and the Sonne shal be ashamed, when the LORD of hostes shal rule them at Ierusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent counsel.

The xxv. Chapter

G LORD, thou art my God, I wil pray se the, and magnifie y name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thine olde counceles, truly and stedfastly. Thou makest of towynes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the cite, that they shal neuer be buylded agayne. Therfore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the citis of the cruel helthen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strength for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euil wether, a shadowe agaynst the heate. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a stronge whylle roynde, that casteth downe the boostynge of the vngodly, thou kepest man from heate with the shadowe of the clowdes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrantes.

Moreover the LORD of hostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpon the hill: A

plenteous, costly, pleasant feast, of fat and welfed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Upon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale & hageth before y face of al people, and the cowering wherewith all Gentiles are conered. As for death, he shal utterly consume it. The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusio of his people thorow y whole worlde. For y LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in to whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse & delyte in his health. For the hōde of y LORDE ceaseth vpon this hyl. But Moab shal be troddē downe vnder him, like as the straw is troddē vnder fere in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swimme. And wth the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes & hie walles: he shal buwe them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in dust.

The xxvj. Chapter.

Then shal this songe be sunge in the londe of Juda: We haue a strōge citie, the walles & t^{he} ordinance shal kepe vs. Ope y gates, y the good people maye go in, which labourerth for the treuth. And thou, which art the doer and hast the matter in honde: shalt prouyde for peace, eue the peace y mē hope for in the. Hope stil in the LORDE, for in the LORDE God is everlastinge strength. For why, it is he, y^e bringerth lowe the hie mynded citisyns, & casteth downe the proude citis. He casteth thē to the grounde, yee euen in to y myre, y they maye be troddē vnder the fere of the symple, & with the steppes of the poore. Thou (LORDE) cōsidreth the path of y rightuous, whether it be right, whether the waye of y rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, chy name and chy remēbraunce reioyse the soule. My soule lusterth after the all the night lōge, & my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse.

But the vngodly (though he haue recouered grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, & feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they wil not se thine hie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whē thou shalt deuoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine eemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: for thou workest in vs all o^{ur} works. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue domination vpon vs as knowe not the yet graunte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembraunce. The malicious Tyrautes whē they die, are rather in lifenor in the resurrection, for thou wilt rest thē and roostest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increasest the people (O LORDE), thou increasest the people, thou shalt be prayed and magnified in all y endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, the same aduersite which they complaine of is vnto thē a chastenyng before the. Like as a wife wth childe (whē hir trauayle cometh vpon her) is ashamed, crieth and suffreth payne: Eue so are we (O LORDE) in thy sight. We are with childe, we trauayle, & beare, & with the spiete we bringe forth health, wherethorow the earth is vnderstroyed, and the inhabitours of the worlde perish not.

But as for thy dead men and ours, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, & haue ioye for y dew is a dew of life & light. But y place of the malicious Tyrautes is falle awaye. So go now my people in to thy chāce, and shut the doore to the, and suffre now y twicklinge of an eye, till the wrath be overpast. For behold, the LORDE wil go out of his habitacion, & vyseth the wickednes of thē that dwell vpon earth. He wil discover the bloude that she hath deuoured, she shal neuer hyde thē, that she hath murdered.

The xxvij. Chapter.

Then the LORDE with his henye, great and lōgest wearde shal vyseth Leuiathā, that invincible serpet: eue Leuiathā y crooked serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in y sea. At the same tyme shal mē synge of the vmynde of M^{ic}h^{ael}. The LORDE kepe it, and water it in due season. I watch daye & night, that no man breake in to it. I beare no eard wil in my mynde. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all saichfulnesse, shal de burne it vp at once wth thornes & bushes? Or who wil enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, y Jacob shal be rooted againe, and Israhel shal be grene & beare floures, & they shal fyll y whole worlde wth their frute. Smyteth he not his smyter, as eue as he is smyttē himself? Destroyerth he not y murderers, as he is murdered? Every mā recōpenseth wth y measure y he receaueth: He museth vpon his souer-tye, as vpon the dayes of extreme heate. And therefore shal the inquite of Jacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all y frute of his synnes.

As for aulter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groves and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge citis shal be desolate, and y sayre citis shal be left like a wilderness. The catel shal fede and lye there, and the shepe shal care it vp. Their harvest shal be brent, their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shal be defyled. For it is a people without vnderstōdinge, and therefore he y created them, shal not fauoure them: and he y made them, shal not be merciful to thē. In y tyme shal y LORDE shute frem y swifte water of Euphrates, vnto y ryuer of Egipte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greete trouper be blowen, so that those which haue been destroyed in the Assirians londe, and those which be scattered abroad in Egipte: shal come & worshipe the LORDE at Jerusale, vpon the holy mount.

The xxvij. Chapter.

God be to y crowne of pryde, to y dronken Ephraemites, and to the saydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, y is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: which mē be ouerladen wth wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on every syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foot. And as for the saydinge floure, the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the harvest come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

And then shal the LORDE of hoostes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlāde vnto the remnant of his people. Vnto the lowly, he shal be a spiete of iudgment, and vnto them that dryue awaye the enemies frem y gates, he shal be a spiete of strength. But they go wronge by y reason of wyne, they fall and stacter because of strōge drynke. Receue the prestes and prophetes them selues no amisse, they are dronken with wyne, and weake brained thorow stronge drynke. They erre in semge, and in iudgment they faile. For all tables are so ful of vomyte and

filthynges, y no place is cleane. What is he amonge them, y can teach, instructe or enfourme the childre, which are weened frem suck or taken frem the brestes: of eny other fashion, then: Commaunde y maye be commaunded, byd y maye be byddē, for byd that maye be for byddē, kepe backe y maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle. And therfore the LORDE also shal speake wth lippinge lippes and wth a straunge langage vnto this people, to whom he spake afore of this manner: This shal bunge rest, yf one refresheth the weery, y e this shal bunge rest. But they had no will to heare. And therefore the LORDE shal answer their stubbournes (Commaunde y maye be commaunded, byd y maye be bydden, for byd y maye be for byddē, kepe backe y maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle) That they maye go forth, fall backwarde, be buised, shared and taken. Wherefore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDEs people, which is at Jerusale. For ye cōfōrte yo^u selues thus: Tush, death & we are at a poynte, & as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plague, it shal not come vpon vs. For with disceate wil we escape, and with hymenies will we defende o^u selues. Therefore thus saierth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will laye a stone in Sion, a greete stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundacion: y who so putterth his trust in him, shal not be confounded. Rightuousnes wil I set vp agayne in y balauce, and iudgment in the weightes. The creepst of hale shal take awaye yo^u refuge, that ye haue to disceate withal, and y overflowinge waters shal breake downe yo^u strōge holdes of dissimulation. Thus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made wth death, shal be done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, shal not stōde. When the greete destruction goeth thorow, it shal all to treade you, It shal take you quyte awaye before it. For it shal go forth early in the mornynge, and contynue only y daye and y night. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For y bidde shal be so narrow y a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the cowering to small, that a mā maye not wynde him self therein. For the LORDE shal steppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount Perazim, and shal take on as he dyd vpon the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his dewyce, his straunge dewyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worke. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiuitie increase not: for I ha-

ne herde the LORDE of hoostes saye, that there shal come a soden destruction and plague vpon the whole earth. Take hede, and he are my voyce, pondre and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the hus bonde man euer in due season earnestly to his londe: he moweth & ploweth his grounde to sowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he soweth it with fitches or comyn. He soweth yf wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye also in their place. And yf he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and styereth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he throsf lyeth yf fitches out with a fiale, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bried therof. In as moch as he can not bunge it to passe wth treadinge out. For nether the blussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hoostes which is maruelous in counceyl, and gre are in righteuousnesse. The xxx. Chap.

W vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that David wāne. Take yet some yeaeres, and let some feastes yet passe ouer: then shal Ariel be beseged, so that she shal be heuy and so rousful, and shal be vnto me euen as a lyon. For I wil laye sege to the rounde aboute, and kepe yf in wicheuwers, and grane vp dykes agaynst yf. And thou shalt be brought lowe, and speake out of the earth, and thy wordes shal go humbly out of yf grounde. Thy voyce shal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge shal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies shalbe like mealdust. And the nombre of Tyanttes shalbe as yf dust that the wynde taketh awaye sodenly.

Thou shalt be visited of the LORDE of hoostes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greace crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempest, and with the flame of a confusynge fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynst Ariel: the whole hooste, the stronge holdes, and sege is like a dreame which appeareth in the night. It is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge like as when a thurstie man dreameth that he is drinkynge, and when he awaketh, he is saynt, and his soule vnpatient.

Psal. 75. c

So is the multitude of all people, that mustre them selues agaynst the hill of Sion. But ye shalbe at youre wittes ende, ye shalbe abashed: ye shal stacke and relete and fro. Ye shalbe dronken, but not of wyne. Ye shal fall, but not thorow dronkenne. For the LORDE shal geue you an hard sleepinge spere, and holde downe youre eyes: namely yf prophetes and heades which shulde se, them shal he couer. And all visons shalbe vnto you, as the wordes that stonde in a sealed lectre, when one offeth it to a man that is lerned, and sayeth vnto vs this lectre. The he answereth: I ca not rede it, for it is shutt. But yf it be geue to one yf is not lerned, or sayde vnto him: rede this lectre: Then sayeth he. I can not rede.

Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: for so moch as this people draweth ny me wth their mouth, and prayserth me highly wth their lippes (where as there herte neuertheles is farre fro me, and the feare which they owe vnto me, that turne they to mens lawes and doctrynes) therefore wil I also shewe vnto this people, a maruelous terrible and greate thinge (namely this): I wil destroye the wisdom of their wise, and the understandinge of their lerned men shal perish. Wo be vnto them that seke so depe, to hyde their ymaginacion be fore the LORDE, which rehearce their counceils in yf darkness, and saye: who seith vs, or who knoweth vs?

Which ymaginacion of yours is euene as when the potters claye taketh aduysment, as though the worke might saye to yf wth master: make me not, or as when an earthen vessel saith of the potters: he vnderstandeth not. Se ye not that it is hard by, that Libanus shalbe turned in to Charnel, and that Charnel shalbe taken as a wodde? Then shal deaf men vnderstande the wordes of the boke, and the eyes of the blinde shal se without eny cloude or darkness. The oppressed shal holde a mery feast in the LORDE, and the poore people shal reioyse in the holy one of Israel.

Then shal the furious people cease, and yf mockers shal be put awaye, and all they yf do wronge shalbe rooted out, soch as labour to drawe me vnto synne: and yf disauent him, which reprocureth them in the gate, & soch as turne good personnes to vauers.

And therefore the LORDE (euen the defender of Abraham) saith thus vnto the house of Jacob: Now shal not Jacob be ashamed, nor his face cofounded, when he seith amonge his children (whom my bondes haue made) soch as halowe my name amonge them: that they maye sanctifie the holy one of Jacob, and feare the God of Israel.

rael: and that they which afore tyme were of an erroneous spere, haue now vnderstandinge, and yf soch as before coude not speake, are now lerned in my lawe.

The xxx. Chapter.

W be to those shrekinge childien (saye with the LORDE) which seke counceyl, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not a ferer my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe into Egipte, (and are me no counceyl) to see helpe at the power of Pharaos, and conforte in the shadowe of the Egiptians. But Pharaos helpe shalbe youre cofucion, and the conforte in the Egiptians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Your rulers haue bene at Zoan, and yf messaungers came vnto Zanes. But ye shal all be ashamed of the people yf maye not helpe you, which shal not bunge you strength or conforte, but shame and confucion.

Your beastes haue borne burthens vpon their backs towarde the South, thorow the waye that is ful of parell and trouble, because of the lyō and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shuryng dragon. See the Mules bare youre substaince, and the Camels brought yf treasure vpon their croked backs, vnto a people that can not helpe you. For the Egiptians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therefore I tolde you also yf youre pryde shulde haue an ende. Wherefore go hece, and write them this in their tables, and note it in a booke: that it maye remayne by their posterite, and be stil keppe. For it is an obstinate people, vnfaithful childien, childien that wil not heare the lawe of the LORDE.

They darre saye to the prophetes: Intro mitte youre selues with nothinge, and vnto yf Soyceblayers: tell us of nothinge for to come, but speake frendly wordes vnto vs, and preach vs false thinges. Treade out of the waye, go out of the path, turne the holy one of Israel from vs. Therefore thus saith the holy one of Israel: In as moch as ye haue cast of youre bewtie, and conforted youre selues with power and nymblenesse, and put youre confidence therein: therfore shal ye haue this myschefe agayne for youre destruction and fall, like as an hie wall, that falleth because of some rift (or blast) whose breakinge cometh sodenly.

And youre destruction shalbe like as an arthe pot, which breaketh no man touchinge it, yee and breaketh so sore, that a man shal not fynde a sheuer of it to fetch fyre in, or to take water with all out of the pyt. For the LORDE God, euen the holy one of Israel hath promised thus: With siltittinge and rest shal ye be healed, In quyetnesse and hope shal youre strength lie. Not with stondunge ye regarde it not, but ye will saie: No, for thus are we coftrayned to fle vpon hoyses. (And therfore shal ye fle) we must ryde vpon swift beastes, and therfore youre persecutours shal yet be swifter. A thousand of you shal fle for one, or at the most for syue, which do but only geue you euell wordes: vntil ye be desolate, as a ship mast vpon an hie mountayne, and as a beate vpon an hill.

Yet stonderth the LORDE waitinge, that he maye haue mercy vpon you, and listerth him self vp, that he maye receaue you to grace. For the LORDE God is righteuous. Zappie are all thei that wate for him. For thus (o thou people of Sion and ye citisens of Jerusalem) shal ye neuer be in benynes, for doubtlesse he will haue mercy vpon the. As soone as he heareth the voyce of thy crie, he will helpe the. The LORDE geureth you the bried of aduersite, and the water of trouble. But thine instructor sleych not farre from the, yf thine eyes loke vnto thine instructor, and thine eares harken to his worde, that crieth after the and saith: This is the waye, go this, and turne nether to the right honde nor the lefte.

Moreover yf ye destroye the syluer wortes of youre Idols, and cast awaye the golden coapes that ye decke them withall (as sylthynes) and saie, get you hence: The wil he geue rayne to the sede, that ye shal sowe in the earth, and geue you breade of the increase of the earth, so that all shalbe plentifulous and abundaunt. In that daye shal the LORDE bynde vpon yf buffed sores of his people, and heale thei woundes. Beholde, the glory of the LORDE shal come from farre, his face shal burne, that no man shalbe able to abyde it, his lippes shal wagge for very indignacion, and his tounge shal be as a consumynge fyre. But ye shal synge, as the vs is in y^e night of the holy solemnite. Ye shal reioyse from youre hert, as they that come with the pipe, when they go vp to the mount of the LORDE, vnto y^e rock of Israel. The LORDE also shal set vp the power of his voyce, and declare his terrible arme, with his angrie countenance, yee and the flame of the consuming fyre, with earth quake, tempest of wynde, and hale stones. Then shal the Assirian feare also, because of the voyce of the LORDE, which shal smyte him with the rodde. And the same rodde which the LORDE wil sende vpon him, shal moue the whole foundation: with trompet, with noyse of warre and batell to destroye. For he hath prepared the fyre of payne from the begynnyng, yee euen for kynge also. This hath he made depe & wyde, y^e nouthinge therof is fyre and wodde innumerable, which the breath of the LORDE kyndleth, as it were a match of brymstone.

The xxxi. Chapter.

WOnto them that go downe in to Egypte for helpe, and trust in horses, and conforte them selues in Charettes, because they be many, and in horse me because they be lustie and stronge. But they regarde not the holy one of Israel, and they aske no question at the LORDE. Where as he neuer theles plagerth y^e wicked, and yet goeth not from his worde, whā he steppeth forth and taketh the victory agaynst the householde of the frauwerde, and agaynst the helpe of euil doers. Now the Egyptians are men, and not God, and their horses fleshy and net spiete. And as soone as the LORDE stretcheth out his honde, then shal the helper fall, and he that shulde haue bene helped, and shal altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: Like as the Lyon or lyōs whelpers arech vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though y^e multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Like as bydes floure aboute their nestes, so shal the LORDE of hostes kepe, saue, defende and deliue Jerusalem. Therefore (o ye childre of Israel turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in y^e daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of silver and golde, which ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shal be slayne with the swerde, not wth a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, but not a mans swerde. And he shal sle from the slaughter, and his seruantes shal be taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge hold, and his prynces shal sle from his badge. This hath y^e LORDE spokē, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Jerusalem.

The xxxii. Chapter.

Behold, the kinge shal gouerne as a rule of rightuousnes, and y^e prynces shal rule accordinge to the balaunce of equite. He shal be vnto me, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ruuer of water in a thurstie place, and y^e shadowe of a greater rock in a due lode. The eyes of the kinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligent heed. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparfite tūge shal speake plainly and distinctly. Then shal they garde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlish mynded, and his hert wil worke euill and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abhominacions agaynst God, to make the hungrye leane, and to withholde drinke from the thurstie: These are the perious weapons of the curvetous, these be his shamefull counailes that he maye begyle the poore with deceitful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. But the liberrall person ymagineth honest chinges, and cometh vp with honesty.

Up (ye rich and ydle cities), harten vnto my voyce. Ye careles cities, marcke my wordes. After yeaeres and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye carelesse cities. For earnest shal be out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, y^e that feare no parell, ye shalte abashed and removed: when ye se the barrenesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knocke vpon youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the frutefull vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bunge thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes & in the cities, wilfulnes. The palaces also shal be broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towres and bulwerkes shal be becme dennes for cormore, the pleasure of Mules shal be turned to pasture for shepe. Vnto the tyme that y^e spiete be poured vpon vs from above.

Then shal the wilderness be a frutefull

felde & the plenteous felde shal be rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwel in the deserte, and rightuousnesse in a frutefull londe. And the rewarde of rightuousnesse shal be peace, and hir frute rest and quiernes for ever. And my people shal dwel in the ymes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in the all. And whē the hale fulleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the cite. O how happy shal ye be, whē ye shal safely sowe youre seede besyde all waters & drye thither the fete of youre oxen & asses.

The xxxii. Chapter.

Therfore wo vnto the (robber) shalt not be robbed also: and vnto the that laiest wait, as who saye there shulde no waite be layde for the: Wo vnto the which doest hurt, euen so shalt thou be hurt also. And as thou layest waite, so shal wait be layde for the also.

LORDE be merciful vnto vs, we wait for the. Thine arme is at a poynte to vyset vs, but be thou our health in the tyme of trouble. Graunte that the people maye sle at the anger of thy voyce, & that at thy vpsondinge the Gentiles maye be scattered abroad, and that their spoyle maye be gathered, as the greshoppers are comonly gathered together in the pye. Seconde vpon LORDE, thou that dwellest on hie: Let Sion be fylled with equyte and rightuousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulness be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdom, knowlege & the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their aunghels crie with out, the messangers of peace wepe bitterly. The stretes are waite, there walke no man therein, the appoyntmen is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heynes. Libanus taketh hit but for a spoite, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basan & Charnel are turned vpside downe. And therefore saith y^e LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I aryse. Ye shal conceaue stubble, and beare strawe, & youre spiere shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: & the people shal be burnt like lyme, & as thornes burne that are hewen of, & cast in the fyre.

Now herten to (ye that are farre of, how I do with them, & considre my glory, y^e that be at honde. The synners at Sion are a frayde, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypocrites. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumynge fyre? which of vs maye abyde that everlastinge beate? he that ledeth a godly life (saye I) & speaketh the treuth: he that abhorreth to toure? what of him that teacheth childre? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tūge, to haue so diffused a language, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued.

His eyes shal se the kyng in his glory: & in the wyde world, and his herte shal deliue in the feare of God. What shal then become of the scribe? of the Sena- C. 1. Cor. 1.1

There shal Sion be sene, the head cite of eue solemne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Jerusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue, whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amonge vs. In that place (where saye broaderyntes & streames are) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greace shippe sale. ner. The LORDE shal be oure kinge, & he himself shal be oure sauoure. There are the coardes solayd abroad, that they can not be better: The mast set vp of soch a fashion, that no banner ner sale hageth therō: but there is dealed greace spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saith: I am sicke, but all euil is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

Come ye heithen & heare, take hede ye people. Herte thou earth & all that is therein: thou rounde compass & al that groweth ther vpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, & his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, & to slaye them. So that their slayne shal be cast out, & their bodies stincke: that eue the very hills shal be wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shal be consumed, & the heauen shal folde together like a roll, & all the starres therof shal fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and sygetrees. For my swerde (saith he) shal be bathed in heauen, & shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeance.

of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shall kyl a great offryng in Bosta, and in the lon de of Idumea. There shall the Unicomes fall with the Bulles, (that is with the gi antres) and their londe shall be washed with bloude, and their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shall come the daye of the vengeance of God, and the ye are when as thyne owne iudgements shall be recompensed. Thy floudes shall be turned to pyrch, and thine earth to brimstone, and therewith shall the londe be kyndled, so that it shall not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, and so forth to lie waist. And no man shall go thow thy londe for ever: But pellicanes, Scorkes, great Oules, and Ravens shall haue it in possession, and dwell therein.

For God shall spiede out the lyne of deso lacion vpon it, and weye it with the stones of empyres. When Kinges are called vpo, the re shall benone, and all princes shall be a wa ye. Thornes shall growe in their palaces, nettles and thistles in their stronge holdes, and the dragons maye haue their pleasure there in, and that they maye be a couite for Estriches. There shall straunge visures and mon struous beastes mete one another, and the wyl de bepe company together. There shall the lamia lye, and haue hir lodginge. There shall the hedghogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bunge forth his yongeones. The re shall the eyes come together, ech one to his life.

Seke thorow the scripture of the LORDE and rede it. There shall none of these thinges be left out, there shall not one (ner soch) like) sayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his spiete gather together (or fulfiller). Vpon whom so ever y lot fall et, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shall possesse the enheritaunce from ge neration to generacion, and dwel therein.

The xxx. Chapter.

Of the deserte and wilbernesse shall re ioyse, y waist grounde shall be glad, and flourish as the lilly. She shall flourish pleasantly, and be ioyful, and euer be ge uynge of thanks more and more. For y glo ry of libanus, the bewty of Charnel and Sarō shall be geuen her. These shall knowe the ho noure of the LORDE, and the magesty of ou re God. And therefore strength y weake ho des, and conforte the feble knees. Saye vn to them that are of a fearful hert: Be of go od chere, and feare not. Beholde: your God cometh, to take vengeance and to rewarde. God cometh his owne self, and wil deliuer you. Then shall the eyes of the blinde be lig hened, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shall the lame man leape as an hart, and the domme mas tige shall gene thanta.

In the wilbernesse also there shall welles spunge, and floudes of water in the desart. The drie grounde shall turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to spunges of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shall growe su re floures and grene rishes. There shall be footpathes and comon stretes, this shall be cal led the holy waye. No vnclene person shall go thow it, for the LORDE himself shall go with the that waye, and the ignorant shall not erre. There shall be no lyon, and no ray shinge beast shall come therein nor be ther, but men shall go there fre and safe. And the redemed of the LORDE shall conuerte, and co me to Sion with thankes geuynge. Last of tinge ioye shall they haue, pleasure and glad nes se shall be amonge them, And as for all fow and beynes, it shall vanish awaye.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

In the xliij. yere of Kinge Ezechias, Scame Sennacherib Kinge of the Assi rians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the Kinge of the Assi rians sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Je rusalem, agaynst Kinge Ezechias, with agn ous hooite, which set him by the condite of the ouer pole, in the waye that goeth the row y fullers lode. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim Ezechias sonne the pr sydent, Sobna the scribe, and Joab Asapha sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Td Ezechias, that the greates Kinge of Assi rians sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto: Thou thinkest (peraduenture) that thou hast counel power ynough, to mayntene this warre: els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thyself of fro me: lo, Thou puttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede (I meane Egipte) which he hath leane th vpon, it goeth in to his honde and shute th him thow. Ezechias is pharao the Kinge of Egipte, vnto all the that trust in him. But yf thou woldest say to me: We trust in y LORDE oure God: A godly god, in dede: whose hie places and altars Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Jerusalem, to worshippe only be re the altar. houses: Art thou able to set me there vp? Singe now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest pryncer that my LORDE hath, how darrest thou trust in y charettes and horse men of Egipte: Moreover, thinkest thou y I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDEs will: The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna and Johah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstande it well: And speake not to vs in the Jewes tunge, lest the folke hea re, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answer ed Rabsaches: Thinke ye, y the Kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you: Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpo the wall: that they be not compelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, and cried with a londe voyce in the Jewes tige, and sayde: Take hede, how the greates Kinge of the Assi rians geue th you warnynge. Thus saith the Kinge: Let not Ezechias disceane you, for he shall not be able to deliuer you. Moreover, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saith: The LORDE with out dou te shall defende vs, and shall not geue ouer this citie to the bondes of the Kinge of the Assi rians, beleue him not. But thus saith the Kinge of Assiria: opteyne my sauoure, encline to me: Somaye euery man enioye his vynyardes and figgetrees, and drinke the water of his ci tate: vnto the tyme that I come myself, and bunge you in to a londe, y is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both so we with fede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceane you, when he sayeth vnto you: The LORDE shall deliuer us.

Mighte the goddes of the Gentiles kepe any mans londe, from the power of the Kinge of the Assi rians: Wher is the God of he math and Arphad: Wher is the God of Sephamaim: And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde: Or which of all the goddes of the lodes, hath deliuered the citie out of my power, so that the LOR DE shulde deliuer Jerusalem fro my honde: Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde the it tanges, and answered not one worde: for the Kinge had charged them, that they shul be geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Ezechias sonne the presidet, Sobna the scribe, and Joab Asapha sonne the Secre tary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, and tol de him the wordes of Rabsaches.

The xxxvii. Chapter.

When Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, and put on a sack cloth, and went in to the temple of the LOR DE. But he sent Eliachim the presidet, Sob na the scribe and the eldest priestes clooded in sack, vnto the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, and they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of pla gez of wraich: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bunge it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lord y Kinge of the Assi rians hath sent, to besiege and blasphemethe lyuynge God: with soch wordes, as the LOR DE y God hath herde right well. And ther fore lift vp y prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of Kinge Eze chias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto your lord: thus saith the LOR DE: Be not a frayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherewith the Kinge of Assi rians seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shall go agayne in to his countre, there will I destroye him with the swerde. Lors when Rabsaches returned, he founde y Kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstande, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came ar moure, y Taracha Kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the Kinge of Assiria herde y, he sent other messaungers to Kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thna to Ezechias Kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceane the, in whom thou hopest, and sayest: Jerusalem shall not be geue in to the bondes of the Kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the Kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, and ha pest thou to escape: Were the people of the Gentiles (whom my progenitours conquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow their goddes? As namely, Bozan, Haran, Rezech, and the childe of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the Kinge of Hemath, and the Kinge of Arphad, and the Kinge of the cite Sepha naim, Ena and Aua: Now when Ezechias had receaued y lettre of the messaungers, and red it, he went vp in to the house of the LOR DE, and opened the lettre before y LOR DE. And Ezechias prayed before the LOR DE on this maner: O LORDE of hostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vpo Cherubin. Thou Encline thine eare LORDE z cōsider, open thine eyes (o LORDE), z se, and pondre all the wordes of Sennacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blasphemethe, the lyuynge God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all king domes z londes, z cast their goddes in the fy re. Notwithstōdinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therefore haue they destroyed them. De lyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, y all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art y LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saith y LOR DE God of Israel: Where as thou hast ma de thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Senna cherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, z mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Jeru salem. But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, z exalted thy proude lokes? even agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blas phemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thy self: I couerthe hiemountaynes, z sy des of Libanus with my hoisinen. And the re wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees z the sayrest fyre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it z in to the chesell of his timber woddess. If there be no water, I wil graue z drynke. That same wil I do now also: waite, destroye, z bunge the stronge cities vnto hea pes of stones. For their inhabitours shal be li ke lame men, brought in feare z confounded. And soch of the house of Juda as are sca ped, shal come together, and the remnant shal take rote bench, z bunge forth frutes a boue. For the escaped shal go out of Jerusa le, z the remnanee from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bunge to passe. Therfore thus sa ieth the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: he shall not come in to the cite, and shal shute no arrowe in to it, there shal no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue a bout it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this cite, saith the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the cite (saith he) for myne owne, z for my sa uante Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, and slew of the Assirians hooste, an cccc. thousand. And when men arose vpearly (at Jerusa le:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians bu te vp, and dwelt at Ninue. Afterwarde it chaunced, as he prayed in the Temple of Ne rah his god, that Adramalech and Saraya his owne sonnes slewe him with the swea de, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxviiij. Chapter.

Not longe afore this, was Ezechias de ad sick: And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne hor se in ordie, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face to ward the wall, z prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I ha ue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue donethe thinge that is plea saunte to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Th sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy fa ther sendeth y this worde: I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeares mo vnto thy life, and deli uer the and the cite also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the a te. And take the this token of the LORDE, y he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Achas Diall, y now is layed out with the Sonne, and bunge it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgynge, which Ezechias kin ge of Juda wrote, when he had bene sicke, z was recovered.

The prophet Esay.

I thought I shulde haue gone to the ga tes of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde. Myne age is folden vp together and ta ken awaye from me, like a sheperdes cotage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weener cutteth of his webbe.

Why I was yet takinge my rest, he he wed me of: z made an ende of me in one daie. I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he bussed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then charged I like a swallowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a dove.

I lift vp myne eyes in to y high: O LOR DE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou swartie for me.

What shal I speake or say, et that he maye this doo: y I maye lyue out all my yeares, y in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytter nes, z all my life must I passe ouer therein: for thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wil be wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cōuersacion hath so plea sed y, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my syn nes behynder thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, deatch doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe into the graue, pra yse not thy treuth: but the lyuynge, yee the ly uynge acknowlege the, like as I do this da ye. The father telleth his children of thy fa ithfulnesse.

Deliyer vs (o LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the soie, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thin ge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxix. Chapter.

At the same tyme Merodach Baladā, Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he understode, how that he had bene sicke, z was recovered agayne. And Ezechias was glad therof, z shewed them the comodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyces z rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cabbowdes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, z so chorow out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Then came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue y men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answered: All that is in myne house, haue they sene: and there is no thinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Under stōde the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Be holde, the tyme wil come, that every thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy pro genitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shal be caried to Babilon, and nothin ge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shal be caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne councel, which thou hast tolde me. So sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulnesse in my tyme.

The xl. Chapter.

Of good chere my people, be of go od chere (saith youre God) Conforte Jerusalem, and tell her: that hir tra uale is at an ende, that hir offence is pardo ned, that she hath receaved of the LORDEs honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth: Prepare y waye for the LOR DE in the wyldernes, make straight y path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valles be exalted, and every mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne feldez. For the glory of the LORDE shal appeare, z all flesh shal se it, for why, y mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake: Now crie. And I sayde: what shal I crie? Then spake it: that, all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie the rof, is as the floure of the felde. When the grasse is wythered, the floure falleth awa ye. Even so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. Neuertheles whether the grasse wyther, or the floure fade awaye: Yet the worde of oure God endureth for euer. Morouer the voyce cried thus: Go vp vnto the hill (o Si on) thou that bringest good tidinges, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Je rusalem. Lift it vp without feare, and say vnto the cities of Juda: Beholde, youre God: Eze. xiiij.

Eze. xiiij.

The prophet Esay.

Beholde, the LORD, even the almighty, shall come with power, and beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shall feed his flock like an herdsman. He shall gather the lambs together with his arme, and carrie them in his bosome, and shall kindly intreate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heaven with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of y^e world in thre fingers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? Who hath reformed the mynde of the LORD? Or who is of his counsell to teach him? At whom hath he asked counsell, to make him understoode, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to instructe him in the waye of understandinge? Beholde, all people are in comparisoun of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge of the balauce weyeth. Beholde, y^e Iles are in comparisoun of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficient to minstre fyre for his offeringe, and all the bestes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparisoun of him, are rekened, as nothinge, yee vayne vanite and emptynesse.

To whom then will ye liken God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shall the carner make him a carued ymage? and shall the goldsmith couer him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Moreover shall the ymage maker (y^e the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) sette out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, y^e mooueth not? Nowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnyng? haue ye not bene enformed of this, sence the foundation of y^e earth was layde: That he syteth vpon the Circle of the worlde, and that all the inhabitants of the worlde are in comparisoun of him, but as greshoppers: That he spredeth out the heauens as a coueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowne a gayne, neither their stocke rooted a gayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither and fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

To whom now will ye liken me, and whom shall I be like, saith the holyone? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and confide. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. For there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Jacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye: My wayes are hye from the LORD, and my God knoweth me of my iudgements. Knowest thou not, hast thou not herde, that the everlastinge God, the LORD which made all the corners of the earth, is neither weery nor saynt, and that his wisdom can not be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the saynt? Children are weery and saynt, and the strongest men fall. But vnto them that haue the LORD before their eyes, shall strength be increased, Angles wynges shall growe vpon them: When they runne, they shall not fall: and when they go, they shall not be weery.

The xli. Chapter.

Still (ye I Ioudes) and hearken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp y^e iuste from the rynging of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the Kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the grounde with his swearde, and scateth them like stubble with his bowe? He soloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnyng? Euen I the LORD, which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Every man hath exorted his neghbour, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder, and the Ironsmith the hammerman, sayenge: It shall be good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nailes, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruant: Jacob my electe seide of Abrahā my beloued, when I led from the endes of the earth by the hande: For I called the from farre, and saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruant: I have chosen the, and will not cast y^e awaye: be not afraid, for I will be with y^e. Take not behinde y^e, for I will be thy God, to strength y^e, helpe y^e, and to kepe y^e with this right hande of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shall come to confusion and shame: and thine aduersaries shall be destroyed and brought to naught. So that who so seeketh after them, shall not fynde them. Thy destroyers shall perish, and so shall they that vndertake to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORD and God, will strength thy right hande. Euen I that saye vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afraid thou little woman Jacob, and thou despyed Israel: For I will helpe the, saith the LORD, and the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I will make the a treadinge cart, and a newe sleale, y^e thou mayest chrosse the grynne the mountaynes, and bringe the hilles to pouder. Thou shalt sanne them, and the wynde shall carie them awaye, and the whyll wynde shall scateth the. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORD, and shalt delite in prayseing the holyone of Israel.

When the thurstie and poore seeke water and fynde none, and when their tounge is drie of thurst: I geue it them, saith the LORD. I the God of Israel forsakethem not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, and welles in the playne feldes. I turne y^e wilderness to ryuers, and the drie lande to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Dore, Myre and olyues. And in the drie, I set fyre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, y^e they altogether maye feare and marcke, perceauing with their herres, and confiding: that the hande of the LORD maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at your cause (saith the LORD) and bringe forth youre strongest grounde, counceyleth the Kinge of Jacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges y^e are past, what they be: let the declare the vnto vs, y^e we maye take them to herte, and knowe them hereafter. Either, let the shewe vs thinges so to come, and tel vs what shall be done hereafter: so shall we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege y^e same, and tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, and y^e makinge is of naught, but abomination hath chosen you. Nevertheless I haue waked vpon one from the North, and he shall come. And another from the East, which shall call vpon my name, and shall come to the princes, as the Potter to his claye, and as y^e Potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde y^e afore? So wil we confesse and saye, that he is righteous. But there is none that sheweth or declarerh any thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I will first graunte the of Sion and Ierusalem to be Euangelistes. But when I cōsider there is not one amonge the y^e prophetieth, neither (when I axe him) y^e answereth one worde. Lo, wicked are they and vayne, with the thinges also that they take in honde: yee wynde are they, and emptynesse, with their ymages together.

The xlii. Chapter.

Beholde now therefore, this is my seruant whom I will kepe to my self: my electe, In whom my soule shall be pacified. I will geue him my spere, that he maye shewe forth iudgment and equitye amonge the Gentiles. He shall not be an outcrier, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in y^e stretes. A brissed rede shall he not breake, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: but faithfully and truly shall he geue iudgment. He shall neither be ouersene ner hastie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: and the Gentiles also shall kepe his lawes. For thus saith God the LORD vnto him: (Euen he that made the heauens, and spied them abrode, and set forth the earth with hir encrease: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, and to them that dwel therein) I the LORD haue called y^e in rightuousnesse, and led the by the hande. Therefore wil I also defende the, and geue the for a couenaunt of the people, and to be the light of the Gentiles. That thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, and them that sit in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORD, which geue my power to none other, neither myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new thinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

Synge therefore vnto the LORD, a newe songe of chākes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, and all that is therein, prayse him, the Iles and they that dwell in them. Let the wilderness with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that sit vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie de woe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORD, and magnifyinge him amonge the Gentiles. The LORD shall come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fleshy man of warre. He shall roare and crie, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saith the LORD) shulde I therefore be still, and kepe sylence for ever? I will crie like a trauelinge woman, and once wil I destroye, and denouere. I wil make wast both mountayne and hill, and die vpon every grene thinge, that groweth thereon. I wil die vpon the floudes of water, and drinke vpon the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde into a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fote path, that they are ignorant in. I shal make darknesse light before the, and the thinge y is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, and not forget them. And therefore let them conuerter, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, and saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

The prophet Esay.

Isa. 44. b

Heare, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre sightes to se (o ye blinde.) But who is blynder, the my seruante? Or so deaf, as my messengers, whom I sent vnto them: for who is so blynde as my people, and they y haue the rule of thein? They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moche, and keptest nothinge: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. The LORDE be merciful vnto them for his righteousnesse sake, that his worde might be magnified and praysed. But it is a myscheuous and wicked people. Their yonge men belonge all to the snare, and shal be shut in to prison houses. They shal be caried awaye captiue and no man shal loose them. They shal be trode vnder foote, and no man shal laboure to bringe the agayne. But who is he amonge you, yf pondereth this in his mynde, yf considereth it, and taketh it for a warnynge in tyme to come?

Isa. 42. a
Isa. 43. a

Who suffred Jacob to be trodden vnder foote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the LORDE? Now haue we synned agaynst him, and haue had no delite to walke in his wayes, nether bene obedient vnto his lawe. Therefore hath he poured vpon vs his wroothful displeasure, and stroge batell, which maketh vs haue to do on euery syde, yet will we not vnderstande: he burneth vs vp, yet syncketh it not in to oure hartes.

The xliij. Chapter.

Now the LORDE that made the (o Jacob) and he that fashioned the (o Israel) saith thus: Feare not, for I will defende y. I haue called y by thy name, thou art myne owne. When thou wentest in the water, I was by the, that the stroge floudes shulde not plucke y awaye: When thou walkest in the fyre, it shal not burne y, and the flame shal not kinde vpon the. For I am the LORDE thy God, the holy one of Israel, thy Sauoure. I gaue Egypte for y deliuerance, the Moyses and the Sabees for the: because thou wast deare in my sight, and because I set by the, and loued the, I paled all men for the, and deliuered vpon all people for thy sake, that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy side from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: for the haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

Bring forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shal declare soch thinges, and tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witness, so shal they be fre: for the men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesses (saith the LORDE) even those that are my seruantes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithfull credence: yee and coofidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer any God, and that there shal be none after me. I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauoure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shal be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnyng, and there is none, that can take any thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man chaunge.

Thus saith the LORDE the holy one of Israel your redeemer: For youre sake I wil sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boast them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE your holy one which haue made Israel, and am your Kinge. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, and a fote path in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charrettes and horses, the hooftes and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarden nothinge that is past. Therefore beholde, I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shal it appeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agayne.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and gers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshipp me: the dragon, and the Estrich. For I shal geue water in y wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drinke to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Jacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vnlust towarde me, o Israel. Thou ganest me not thy yonge beastes for burnt offrings, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourest the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. Therefore I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrings, nether greuous in Incense.

But thou hast labored me with thy synnes, and wearied me with thy vngodlynes: Whereas I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selves sake do awaye thine offences, and forget thy synnes: for that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembraunce (for we will reason together) and shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. Therefore I ether suspended, or slewe the chiefe prynces: I dyd curse Jacob, and gaue Israel into reproche.

The xliij. Chapter.

Hear now, o Jacob my seruante, and Israel whom I haue chose. For thus saith the LORDE, that made the, fashioned the, and helped he, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not a frayde (o Jacob my seruante,) thou righteous, whom I haue chosen. For I shal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the thurstie. I shal poure my sperte vpon thi side, and myne encrease vpon thy stocke. They shal giue together, like as the grassee, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDE. Another wil call vnder the name of Jacob. The thirde shal subscribe with his honde vnto y LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

Moreover, thus hath the LORDE spoken: I menthe Kinge of Israel, and his avenger, y LORDE of hooftes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that ener was like me, which am from everlastinge: Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be likened vnto me. Let him tell you forth plainly thinges, that are past and forto come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euertolde you hyther to, and warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God except me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seing they can nether seer nor vnderstande) they shal be confounded. Who shulde now make a god, or fashion an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felashippe of the must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smith taketh yron, and tempreth it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, and maketh it w all the strength of his armes: Yet somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymber, and spredeth forth his lyne: he maketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, and squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and accordinge to the beuie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Moreover, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: he bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymber of the wodd. Or els the Syre trees which he planted himself, and such as the rayne hath swelled, which wodd serueth for me to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself with hall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bread. And afterwarde maketh a god there of, to honoure it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roseth flesh, that he maye eat: roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: deliuer me, for thou art my god.

Yet men nether consider ner vnderstande, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not see: and their hertes, that they can not perceaue. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstandinge) to thinke thus: I haue bred one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bread w y coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten pece of wodd? The keepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not Jerre?

Considre this (o Jacob and Israel) for thou art my seruaunt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I drye them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne y agayne vnto me, & I will deliuer y.

Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all y is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & wooddes, with all the trees that are in you: for y LORDE shal redeme Jacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, even he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges myself alone. I only haue spied out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I de stroye the tokens of witches, and make the Soothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turnethem backward, and make their counnyng folishnesse.

But I set vpon the purpose of my seruantes, and fulfille the counsel of my messagers. I saye to Ierusalem: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repaye their decayed places. I saye to the groundes: be drie. And I drie vpon thy water floudes. I saye to Cirus: thou art myne hyrd man, so that he shal fulfill all thinges after my will. I saye to Ierusalem: be thou buylded, and to the temple: be thou fast grounded.

The xlv. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE vnto Cirus his anoynted, whom he ledeth by y right hō: be: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyidle of thynges, y they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their doores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straighte. I shal breake the brasen doores, & burst the yron barres. I shal geue thee the hyd treasure, & the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, y the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Jacob my seruaunt sake, & for Israel my chesen. For I called the by y name, and ordened the, or ever thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, before whom there is none other, for w out me there is no God. I haue prepared the, or ever thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risinge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. For I am the LORDE, & there is els none. It is I created the light and darcknes, I make pece and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all thes thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne righte ousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal righte ousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal brynge it to passe.

Wo be vnto him that chydeth w his ma ter, the potsherde with the potter. Saith y claye to the potter: What makest thou: why worke serueth for nothinge: Wo be vnto him, y saith to his father: why begetteth thou: And to his mother: why bearest thou: Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one & maker of Israel: Are me of thinges for to come, concernyng my sonnes: and put me in remembrance, as touchyng the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created it vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooftcher of. I shal wake him vp w righte ousnesse, and ordie all his wayes. I shal buyde my cite, & let out my pisonar: that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hooftes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Mooryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shal bethine, they shal sold we the, and go with cheynes vpon their feet. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God w out whō there is none other God shal be with the. O how piousounde art thou o God, thou God? Sauoure of Israel: Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all y that be workmasters of erroure (that is worshippers of Idols) But I shal be saved in the LORDE, which is the everlastinge saluaciō: They shal not come to shame nor confucion, woude without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE: euen he that created heauen, the God y made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken scally, nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I saye vnto the fide of Jacob: sike me. I am the LORDE, which wh I speake, declare the thinge that is righte us and true. Let the be gathered & com together, let the drawe nye hyther, y are

ped of the people: haue they any vnderstandinge, that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that ca not helpe the: Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ad aske counsel one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge? haue not y LORDE done it: without whom there is none other God: the true God and saul our, and there is els none but I? And therfore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saved, for I am God, & there is els none. I sweare by myself: out of my mouth cometh y worde of righte ousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me, and all tynge shal sweate by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is mynghe ousnes and strength. To him shal me come: but all they that thinke scome of him, shal be confounded. And the whole sede of Israel shal be iustified, & praysed in y LORDE.

The xlvj. Chapter.

Yeretheles Bel shal fall, & Labō shal be broken: whose ymages are a burthe for the beastes and catell, to overlade the, and to make them wery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therfore must they go in to captiuyte.

Herken vnto me, o house of Jacob, and all y that remayne yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue bome from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from y byrth, till ye were grown: I y which shal deare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I wil also nourish you, beare you and saue you. Whom wil ye make me like, in fastiing or ymage, that I maye be like him? Ye soles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hye a golde mych to make a god of it, that men maye knede downe and worshiipe it. Yet must he be taken on mens shulders and bome, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and deliuereth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Considre this will, and be ashamed, Go into youre owne selues (o ye runnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, sence the begynnynge of the worlde: that I am God, and that there is els no God, yee and y there is nothinge like vnto me. Heare me, o ye that are of an hie stomack, but farre from righte ousnesse. I shal brynge forth my righte ousnesse. It is not farre, and my health shal not tarry longe a waye. I wil laye health in Sis, and geue Israel my glory.

The xlvij. Chapter.

But as for the O daughter, thou virgin Babilon: thou shalt sit in the dust. Thou shalt sit vpon the groude, and not in arr one (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasat. Thou shalt brynge forth the querne, & grynde meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. Thy shame shal be discovered, ad thy pruyties shal be sene. For I wil avenge me of the, and no man shal let me: saith our redemer, which is called the LORDE of hostes, the holy one of Israel.

Sit still, holde thy tynge, and get the in to some darcke corner (O daughter Caldea) for thou shalt nomore be called lady of kyngdomes. I was so wroth with my people, y I punished myne inheritaunce, and gaue them in to thy power. Neuertheles, thou shewdest them no mercy, but euen the very aged men of the, didest thou oppresse right sore with thy yock, & thou thoughtest thus: I shal be lady for euer. And besyde all that, thou hast net regarded these thinges, nether cast, what shulde come after.

Heare now therfore, thou wilful, that syttest so carelesse, & speakest thus in thine herce: I am alone, and without me is there none: I shal neuer be wydow, ner desolate agayne. And yet both these thiges shal come to the vpon one daye in the twinklinge of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolacion. They shal mightely fall vpon the, for y multitude of thy witches, and for the greates heape of thy coniuers. For thou hast comforted thy self in thy disceatfulness, and hast sayde: I am alone, and without me is there none. Therfore shal trouble come vpon y, & thou shalt not knowe, from whence it shal arise. Alas these shal fall vpon y, which thou shalt not be able to put of. A sodane misery shal come vpon the, or ever thou be awarre.

The prophet Esay.

Now go to thy coniuers, and to the multitude of thy witches, (whom thou hast bene acquainted withal from thy youth) yf they maye helpe the, or strengthe the. Thou hast hither to had many counsels of them, so let the heauengasers & the beholders of starres, come on now and deliuer the: yee and let the shewe, when these new thinges shall come vpon the. Beholde, they shalbe like strawe, which yf it be kindled with fyre, no man maye rydde it for the vehemence of the flame: And yet it geneth no zynders to warme a mā by, ner cleare fyre to syt by. Euen so shal they be vnto the, whom thou hast vsed & occupied from thy youth. Every one shal shewe yf his erroneous waye, yet shall none of them defende the.

The xliij. Chapter.

Hare this, O thou house of Jacob: ye yf are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of one stocke wth Juda: which sweare by the name of the LORDE, and beare witness by the God of Israel (but not wth treuth and right) wh^{ch} are called flemens of the holy cite, as they that loke for conforth in the God of Israel, whose name is the LORDE of hostes.

The thinges that I shewed you euer sence the begynnyng: have I not brought the to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them? And they are come: howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I have euer sence the begynnyng shewed the of thinges for to come, and declared the vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Idol hath done it, my carned or cast ymage hath shewed it. Ye are & conside all these thinges, whether it was y^e that prophesied the: But as for me, I tolde the before at the begynnyng, new & secret thinges, y^e then knewest not of: And some done now not of olde time, wherof thou neuer herdest, before they were brought to passe: that thou canst not saye: I knewe of them. Moreover there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether have they bene opened vnto thine cares afore tyme. For I knewe that thou wouldest maliciously offende, therfore have I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I have withdrawen my wrath, and for myne honours sake I have oversene the, so that I have not rooted the out. Beholde I have poured the, and not for moneye. I have chosen

I am euen he that is, I am y^e first and the last. My honde is the foundacion of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called the they were there. Gather you all together, & herten: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon, (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme? I my self alone have tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thi ge dardly sence the begynnyng? whē a thi ge begynneth, I am there.

Wherfore the LORDE God with his spirit hath sent me, And thus saith the LORDE thine avenger, the holy one of Israel: I am y^e LORDE thy God, which teach the profane thinges, and lede y^e the waye, that thou shuldest go. If thou wilt now regarde my commandement, thy welchynes shalbe as the waters flowinge in the see. Thy fede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the granel stones therof. Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and scape the Caldees with a mery voyce. Thy shalbe spoken of, declared abroad, & go forth vnto the ende of the world: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Jacob, that they suffred no thurst, wh^{ch} they traualled in the wilderness. He claueth the rockes a sonde, and the water gussheth out. As for the vngodly, they have no peace, saith the LORDE.

MESSIAS

The xliij. Chapter.

Herken vnto me, ye Iles, and take heed ye people from farre: The LORDE hath led me fro my byrth, and made me a cion of my name fro my mothers wobe: he hath made my mouth like a sharpe swerde, vnder y^e shadowe of his honde hath he defended me, and hyd me in his quyer, as a good arrowe, and sayde vnto me: Thou art my seruante Israel, I wil be honoured in the. Then answered I: I shal lese my labour, I shal spende my strength in vayne. Neuertheles, I wil commend my cause and my worke vnto the LORDE my God. And now saith the LORDE wh^{ch} he that fashioned me fro my mothers wombe to be his seruante, that I maye bringe I ab agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne. In whose sight I am greace, which also is my LORDE, my God and my strength. Let it be but a final thinge, that thou art my seruante, to set vp the kinredde of Jacob, & to restore the desolacions of Israel: yf I make the not also the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my health vnto the ende of the world.

Moreover thus saith the LORDE the avenger and holy one of Israel, because of the abhoringe and despisinge amonge the Gentiles, concernyng the seruante of all them y^e beare rule: Kynges and prynces shal se, and asse and worshipec, because of the LORDE that he is faithfull: and because of the holy one of Israel, which hath chosen the.

And thus saith the LORDE: In the tyme appointed wil I be present with the. And in the houre of health wil I helpe the, & deliuer the. I wil make the a pledge for y^e people, so y^e thou shalte helpe vpon the earth agayne, and chalenge agayne the scattered heretages: That thou mayest saye to y^e prisoners: go forth, & to them that are in darknesse: come into the light, that they maye fede in the hye wayes, & get their lynnge in all places.

There shal nether hunger ner thirste, heate nor Sonne hurte them. For he that fauoureth them, shal lede them, and geue them drike of the springe welles. I will make wayes vpon all my mountaynes, and my fore pathes shalbe exalted. And beholde, they shal come from farre: lo, some from the north and west, some from the south. Reioyse ye heauens, and synge prayses thou earth: Talke of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cofort his people, & haue mercy vpon his, y^e be in trouble.

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me. Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, ad the some wh^{ch} she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the. Beholde, I have written the vp vpon my handes, thy walles are euer in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waste, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them to gather, and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE) thou shalt put them all vpon the, as an apparell, and girdeth the to the, as a byde doth hir Jewels. As for thy lond that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shalbe to narrow for the, that shal dwell in it. And they y^e wolde deuoure the, shalbe farre awaye. Then the childe wh^{ch} y^e bare shal bring forth vnto y^e, shal saye in thine eare: this place is to narrow, syt nye together, y^e I maye haue room me. Then shalt thou thinke by thyself: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am bare & alde, a captiue & an outcast? And who hath nourished the vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but fro whēce come these?

And therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people. They shal bringe the thyfsones in their lappes, & carie thy doughters vnto y^e vpon their shulders. For kynges shalbe thy nursinge fathers, and Quenes shalbe thy nursinge mothers. They shal fall before the wth their faces flat vpon the earth, and lick vp the dust of thy feet: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. And who so putterh his trust in me, shal not be confounded. Who spoyleth the giantte of his pray: or who taketh the prisoner from the mightie? And therfore thus saith the LORDE: The prisoners shalbe taken from the giantte, and the spoyle deliuered from the violēte: for I wil maynteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduersaries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne fleshe, and make the drinke of their owne bloude, as of sweet wyne. And all flesh shal knowe (O Jacob) that I am the LORDE thy Sauoure, and stronge auenger. Chap. l.

Thus saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of y^e mothers denoucement, that I sent vnto her: or who is the vsurer, to wh^{ch} I soldē you? Beholde, for youre owne effces are ye soldē: because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsake. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? & when I called, no man gaue me answere. Was my hōde cleane synnē of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to deliuer: lo, at a worde I dūke vp the see, & of water floudes I made drie lōde: so y^e for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. As for heauen, I clooth it with darknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

The LORDE God hath geue me a wellernd tūge, so that I can comforte them which are troubled, yee & y^e in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in y^e moynnyng (as y^e scolemasters do) y^e I might herke. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therfore can I not saye naue, ner wth drawe myself, but I offre my backe vnto y^e synners, and my chees to the nypers. I turne not my face fro shame ad spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therfore shal I not be cofounded. I haue hardened my face like a flyne

The li. Chapter.

A Erken vnto me, ye that holde of righteousness, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the grane wherout ye are digged. Considre Abraham youre father, & Sarah that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, & increased him: how the LORDE comforted Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. Myrth and ioye was there, thankes geuyng and yf voyce of prayse. haue respect vnto me then (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinance shal go forth from me, to lighten the Gentiles. It is hard by, that my health & my righteousness shal go forth, and the people shalbe ordied with myne arme.

Art not thou even he, which hast dug vp the depe of the see, which hast made playne the see grounde, that the deliuered might go thorow? That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for ever. That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorrow & wo might fle from the. See I, I am enē he, that in all thynges geueth you consolacion. What art thou then, that fearest a mortall mā, yf childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgettest the LORDE that made the, that spat out the heauens, and layde the foundacion of the earth. But thou art ever a frayde in the sight of thine oppressoure, which is not by to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to appeare: It shal not perish, yf it shal be able to destroye, nether shal it faile for faute of nouthinge. I am the LORDE, God, that make the see to be still, and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and sende the with the turnyng of my honde that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundacions of the earth, and saye to Siō: thou art my people.

Awake, awake, and stonde vpon Jerusalem, thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast dynt out the cuppe of his wrath: thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombunge cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast nouthed. Both the thynges are happened vnto the, but who is sorry for it? See, destruction, mourning, hunger & swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at yf heade of every strete like a rati vnyson, & are ful of yf terrible wrath of yf LORDE, & punysshment of the God. And therefore thou miserable & dynt (howbeit it not w' wyne) heare this: Thus saith the LORDE: thy LORDE & God, yf defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take yf baige cuppe out of thy hōde, enē yf cuppe of the dregges of my wrath: yf fō hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, & wil put their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy bodye eane with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

A ppon Siō vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o Jerusalem, thou cite of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vndeane person come in the. Shaker the frō the dust, arise & stonde vp, o Jerusalem. Pluck out thy neck from the bodde, o thou captyue daughter Siō. For thus saith the LORDE: Ye are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redeemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: My people were downe afore tyme into Egypte, the to be strangers. A fterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse the, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith yf LORDE) yf my people is frely caried awaye, & brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name ever still blasphemed? saith the LORDE. But yf my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the se of the Embassicoure, yf bringeth the message frō the mountayne, & proclameth peace: yf bugeth the good tydings, & preacheth health, & saith vnto Siō: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmē shal lift vp their voyce, & w' loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Siō.

Be glad, o thou desolate Jerusalem, & reioyce together: for the LORDE will comforte his people, he wil deliuer Jerusalem. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme, & shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gentiles, & all the endes of the earth shal se the sayunge health of our God. Awaye, awaye, get you out frō then & touch no vnclean thinge. Go out from amonge soch, And be cleane, yf that beareth the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sedicio, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, & the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruaunt shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted & greatly honoured. Like as yf multitude shal wō die vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed & not as a mans face, & his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gentiles loke vnto him, & yf kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. For they yf haue not bene tolde of him, shal se him: and they yf haue nothinge of him, shal beholde him.

C Behelde, thou poore, vexed and despised: I wil make thy walles of precious stones, and yf foundaciō of Saphires, thy wyndowes off Cristall, the gates of fyne cleare stone, and yf borders of pleasaunt stones. Thy chylde shall all be taught of God, and I wil geue the plen- tiousnes of peace. In righteuousnes shalt thou be grounded, and be farre fro oppressiō: for the which thou nedest not be afrayed, ne- ther for hynderaunce, for it shall not come nye the. Behelde, yf a countrey was farre fro the, shall dwell wth the: and yf was someyne a stra- nger vnto the, shall be ioyned wth the. Behol- de, I make the smyth yf bloweth the coles in the fyre, and he maketh a weapon after his hon- dy worke. I make also the waister to destroye: but all the weapons yf are made agaynst the, shall not prospeere. And as for all tinges, yf shall resiste the in iudgmet, thou shalt ouer- come the, and cōdemne them. This is the here- tage of the LORDS seruantes, and the righte- ousnes that they shall haue of me, saith the LORD.

neye worth. Wherefore do ye laye out yf mo- neye, for the thinge yf feedeth not, and spende your labour aboute the thinge that satisfieth you not? But herke rather vnto me, and ye shall eate of the best, and your soule shall haue hir pleasure in plēteousnes. Encline your eares, and come vnto me, take hede and your soule shall lyue. For I will make an euerlastinge couenaunt with you, enē the sure mercies of David.

Beholde, I shall geue him for a witness amonge yf folke, for a pryncer and captayne vnto the people. Lo, thou shalt call an vnkno- ne people: and a people that had no knowlege of the, shall runne vnto the: because off the LORD thy God, yf hely one of Israel, which gloufeth the. Sete the LORD while he maye be founde, call vnto him while he is nye. Let the vngodly man forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his ymaginaciōs, and turne agayne vnto the LORD, so shall he be merciful vnto him: and to oure God, for he is redy to forgeue.

For thus saith the LORD: My thoughtes are not your thoughtes, and ye are wayes are not my wayes: But as farre as the hea- uens are hyer then the earth, so farre do my wayes excede yours, and my thoughtes yours. And like as the rayne and snowe cōmeth downe from heauē, and returneth not thither agay- ne, but watereth the earth, maketh it fructi- full and grene, that it maye geue come and brade vnto the sower: So the worde also that cometh out of my mouth, shall not turne agay- ne voyde vnto me, but shall accomplishe my wil, and prospeere in the thinge, wherto I sende it. And so shall ye go forth wth ioye, and be led wth peace. The mountaynes and hilles shall sta- ge with you for ioye, and all the trees of the felde shall clappetheir hondes. For thornes, there shall growe syre trees, and yf Myrtte in the steade of briers. And this shall be done to the prayse of the LORD, and for an euerlastinge toke, that shall not be taken awaye.

The lvi. Chapter.

Ihus saith yf LORD: Kepe equite, and do right, for my sauynge health shall come shortly, and my righteuousnes shall be opened. Blissed is the man yf doeth this, and the mans childe which kepe the sa- me. For that taketh hede, yf he vnhalowe the Sabbath (that is, he that kepe himself that he do no euil. Then shall not the stran- ger, which cleaueth to the LORD, saye: Alas the LORD hath shut me cleane out from his people. Whether shall the gelded man saye: Alas I am a drie tre. For thus saith the LORD:

first vnto the gelded yf kepe the my Sabbath: Namely: that holdeth greatly of the thinge that pleaseth me, and kepe the my couenaunt: Vnto them wil I geue in my housholde and with in my walles, a better heretage and name: the yf they had bene called sonnes and daugh- ters. I wil geue them an euerlastinge name, that shall not perishe. Agayne, he saith vnto the straungers that are disposed to sticke to the LORD, to serue him, and to loue his name: That they shall be no bōde mē. And all they, which kepe the selues, that they vnhalowe not the Sabbath, namely: that they fulfill my couenaunt: Then wil I bringe to my holy mostayne, and make the ioyfull in my house of prayer. Their burnt offrings and sacrifices shall be accepted vnto myne auter, for my hou- se shall be an house of prayer for all people.

Thus saith the LORD God which ga- thereth together the scattered of Israel: I wil bringe yet another cōgregaciō to him. All the beastes of the felde, and all the beastes of yf wod, shall come to deuoure hi. For his watch- men are all blinde, they haue altogether no vnderstandinge, they are all domme dog- ges, not beinge able to barkke, they are slepe- ry: slouish are they, and lie snoitinge: they are shamelesse dogges, yf be neuer satisfied. The sheperdes also in like maner haue no vnder- standinge, but euery man turneth his owne waye, every one after his owne conetousnes, wth all his power. Come (saye they) I wil seech wyne, so shall we fill oure selues, that we maye be drunken. And do to morrow, like as to da- ye, yete and moch more.

The LVII. Chapter.

In the meane season yf righteous perissheth, and no mā regardeth it in his hert. Good godly people are taken a- waye, and no mā cōsidreth it. Namely: that the righteous is conuayed awaye thow wth ioye: that he himself might be in rest, lie qui- etly vpon his bed, and lyue after his owne plea- sure. Come hither therfore ye charmers chil- dren, yf sonnes of the aduoutter and the whore: Wherein take ye your pleasure? Vnto whom gaze ye with yf mouth, and bleare out yf ton- ge: Are ye not childe of aduoutry, and a seide of dissimulaciō? Take your pleasure vnder the oaks, and vnder all grene trees, the childe be- yage slayne in the valleys, and denues off stone. Thy parte shall be with the stony rockes by the ryuer: Yee euen these shall be thy parte. For therethon hast poured meat and drynt- offrings vnto the. Shulde I onersee that? Thou hast made thy bed vpon his mountay- nes, thou wentest vp thither, and therethast thou slayne sacrifices. Behynde the doores and postes, hast thou set vp thy remembraunce. When thou haddest discovered thyself to another then me, when thou wast downe, made thy bed wyder (that is) when thou di- dest carue the certayne of yonder Idols, and lo- uedest their couches, wherethon sawest the: Thou wentest straight to kinges with oyle, and dyuerse oyrmentes (that is) thou hast sent thy messangers farre of, and yet art thou fallen into the pyt therby. Thou hast had trouble for yf multitude of thine owne way- es, yet saydest thou neuer: I wil leane of. Thou hast inkest to haue life (or health) of thy self, and therfore thou beleuest not that thou art sick. For when wilt thou be abasshed or feare, seinge thou hast broken thy promyse, and remembrest not me, neither hast me in thine hert? Thinkest thou, that I also will helde my peace (as aforetyme) yf thou fearest me not? Yee verely I wil declare yf goodnes and yf workes, but they shall not profit yf. When thou criest, let yf chosen heape deliuer the. But the wynde shall take them all awaye, and cary the in to yf ayre. Nevertheless, they yf put their trust in me, shall inheret the londe, and haue my holy hill in possession.

And therfore thus he saith: Make reby, make reby, and clense yf strete, take vp what ye can out of the waye, that lede the to my peo- ple. For thus saith the hie and excellēt, euen he that dwelleth in euerlastinge, whose name is the holy one: I dwell his aboue and in the sanctuary, and with him also, yf is of a cō- trite and humble spire: yf I maye heale a tron- bled mynde, and a cōtrite herte. For I chide not euer, and am not wroth wth out ende. But yf blastinge goeth fro me, though I make the breath. I am wroth wth hi for his conetousnes and lust, I synne him, I hyde me, and am an- grie, whē he turneth himself, and foloweth yf bywaye of his owne hert. But yf I maye se his right waye agayne, I make him whole, I lede him, and restore him vnto them whom he maketh ioyful, and that were sorry for him. I make the frutes of thākesgivinge. I geue peace vnto them that are farre of, and to them that are nye, saye I the LORD, that make him whole. But the wicked are like the raginge see, that cā not rest, who se water someth with the myre and granel. So yf wicked haue no peace, saith my God.

their symies. For they seke me dalye, and wil knowe my wayes, euen as it were a people that dyd right, and had not forsaten the statutes of their God. They argue with me concerninge right iudgment, and wil please at the lawe with their God. Wherfore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not: we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

Behold, when ye fast, your lust remaineth still: for ye do no lesse violence to your betters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to smyte him with your fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that your voyce might be heard above. Thynke ye this fast pleasech me, that a man shulde chafte himself for a daye, and to mych his head aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, & to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastinge, or a daye of pleasure? LORDE: But this fastinge pleasech not me, till I cyme to thou loose him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the ooth of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. It pleasech not me, till thou deale thy bread to the hongrie, & brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face fro thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as the morninge, and thy healeth flourish right shortly: thy righteousnesse shal go before the, and thy glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answer the: yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy syngers, and ceaseest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refreischest the troubled soule: Then shal thy light sprynge out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shal be as the noone daye. The LORDE shal neuer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl thy bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene wast, shal be buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundacion for many tymes. Thou shalt be called the maker vpon of hedges, and thy buylder agayne of the waye of the Sabbath.

Yee yf thou turne thy sete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleasech thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasur, holy & glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, wherethin shalt be in hono: so yf thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine own wil, nether speake thine owne wordes. The LORDE thou haue pleasure in: the LORDE, which shall carie thee aboute the earth, & fede the with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the LORDE own mouth hath so promised.

The lix. Chap.

Behold, the LORDE honde is not shortened: it can not helpe, nether is his care so stopped: it maye yet heare. But ye mysdebes haue separated you from ye God, & ye symies hyde his face from you, & he heareth you not. For ye honde are defyled with bloude, and ye syngers are defyled with bloude, and ye syngers are defyled with bloude: No lippes speake lesynges, & ye tonge setteth out wickednes. No man gardeth righteousnes, & no man iudgeth truly. Every man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceare, & ceaueth werynes: & bringeth forth euill. They brede cockatrice egges, & weene in spyders webb. Who seareth of their egges, dieth. But yf one tread vpon the, there cometh vpon a serpent. Their webb maketh no clothe, & they maye not ouerthete their labours. Their dedes are the dedes of wickednes, & the worke of robbery is in their hondes. Their sete runneth to euill, & they make haiste to shed innocent bloude. Their counsels are wicked counsels, harme & destruccions are in their wayes. But the waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, & who shall geeth therein, knoweth no thinge of peace.

And this is the cause: he requite is so farre fro vs, & the righteousnes cometh not nye vs. We loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for we murmure hyne, & we walke in the darke. We grope like the blinde vpon a wall, we grope like the one that hath none eyes. We stembled at the noone daye, as though it were toward night: in the fallinge places, like men that are half dead. We are all like Beeres, & mourne still like dones. We loke for equite, but there is none: for healeth, but it is farre fro vs. For the offerers are many before the, & the symies testifye agaynst vs. Yee we must confesse the we offend, & knowlege, & we do amysse: Namely, transgresse & dyssemble agaynst the LORDE, & false waye fro the God: vsinge presumpuous & malicious ymaginacions, & castinge false matters in the herres. And therfore is equite gone asyde, & righteousnes standeth farre of: it is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee the treuth is lade in prison, and he that refraineth himself fro euill, must be spoyled. When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, & there was no where any equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was grieved at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne righteousnes. He put righteousnes vpon him for a brest place, & set the helmet of health vpon his head. He put on wrath in steade of clothe, & took gelousy aboute him for a clothe: like as when a man goeth forth worthfully to recompence his enemies, & to be avenged of his aduersaries. Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the LORDE, wherethow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risinge of the Sonne: and his magesty, vnto the goinge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. But vnto Sion there shal come a redeemer, and vnto them in Jacob that turne from wickednesse, saith the LORDE. I will make this couenaunt with them (sayeth the LORDE): My spere that is come vpon the, & the wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy childre, no ner out of the mouth of thy childers childre, from this tyme forth for euer more.

The li. Chapter.

Now therfore get the vpon by tymes, for thy light cometh, & the glory of the LORDE shal ryse vpon vs. For lo, while the darknesse & cloude couereth the earth, & the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light, & his glory shal besene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light, & kynges to the brightnes of springeth forth vpon vs. Lift vpon thine eyes, & loke rounde aboute the: All these gather the selues, & come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto vs from farre, & daughters shal gather the selues to the on every side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shal be opened: when the power of the se shal be conuerted vnto the (that is) when the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer vs, the Diomedaries of Madia & Ephra. All they of Saba shal come, bringinge golde & incense, & shewing the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cedar shal be gathered vnto vs, the rames of Labaioth shal serue the, to be offered vpon myne auter, which I haue chosen, & in the house of my glory which I haue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloude, and as the doves flinge to their wyndowes.

The LORDE also shal gather the vnto me, and specially the shippes of the sea: that they maye bunge the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the. Strangers shal buyld vpon thy walles, and their kynges shal do the seruyce. For when I am angry, I smyte the: and when it pleasech me, I pardon the. Thy gates shal stande open still both daye and night, and neuer be shut: that the hooste of the Gentiles maye come, and that their kynges maye be brought vnto the. For every people & kingdome that serueth not the, shal perish, and be destroyed w the swerde. The glory of libanus shal come vnto the: The fyre trees, Dore & Cedres together, to garnish the place of my Sanctuary, for I wil glorifie the place of my sete.

Moreover those shal come kneeling vnto the, & haue veyed the: & all they that despised vs, shal fall downe at vs. Thou shalt be called the cite of the LORDE, the holy Sion of Israel. Because thou hast bene forsaken and hated, so that no man went thorow the: I wil make the glorious for euer and euer, & ioysful thorew out all posterities. Thou shalt sucke the mylk of the Gentiles, and kynges brestes shal fede the. And thou shalt knowe that I the LORDE am thy Sauoure and defender, the mighty one of Jacob. For bresse wil I geue the golde, and for yron syluer, for wood bresse, and for stones yron. I wil make peace thy ruler, and righteousnes thine officer. Violence and robbery shal neuer be herde of in thy ionde, nether harme and destruccions in thy borders. Thy walles shal be called health, & thy gates the prayse of God. The Sonne shal neuer by thy daye light, & the light of the Moone shal neuer shyne vnto the: but the LORDE himself shal be thy everlastinge light, & thy God shal be thy glory.

Thy Sonne shal neuer go downe, & thy Moone shal not be taken awaye, for the LORDE himself shal be thy everlastinge light, & thy forousful dayes shal be rewarded vs. Thy people shal be all godly, & possesse the lande for euer: the flour of my plantinge, the worke of my hondes, wherof I wil reioyce. The yongest & eldest shal growe in to a thousande, & the symplest in to a stronge people. I the LORDE shal shortly bunge this thinge to passe in his tyme.

me, to preach good tydiges vnto the poore, yf I might bynde vp yf wounded hertes, yf I might preach deliuerance to yf captyue, & open the pryson to the that are bounde: yf I might declare yf acceptable yeare of yf LORDE, & the daye of yf avégeaunce of oure God: that I might comfote all them that are in heuynesse, that I might geue vnto them yf mourne in Sion, bewry in the steade of affixes, ioyful o yntyme for sighinge, pleasaunt rayme for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a platin ge of the LORDE for him to reioyce in.

They shal buyde the lōge rough wildernes, & set vp yf olde deserte. They shal repayre the waiste places, & soch as haue bene voyde thow out many generaciōs. Straungers shal stōde & fede yf catel, & the Aleaunces shal be yf plowme & reapers. But ye shal be named the prestes of the LORDE, & me shal call you the seruantes of oure God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of yf Gētiles & tryūphe in their substāce. For yf greace repiose & shame, shal they haue ioye, yf ye maye haue parte wthē. For they shal haue dubble possēssi on i their lōde, & everlastinge ioye shal be wth them. For yf the LORDE, which loue right ad bare robbery (though it were offred me) shal make their woikes ful of faithfulness, & make an everlastinge couenaunt wth them.

Their sede also and their generacion shal be knowne amōge the Gētiles, and amōge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of yf LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, & my soule reioyseth in my God. For he shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, & ceuer me with the mātle of rightuousnes. He shal decke me like a brydegrome, & as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpo her. For like as yf gro unde bringeth forth frute, & as the garde shu teth forth sede: So shal the LORDE God cau se rightuousnes, and the feare of God to flourish forth before all the Zeichen.

The liij. Chapter.
Of Sions sake therefore wil I not holde Lemytūge, & for Ierusalem sake I will not ceasse: vntill their rightuousnes breake forth as yf shyninge light, & their health as a burnyngelampe. Then shal the Gētiles se thy rightuousnesse & all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a new name, which the mouth of yf LORDE shal shewe. Thou shalt be a crowne in the honde of the LORDE, and a glorious garlade in the hōde of thy God. From this tyme forth thou shalt neuer be called the forsake, & thy lōde shal nomore be called the wilderness. But thou shalt be called Zephziba (that is, my beloved) & yf lōde Beula (that is) a married womā: for yf LORDE loueth yf, & thy lōde shal be inhabited. And like as yonge mā taketh a daughter to marie ge, so shal God mary himself vnto yf sonne. And as a brydegrome is glad of his bryde, so shal God reioyse over the.

I wil set watchmē vpo thy walles (o Jerusalem) which shall nether ceasse daye nor night, to preach yf LORDE. And ye also shall not kepe him close, nor leaue to speake of him, vntill Ierusalem be set vp, & made the piast of the world. The LORDE hath sworne by his right honde & by his stronge arme, that frō hence forth he wil not geue thy come to be meate for thine enemies, ner yf wyne (wher thou hast laboured) to be drynte for yf straungers. But they that haue gathered in the come, shal eate it, & geue thankes to the LORDE: & they that haue borne in the wyne, shall drynte it in the court of my Sanctuary.

Scōde back, & departe a sūder, ye yf stōde vnder yf gate, make rowme ye people, & paye the strete, & take awaye yf stones, & set out a totē for the people. Beholde, yf LORDE proclameth in the endes of the world: yf daughter Sion: se, thy Saluaciō cometh, he holde, he bringeth his treasure wth him, & his woikes go before him. For they whō yf LORDE deliuereth, shal be called the holy people: & as for the, thou shalt be named the greatly occupied, and not the forsaken.

The lxxij. Chapter.
What is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra (which is so costly doth) & cometh in so needly with all his strength: I am he yf teacheth rightuousnes, & am of power to helpe. Wherfore the is thy clothing reade, & thy raymēt like his yf treadeth in yf wyne presse. I haue troddē the presse myself alone, & of all people, there was not one wth me. Thus haue I troddē downe myne enemies in my wrath, and set my fete vpo them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpo my clothes, & so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeance that I haue take in honde, & the yeare of my deliuerance is come. I looked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe, I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. The I helde me by myne owne arme, & my seruētēesse susteyned me. And thus haue I trodden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue set their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodnesse of the LORDE, yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greace good yf he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & acordinge to the multitude of his lowynge kindnesse. For he sayde: These no doute wil be my people, and no shietinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. In their troubles he forsoke them not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, deliuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vponer, since the world began. But after they prouoked him to wraich and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemy, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbered he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: how he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had gurn his holy spūte amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had dewyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an everlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an hoise is led in the playne, that they shalde not stōmble. The spūte of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name wth all. Loke downe then from heauē, and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, yf thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy lowyngetynde, wth not be entreated of vs? Yet art thou o fader: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure fader and redeemer, and thy name is enclastinge. O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake yf are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possēssiō, for oure enemies haue take it in: And we are become, euen as we were from the begynnynge: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

re: Wherby thy name might be knowne amōgethine enemies, & yf the Gētiles might tremble before yf. That thou mightest come downe with thy wonderous straunge woikes, then shulde the hilles melt at thy presence. For since the begynnynge of the world ther was none (except thou o God) that herde or perceaued, nether hath eny eye sene what thou dost for the, that put their trust in the.

Thou helpest him that doth right with cherefulness, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. We are all as an vnclenethinge, & all oure rightuousnesse are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leafe, for oure synnes caue vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stōnderth vpo to take holde by the. Therfore hydest thou thy face from vs, and confu nest vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, thou fader of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the woike of thy hondes. Be not tofore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembraunce, but considre that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waiste, Sion is a wilderness, and Jerusalem a deserte. Oure holy house which is oure bewry, wher oure faders prayed the, is brent vp, yee all oure comodities and pleasures are waysted awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this? Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lxx. Chapter.
They shal seke me, that hitherto haue not cryed for me: they shal fynde me, that hitherto haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vnfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer despyng me to my face. They make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon altars of bucke, they lurc amonge the graues, and lie in the denues all night. They eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. If thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shal be turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for enter. Beholde, it is written before my face, & shall not be forgotten, but recompensed. I shall reward it them in to their bosome: I mea-ne youre mys dedes, and the mys dedes of you re fathers together (saith the LORDE) which haue made their smokes vpon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me vpon the hilles: ther fore will I measure their olde dedes in to the ir bosome agayne.

B Moreover thus saith the LORDE: like as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men sa-ye vnto him: breake it not of, for it is holy:
Euen so will I do also for my seruantes sates, that I will not destroye them all. But I will take a sede out of Jacob, and out of Juda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shall possesse these thinges, & my seruuntes shall dwell there. Saron shall be a shepe-fold, and the valley of Achor shall geue stal-linge for the catell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill.
Ye haue set vp an altar vnto fortune, & generich drinke offeringes vnto treasure. Therfore wil I nombie you with the swerde, that ye shall be destroyed all together. For when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye hearkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thin-ge that pleased me not.

C Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Be-holde, my seruantes shall eate, but ye shall haue hunger. Beholde, my seruantes shall drynke, but ye shall suffre thirste. Beholde, my seruantes shall be merry, but ye shall be co-founded. Beholde, my seruantes shall reioy-se for very quietnesse of herte. But ye shall erie for sorrow of herte, and cōplayne for vera-cion of mynde. Your name shall not be swor-ne by amonge my chosen, for God the LOR-DE shall slaye you, and call his seruantes by another name. Who so reioyseth vpon earth, shall reioyse in the true God: And Who so swareth vpon earth, shall sweare in the true God. For the olde enemye shall be forgotten, and taken awaye out of my sight. For lo, I shall make a new heauē, & a new earth. And as for the olde, they shall neuer be thought vpon, ner kepte in mynde: but me shall be glad and enermore reioyse, for the thinges, that I shall do.

D For why? Beholde, I shall make a ioyfull Jerusalem, yee I myself will reioyse with Jerusalem, & be glad with my people: And the voyce of wepinge and waylinge shall not be herde in her from thence forth. There shall neuer be childe ner olde man, that haue not their full dayes. But whē the childe cometh to an hundredth yere olde, it shall dye. And he that is an hundredth yere of age do wro-nge, he shall be cursed. They shall buylde houses, and dwell in them: they shall plante vnyardes, and eate the frute of them. They shall not buylde, & another possesse: they shall not plante, and another eate: But the life of my people shall be like a tre, and so shall the work of their hondes.

My chosen shall lyue longe, they shall not laboure in vayne, ner beget w trouble: for they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE, & their frutes wiche them. And it shall be, that or euer they call, I shall answer them. Why le they are yet but thinkinge how to speake, I shall heare them. The wolff and the lambe shall fede together, and the lyon shall eate haye like the bullocke. But carth shall be the serpentes meate. There shall no man hurte ne slaye another, in all my holy hill, saith the LORDE.

The lxxvi. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, and the earth is my fote stoke.
Where shall now the house stonde, y ye will buylde vnto me? And where shall be the place, y I wil dwell in? As for these thin-ges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saith the LORDE. Which of them shall I then regarde? Euen him that is of a lowly troubled spiete, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an ope for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he tyllet a mā. He that tyllet a shepe for me, chooketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offerings, offereth swynes bloude: Who so maketh me a memouall of Incense, prayseth the thinge y is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in hōde, and their soule delieth in these abhominacions.

Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in ianginge them to scome, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bunge vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answer: when I speke, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, & chosed the thinges that displeasē me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speketh. Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LOR-DE magnifie himself, that we maye se your gladnesse: & yet they shall be cōfounded.

For as touching the cite and the temple,
I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and recompēce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or er she suffre the payne of the byrth and angryll of y tranayle. Whoener berde or sawe soch thinges: doth the grounde beare in one daye: or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thussaith the LORDE: Am I he that ma-keth other to beare, and beare not my self?

Am not I he that beareth, and maketh barren: saith thy God. Reioyse with Jerusalem, & be glad with her, all ye that loue her.
Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shall sucke cōforte out of hir bies-tes, and be satisfied. Ye shall taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace i to her, like a water floude, & y might of the heiche like a flowing stream. Then shall ye sucke, ye shall be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpon hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shall I com-forte you, and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem. And when ye se this, youre herte shall reioyse, and youre bones shall flourish like an herbe.

Thus shall the hōde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruantes, and his in-dignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shall come w fyre, and his chare shall be like a whyrlwynde, that he maye recompence his vengeance in his wrath, and his indignacion with the flame of fyre.
For y LORDE shall iudge all flesh with the fye and with his swerde, and there shall be a grete nombie slayne of the LORDE. Soch as haue made them selues holy and cleane in the gardens, and those that haue eaten swy-me flesh, myce, and other abhominacions, shall betaken awaye together, saith the LORDE.
For I wil come to gather all people and ton

ges, with their workes and ymaginacions:
these shall come, and se my glory. Vnto them shall I geue a tokē, and sende certayne of thē (that be deliuered) amonge the Gentiles: in to Celicia, Africa and Lidia (where men can handle bowes) in to Italie also and Greke londe.

The fles farie of, that haue not berde speake of me, & haue not sene my glory: shall preach my prayse amonge the Gentiles, and shall bringe all youre biethie for an offeringe vnto the LORDE, out of al people, vpon horses, charettes and hoise lycters, vpon Mooles and carres to Jerusalem my holy hill (saith the LORDE) like as the children of Israel bunge the offeringe in cleane vessels, to the house of the LORDE.

And I shall take out certayne of them for
to be prestes and leuites, saith y LORDE.
For like as the new heauē and the new carth which I wil make, shall be fast stablished by me (saith the LORDE) So shall youre sede and youre name contynue, and there shall be a new Meone for the other, and a new Sabbath for the other, & all fles shall come to worshiipe before me, (saith y LORDE.) And they shall go forth, and loke vpon
the caryons of them, that haue transgres-
sed agaynst me.

For their woimes shall not dye, neher shall their fyre be quenched, & all fles shall abhor
re them.

The prophet Jeremy.

These are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Dan Jamin: when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so durynge vnto the tyme of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xi yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda were ended: when Jerusalem was taken, euen in the fifth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: Before I fashioned the in thy mothers womb, I dyd knowe thee: And ere thou wast borne, I sanctified thee, & ordered thee, to be a prophet vnto the people. The sayde I: Oh LORDE God, I am vn mete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: for thou shalt go to all that I shall sende thee vnto, and what so euer I commande thee, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wil be with thee, to deliuer thee, saith the LORDE.

And with that, the LORDE stretched out his hande, and touched my mouth, and sayd: morouer vnto me: Behelde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set thee ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make wast: and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plante. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Jeremy, what seist thou? And I sayd: I see a waynge rodde. Then sayde the LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to perforce it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? And I sayde: I do see a seethinge pot, boilinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

The ii. Chap. Ifo. xxiii.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: One of the north shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For so, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and every one shall set his seate in the gates of Jerusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my indignement, vpon all the wickednesse of these men that haue forsaken me: that haue offered vnto strange goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne bondes.

And therefore gyde vp thy loynes, arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in commandement. Feare them not, I will not haue thee to be afrayed of the. For beholde, this daye do I make the a stroge fenced towne, an iron pyler, and a wall of stele agaynst the whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst thee, but they shall not be able to ouercome thee: for I am with thee, to deliuer thee, saith the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Oreuer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me thus: Go thy waye, & crie in the eares of Jerusalem, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre thee for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. All they that denoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Jacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith the LORDE vnto you: What vnfaithfulness founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye from me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so wayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where hau we left the LORDE, y brought he vs out of the lode of Egypte: y led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drede and a deadly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. And when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt & well buylde londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the comodities of the same: ye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

The prestes the selues saide not once: where is the LORDE? They y haue the lawe in the ir bondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do serue ce vnto Baal, & folowe such thinges as shall bunge them no profit.

Wherefore I am constrained (saith the LORDE) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Certhim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, ta ke diligent hede: and se, whether such thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles them sel ues beale so falsly & vntuly with their god des (which yet are no goddes in dede.) But my people hath geuen ouer their hie honou re, for a thinge that maye not helpethem.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be a frayde, & abashed at such a thinge, saith the LOR
DE. For my people hath done two euils.
They haue forsake me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Isra el a bonde seruaunt, or one of the household?
Why is he then so spoyle? Why do they roa re and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? They haue made his londe wayst, his cities are so bient vp, that there is no man dwellinge in them. Yee the children of Toph and Tapha nes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, euer sen ce he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now do in y strete of Egypte? to dun ke foule water? Either, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To dunke water of the flonde? Thine owne wickednesse shall repro ue the, and thy turnyng awaye shall condem ne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnder stonde, how euil and hurtful a thinge it is, y thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hoostes.

I haue neuer broken thy yock of olde, & bur sten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, & amonge all grene trees:
where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. How art thou turned then into a bytter, vnfrutesfull, and straunge gra pe? Yee and that so sore: that though thou washest the with Vitrus & makest thyself to sauoure with that sweete smellingge herbe of Bouth: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. Loke vp thy ne owne waies in the woddes, valleis & den nes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast do ne. Thou art like a swife Diomedary, that

The ii. Chap.

goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Ass, that vseth the wilde se, and that shuffeth and bloweth at his will.
Who can tame the? All they that seth shal not saye, but synde the in thine own vnclennes. Thou tepest thy fore from nati nes, and thy throte from thurst, and thou test thus in thy self: wyl, I wil take no sin we, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & ba ge vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the de, cometh to shame, eue so is the house of Israel cometo confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and pro phetes. For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trib le, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe us, I shal answer the: Where are now thy god des, that thou hast made the: by thine sin de vp, and helpe the in the tyme of neede? So loke how many cities thou hast (o Juda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherefore the wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. Your owne swerde destroyed your prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Y ye be the people of the LORDE, then hath m to his worde: Am I the become a wilde se vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherefore saith my people then: we are fall of, and we wil come nomore vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir ray me, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so longe? Why boolest thou thy wayes so hylie, (o prayne fauoure them thorow) when thou hast yet stained them w blasphemies?

Vpon thy wynges is founde the blode of poore and innocent people, and that ne in corners and holes only, but openly in all the se places. Yet darrest thou saye: I am gile lesse: Tush, his wrath can not come vpon me.
Beholde, I wil reason with y, because thou darrest saye: I haue not offended. O howe uel wilt be for the, to abyde it: when it shall be knowne, how oft thou hast gone backwar de? For thou shalt be confounded, as wel of Egypte, as of the Assirians: yee thou shalt go thy waye from the, & smyte y ne bondes together vpon thy heade. Because the LOR DE shal bunge that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prosper with all.

The prophet Jeremy.

The iii. Chapter.

Comonly, when a man putteth awaye his wife, and she goeth from him, and marrieth with another, then the que stion is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this selde then defyled and vnclene? But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agay ne to me, saith the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the streets, and as a murderer in the wilderness.
Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

This is the cause, that the rayne and e uerynge dew hath ceased. Thou hast got ten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me from my youth: Wilt thou then put me awaye, and cast me of for euer?
Or wilt thou with drawe thy self cleue from me? Neuertheles, thou speakest such wor des, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Josias the kinge: Hast thou sene what harlotrye Israel hath done: how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, and amonge all thick trees, and there played the harlot: hast thou sene also, (when she had do ne all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? Juda that vnfaithfull sister of hers also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shentkin ge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and ga ue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda was not ashamed, but wente backe and pla yed the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole londe. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with sto nes and stockes.

Neverthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda is not turned vnto me agayne with hir who le harlotrye, but faynedly, saith the LORDE.
And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The bac kylder Israel is more rihteous, the vn faithfull Juda: and therfore go preach the se wordes toward the north, & saye: Thou shentkinge Israel, turne agayne (saith the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saith the LORDE, & I will not all waye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greates blasphemy: Namely, that thou

The iiij. Chap. Ho. xxv.

hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, & hast made thy self partaker of straun ge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saith the LOR DE.

O ye shentkinge children, turne agayne, saith the LORDE, and I wil be married with you. For I will take one out of the cite and two out of one generation from amonge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will gene you hyndme after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wysdome.
Moreover, when ye be increased and multi plied in the londe, then (saith the LORDE)
there shall nomore boost be made of the arte of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, nether shall eny man make mention of it: for from thence forth it shall nether be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Jerusalem be called the LOR DES seate, and all heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDES sake, which shalbe set vp at Jerusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauwerde herce.

The those y be of the house of Juda, shal go vnto the house of Israel: And they shal come together out of the north, in to the sa me londe that I haue geuen youre fathers.
I haue shewed also, how I rote the vp bein ge but a childe, and gaue the a pleasaunt lon de for thine heretage, yee and a goodly hoo ste of the heithen: and how I commaun ded the, that thou shuldest call me father on ly, and not to shentkinge from me.

But like as a woman sayeth hir lover, so are ye vnfaithfull vnto me (o ye house of Is rael) saith the LORDE. And therfore the voy ce of the children of Israel was herde on e uery side, wepinge and waylinge: for they ha ue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE.

O ye shentkinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale you re backturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel shal be only vpon God oure LORDE.

Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers laboure from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters.
So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue syn ned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and ha

Irael, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saith the LORDE.
And yf thou wilt put awaye thy ab-ominacions out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: And shalt sweare: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and rightuous-nesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saith the LORDE, to all Juda and Jerusalem: plowe youre lon-de, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

Be circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Juda, and all the indwellers of Jerusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, & kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre yma-ginacions.

Elc. 18. a

Preach in Juda and Jerusalem, crie out and speake: blowe the trompettes in the lon-de, crie that euery man maye heare, and sa-ye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, speede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bunge a greate plage, and a greate destruction from the north. For the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dene, that he maye make the londe waite, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therein. Wherfore gyde yourselues aboute wth sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wiath of the LOR-DE shal not be withdrawen from you.

Jer. 1. c

At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shal be astonished, and the prophetes shal be sore afayed. Then sayde J: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaued this people and Jerusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, and now the swerde goeth tho-row their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people & to Jerusalem: there cometh a war-me wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clyse.

Deut. 28. a

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he cometh downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: his hoysmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Jerusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, that thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remayne

Elc. 1. c

Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the heithen geue Jerusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are comynge from farre coun-trees. They tell the cities of Juda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in every place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wiath, saith the LORDE.

Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyme owne wickednesse and disobedience, that hath possessed thyme hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunteth within me, I can not be still,
for I haue herde the crienge of the trompetes, and peales of warre.

They crie murthor vpon murthor, the whole londe shal perish. Immediately my tentres were destroyed, and my hanginges in the windlinge of an eye. How longe shall I see the tokens of warre, and heare the noy-se of the trompettes?

Nevertheless this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, and hath verily no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, and without eny decreas. To do euell, they haue witt ynough:
but to do well, they haue no wisedome. I haue looked vpon the earth, and se, it is wast and voyde. I looked towarde heauen, and it had no shynne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they tra-bled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboune me, and there was no body, and all the bydes of the ayre were awaye. I was ted well, and the plowed felde was become waite: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wiath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shal be desolate, yet will I see then haue done. And therefore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sore aboune:
for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repent me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the hoysmen and bom-men: they shall runne in to dennes in to wodes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shal be voyde, and no man dwel-linge therein.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, & deckest yth with gold: though thou payntest thy face wth colours, yet shalt thou trymme thy self in payne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go about to slaye y^e. For (methynke) I heare a noy-se, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one laboringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the daughter Sion, that casteth out hir arnes, and swoweth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my hert, for them that are slayne.

The V. Chapter.

O Bethorow Jerusalem, beholde and se: Sete thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that labourerth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saith the LORDE) for though they can saye: the LOR-
DE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceane:
Whereas thou (O LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentance: thou hast conected them for amendement, but they refused thy correction.
They made their faces harder then a stone,
and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduen-ture they are so symple and foolish, that they vnderstonde no thinge of the LORDES wa-ye, and iudgements of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talk with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgements of oure God.
But these (in like maner) haue broken the yok, and bursten the bondes in sonder.

Wherfore a lyon out of the wode shal hurte them, and a wolfe in the euenynge shal de-stroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peces all them, that cometh out. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and swome by them that are no goddes.
And albeit they were bounde to me in ma-riage, yet they felte to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned horse, euery man neyeth at his neighbours wife. Shulde I not correcte this, saith the LORDE?

Shulde I not be a venged of enery people, that is like vnto this? Clynne vp vpon their wallles, beate them downe, but destroye them not utterly: cut of their biauanches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Juda forsaken me, saith the LORDE.

They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no misfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swerde ner hon-
ger. As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, yee there is none of these, which will tell them: that soch thin-ges shal happen vnto them.

Wherfore thus saith the LORDE God of hostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wode, that it maye consume them.

Lo, I will bringe a people vps you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people whose speech thou knowest not, nether vnderstoddest what they saye.

Their arrowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughter, & thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges.
As for thy stronge and well sensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the swerde.

Nevertheless I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherfore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answerethem: because, that like as ye haue forsaken me, and serued straunge god-des in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye ser-ue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Jacob, & crie it out in Juda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou foolish) and vndiscrete people. Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Seare ye not me, saith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to loke me in the face: which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the waues therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye fro me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth ener still the haruest for vs yearly.

Nevertheless youre misdebes haue turned these from you, & youre synnes haue rob-

The prophet Jeremy.

bed you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that painely laye shares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cometh their greatesubstaunce and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shamefull blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, they make no ende of the fatherlesse cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saith the LORDE: Shulde I not be avenge of all such people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therein. What will come therof at the last?

The VI. Chapter.

Come out of Jerusalem, ye stronge child of Ben Jamin: blowe vp the trompettes ye Ecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate miserye peperth out from the North.

I will licken the daughter Sion to a sayre and tendie woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and eueryone shal fede with his honde. Make battell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulwarkes agaynst Jerusalem. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, eue so this cite aboundeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrightheousnesse is herde in her, sorow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amende the (o Jerusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, yf no man dwel in it. For thus saith the LORDE of hostes: The residue of Israel shalbe gathered, as the remnant of grapes.

B And therfore turne thine honde agayne in to the basket, like the grape gatherer. But vnto whom shal I speake: whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? Their eares are so yncumbeled, that they maye not heare.

The vi. Chap.

Beholde, they take the worde of God but for a scone, and haue no lust thereto. And therfore I am so full of thy indignation (o LORDE, that I maye suffre no longer. Shew out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. For the man must be taken prisoner with the rase, and the aged with the crepel. Then with their londes and wines shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out my hand vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saith the LORDE. For from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon couetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

And besyde that, they heale the hurt of my people with sweete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therfore they must be ashamed, for they haue committed abheminacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, neither of shame ner good nurture? And therfore they shal fall amonge the slayne, and in the houre when I shall visit them, they shal be brought downe, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: go into the streets, conside and make inquisition for the waye: and yf it beche good and right waye, then go therein, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therein) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therfore take hede vnto the voyce of the crier. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therfore ye Gentiles, and thou congregation shalt knowe, what I haue dayed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, I will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginations.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. Whatfore bringe ye me incense from Saba, & sweete smellinginge Calamus from Sarracens trees? Your burnt offerings displeas me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therfore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and they shal fall from amonge them the father of the children, one neyghboure shal perishe with another.

Morouer thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shal come a people from the North: a greate people shal arise from ynter of earth, w bowes & w darts shal they be armed: It is a rough & scarce people, an vmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wel appointed to the all agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shal this cite be herde: Oure armes are feble, heynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman trauelinge with childe. Woman go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemie shalbe on euery side.

Wherfore, gyde a sack cloth aboute the (othou daughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with ashes, mourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloned sonne: For the destroyer shal sodenly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and crye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are cleue brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellows are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the euil is not taken awaye from them. Therfore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The VII. Chapter.

These are the wordes, that God spake vnto Jeremy: Stande vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the wordes of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this dore, to honoure the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel. Amende youre wayes and youre counsels, and I wil let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyengwordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

For yf ye will amende youre waies and counsels, yf ye wil iudge right betwixte a man and his neyghboure: yf ye wil not oppresse the straunger, the fatherles & the wyde dower: yf ye wil not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straunge goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers for euer. But take hede, yee trust in counsels, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthured, committed adoutrie, and perjury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge & vnknewne goddes: Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolved quyte, though we haue done all these abominations.

What? thinke you this house that beareth

reth my name, is a denne of cheues? And these thinges are not done painely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I byd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I myself rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answere. And therfore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and your fathers. And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethien the whole sede of Ephraim.

Therfore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt neither geue charyte, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Jerusalem? The children gather stickes, the fathers kindle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out bunkoffringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: how be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therfore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpon the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes, the God of Israel: Reheape vp youre burnt offerings with youre sacrifices, & eate yf flesh. But when I brought youre fathers out of Egypte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt offerings and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: hearken and obeye my voyce, and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue commaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

But they were not obedient, they inclined not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymaginations and after the motions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egypte, vnto this daye.

The prophet Jeremy.

The ix. Chap. Fo. xxviii.

Nevertheless, I sent unto them my ser-uantes all the p[ro]phets: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herke, ner offere their eares, but were obstinate, and worsen their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wor-des vnto them, but they shal not heare the:
thou shalt crie vpon them, but they shal not answere the. Therefore shalt thou saye vnto them: this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. Faithfulnes & truth is clene rooted out of their mouth.

Wherefore cut of thine haye, and cast it awaye, take vp a complaynte in the whole londe: for the LORDE shal cast awaye, and scatre the people, yf he is displeased withall.

For the children of Juda haue done euell in my sight, saith the LORDE. They haue set vp their abominations, in the house yf hath my name, and haue defyled it. They haue also buylded an auter at Tophet, which is in the valley of yf childre of Enno: yf they might burne their sonnes and daughters, which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought. And therefore be-holde, the dayes shal come (saith the LOR-DE) that it shal no more be called Tophet, or the valley of the children of Enno, but the valley of the slayne: for in Tophet they shal be buried, because they shal els haue no row-me. Yee yf deed bodies of this people shal be eaten vp of the foules of the ayre & wilde beastes of the earth, & no man shal frayethem awaye. And as for the voyce of mynch & glad-nesse of the cities of Juda, & Jerusalem, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde: I will make them cease, for the londe shal be desolate.

The viii. Chapter.

In the same tyme, saith the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Juda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the p[ro]phets and p[ro]phets, yee and the bones of the citisens of Ierusalem, shal be brought out of their graues and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heauenly hostes:
whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they raunc after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpon the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

And all they that remayne of this wicked generation, shal desyre rather to dye then to lye: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatre them, saith the LORDE of hostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also.

Thus saith the LORDE: Domes fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, yf they neuer conuerter. Wherefore then is this people and Jerusalem gene so farre backe, that they turne not agayne.
They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

For I haue looked, and considered: but there is no man, that speaketh a good worde, there is no man, that taketh repentaunce for his synne, that will so much as saye: wherfore haue I done this? But every man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Stork, the Swallow and the Crane, consider the tyme of their trauaile:
but my people will not knowe the tyme of the puny-shment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs.

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the saybes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shal be a frayd and a ken: for lo, they haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue them wyues vnto aleaunces, and their selues destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shamefull lucre: and from the p[ro]- phet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies.
Nevertheless, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Ye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yf they knowe of no shame.

Wherefore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saith
the LORDE.

Moreover I will gather them in (saith the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grepe vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shal be plucked of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shal we be in rest.
For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to shyllence, and geuen vs water myste with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We looked for peace, and we saye not the better, we wayted for the tyme of solath, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herbe from Dan, the whole londe shal be afrayd at the neyge of his stronge horses:

for they shal go in, and deuoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. Moreover, I will sende cockatrice & serpentes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, saith the LORDE.

Sorrowe is come vpon me, and benynes repeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the cry-ge of my people is herbe from a faire coun-tre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they griued me (saith the LORDE) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions?
The harvest is gone, the Sommer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heuy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no physician, that caheale the hurte of my people.

The IX. Chapter.

Who will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for my-ne eyes: that I may wepe night addaye, for the slaughter of my people? Wol-de God that I had a cottage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thence: for they be all aduourers and a shrandinge force. They be de their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the truth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the woulde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith
the LORDE.

Ree one must kepe himself from another,
no man maye safely trust his owne brother:
for one brother vndermyne another, & one neighbour begyleth another. Ree one dissem-bleth with another, and they deale with no truth. They haue practised their tūges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge false-
be) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie the,
for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tūges are like sharpe arrowes, to speake disceate. With their mouth they speake pe-acably to their neighbour, but p[ri]uely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punyssh them for these thinges, saith the LORDE? Or shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? Vpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and sorowfull crie, and a mournynge vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there enymore: Ree

a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

Bydes and catell are all gone from the-ce. I will make Jerusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venymous wormes.
And I wil make the cities of Juda so waiste, that no man shal dwell therein. What man is so wise, as to vnderstande this? Vnto whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: O thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brent vp, and like a wilderness, that no ma-goeth thowow? Ree the LORDE himself col-de the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepte not the chynge that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued there after:
but folowed the wickednes of their owne her-tes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will sede this people with wounyod, and geue the gall to drynke. I will scatre them also amonge the heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a fire amonge them, to persecute them, vntill I bunge them to naught. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Iste that ye call for mournynge wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mo-urnynge songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyd-des maye gush out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse her-be of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LOR-DE (o ye women) and let your eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne your daughters to mourne, and that every one maye teach hir neighbouresse, to make la-mentacion. Namely thus: Weeche is clymme vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the dore, & yf yongeman in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith yf LOR-DE: The deed bodies of men shal lye apon yf grounde, as the donge vpon the felde, and as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE: Let not the wise man re-ioyse in his wysdome, ner the stronge man Ree iiiij

in his strength, neither the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstodeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do merce, equite and righteuousnes vpon earth. Therefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saith y^e LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil viset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, the Jewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wilderness. For all y^e Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

Hear the wordes of the LORDE, y^e he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne a fter the maner of the heithen, and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the heithen are afrayed of such: For all the customes and lawes of the Gentiles are nothinge, but vanite. They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the bondes of the woike man, and fashion it with the axe: they coner it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it wth nails and hammers, that it moue not. It stode as stiff as the palme tre, it can neither speakener go, but must be borne. Be not ye afrayed of such, for they caⁿ do nether good ner euil. But there is none like vnto y^e (o LORDE) thou art greete, and greete is the name of y^e power. Who wolde not feare the, or what ki^{ng}ge of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysmen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye beliened vnto the. They are all together vnlearned and vnwise. All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beate to plates: and golde from Ophir, a woike y^e is made with the honde of the craftesman, and the caster, clothed with yalow sylk and scarlet: euen so is the woike of their wysmen all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyvinge God, and an everlastinge kinge. If he be wth the earth shaketh: all the Gentiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of the: they are goddes, that made nether h^{er}e, nor earth: therefore shal they perish fro the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen. But as for oure God, he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the wolde, with his discrecion hath he spied out the heauens. At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he dia weth vpon y^e cloudes from the vtmost partes of y^e earth: he m^{ak}eth lighteninge to rayne, and b^{ri}ngeth forth the wyndes out of their treasures: his w^{is}dome maketh all men fooles. And confounde be all casters of ymages, for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. The vayne craftes men with their woites, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Jacobs porciō is not such: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaunce: The LORDE of hostes is his name. Put away thy vncleennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inha^{bit}ours of this londe a greete waye off, and trouble them of such a fastid, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurt: Alas, how painfull are my scourges vnto me: For I consid^{er} this sore by my self, and I must suffre it. My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone from me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to spiede out my tente, or to set vpon my hangings. For the hyrdmen haue done falsly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with the ir catell, and all are scattered abroad. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greete felciō out of the north: to make the cities of Juda a wilderness, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. Now I knowe (o LORDE) that is not in mas power to orde his owne wales, or to rule his owne steppes and goinges. Therefore chaste thou vs (o LORDE) but with sau^{er} ure, and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not wtherly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gentiles, that knowe y^e not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consuted, deuoured and destroyed Jacob, and haue reed out his glory.

The XI. Chapter.

This is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Jeremij for to preach, sayenge:

Hear the wordes of the covenant, and speake vnto all Juda, and to all them that dwel at Jerusalem. And saye thou vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto y^e wordes of this covenant: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipce, from the yron furnace, sayenge: Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I comma^{nde} you: so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, y^e I haue swoine vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is aunso LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in y^e ciues off Juda and rounde aboute Jerusalem, and saye: Heare the wordes off this covenant, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer since they came that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipce, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnyng by tymes, sayenge: hearken vnto my voyce: Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor encline their eares vnto me, but folowed the wicked ymaginacions of their owne hertes. And therefore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this covenant, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstodunge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is so: I deure, that whole Israel and all the ciuens off Jerusalem are gone backe: They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Juda haue broken my covenant, which I made wth the ir fathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye are vnto me, I will not heate you. The shal the ciues off Juda and the ciuens of Jerusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblacions: but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. For as many cities as thou hast (o Juda) so many goddes hast thou also: And loke how many streets there be in the (o Jerusalem) so many shamefull alters haue ye set vpon, to offere vpon them vnto Baal. But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse nor prayer for them: for though they are vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shamefull greates blasphemies in my house: euen as though that holy flesh might absolve the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, a sayre one, a frutesfull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary report off the abroad, he will burne the vpon, and destroye thy braunches. For the LORDE off hostes that plated the, hath deuysed a plague for the (o thou house of Israel and Juda) for y^e euil that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and vnderstonded it, for thou hast shewed me the ir ymaginacions. But I (as a mcke lambe) was caried awaye to beslayne: not knowinge, that they had deuysed such a counsell agaynst me, sayenge: We will destroye his meate with wod, and drye him out of the londe off the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beset the now (o LORDE of hostes) thou righteuous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therefore spaketh thus of the ciuens of Anathoth, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure bondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Your yonge me shal perish with the swearde, y^e sonnes and youre daughters shal vterly dye of hunger, so that none shal remayne. For vpon the ciuens off Anathoth wil I bunge a plage, and the yeare of their visitacion.

The XII. Chapter.

LORDE, thou art more righteuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so well with them, which (with out eny shame) offende and lyue in wickednesse: Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost much off the, yet doest thou not punyssh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, and proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house, and apoynte them for the daye off slaughteringe.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

The catell and the bydes are gone, yet saye they: rush, God will not destroye vs vterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne wth hoises? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Jordane? For thy brethren ad thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence. Beleue them not, though they saye wordes to the. As forme (saye I) I haue forsaken my ne owne dwellinge place, and lest myne heretage. My life also that I lone so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therfore haue I forsaken it. Myne heretage is vnto me, as a spreckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. So hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eat it vp.

Dyuerse byrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. See the whole londe lieth waist, and noman regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heeth every waye, for the swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of y^e lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe consounded of youre owne runnynges, because of the grente wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne enel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Juda from amonge them. And whē I haue rooted the out, I wil be at one with the agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne y^e wayes of them, to sweare by my name: The LORDE lyuerh (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) the shal they be reckened amonge my people. But yf they wil not obeye, the will I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The XIII. Chapter.

Worouer, thus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye & get the a linnen bieche, and gyde it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a biech, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the bieche that thou hast prepared, put aboute the, and get the vp, and go to Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Up, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the bieche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the biech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the biech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saith the LORDE: Euen so will I corrupte the pryde off Juda; and the hie mynde off Ierusalem. This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowen wicked ymaginacions off their owne heart, change vpon straunge goddes, the haue they serued & worshipped: and therfore they shal be as this biech, that serueth for nothinge. For as strately as a biech lieth vpon a mō loynes, so strately dyd I bynde y^e whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Iudam to me, saith the LORDE: that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: y^e they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therfore laye this ydole before them, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: euery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: that thou we knowe not, y^e euery pot shal be fylled with wyne: Then shalt thou saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll alle the inhabitours of this lōde wth dronckēnes, the kynges that syt vpon Dadda stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all y^e dwell at Ierusalem. And I will shute them out agaynst another, yee y^e fathers agaynst the sonnes, saith the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no dysdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that spaketh. Honour y^e LORDE youre God here, or he take his light from you, and orener you re fete stembles in darknesse at y^e hill: lest ye loke for the light, be tume it in to y^e shadowe and darknesse of deach. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you secrete warnyng, I will mourne from my whole herte for your stubburnesse. Piteously will I wepe, and the teares shal gush out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke shal be carried awaye captiue.

Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble yo^r selues, for you downe lowe, for y^e crowne of y^e glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities toward the south shal be shut vp, & no man shal open the. All Iuda shal be caried awaye captiue, for that none shall remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde the, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall vpon the. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou hast taught the thy self, and made the masters ouer the. Shal not sorowe come vpon the, as on a woman trauelinge with childe? And yf thou woldest saye the in thine hert: Wherfore come these thinges vpon me? Euen for the multitude of thy blasphemies, shal thy hynder partes & thy fete be disconered. For like as the man of Jude maye chaunge his tyme, & the cat of the mountayne hir spettes: so maye yet that be exercised in euell, do good. Therfore will I scatte you, lyke as y^e stubble that is take awaye with y^e south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saith the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. Therfore shal I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discover thy thyees, that thy prauities maye be sene: y^e aduourtie, thy deedly malice, thy beastlynnes and thy shamefull whordome. For vpon the felde and hilles I haue senethy abhominacions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalem) whē wilt thou ever be clensed eny more?

The XIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, concerninge y^e deth off the frutes.

Iuda shal mourne, men shall not go much more thorow his gates: the lōde shal be nomore had in reputacion, & the crye of Ierusalem shal breake out. The lordes shal sende their seruantes to fetch water, & when they come to the welles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their vessels home emptye. They shal be ashamed & confounded, & shal couer their heades. For the grounde shal be dued vp, because there cometh no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shal be ashamed, & shal couer their heades. The hynde shal forsake the yonge fawne, that se bugeth forth in y^e felde, because there shal be no grasse. The wilde Asses shal stonde in the Masse, and drawe in their wynde like the Dogs, their eyes shal sayle for want of grasse.

Donles oure owne wickednesse rewarde vs. But LORDE do thou acordinge to y^e name, though cure transgressions and synnes be many. For thou art the comforte & helpe of Israel in the tyme of trouble. Why wilt thou be as a straunger in the Londe, and as one that goeth ouer the felde, & cometh in only to remayne for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a coward, and as it were a giant that yett maye not helpe? For thou art our (o LORDE) and we beare thy name, therfore forsake vs not.

Then spake the LORDE, concerninge this people y^e haue pleasure to go so nembly wth their fete, and loue not of, and therfore displeaseth the LORDE: in so much, that he will now brynge agayne to remembraunce all their mysdedes, & punysh all their synnes. Recuen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offere burnt offrises & sacrifices, yett wil not I acceptethem. For I will destroye them with the swearde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no hunger shal come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende the: yett they preach vnto you false visions, charmynges, vanite, and disceatfulnesse of their owne herte. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and y^e saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner hunger be in this londe: With swearde & with hunger shal these prophetes perish, and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of hunger, & be slayne with the swearde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) both they & their wyues, their sonnes and their daughters. So thus wil I pr^e their wickednes vpon the. This shal the saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceasseinge daye & night. For my people shal be destroyed with greate harme, and shal perish with a greate plage. For yf I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Althow I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

Rec their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an vntowne londe.

The xvij. Chap. Jo. xxxi.

Hast thou then utterly forsaken Juda? (sayde J) Dost thou so abhorre Sis? Hast thou so plagued us, that we can be healed no more? We looked for peace, and there cometh no good: for the tyme of health, & lo, here is nothinge but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all our mysdoes, and the synnes of our fathers, that we have offended y. Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, for get not thy lowynge & yndnes: Remember y throne of thyne honoure, breake not the covenant, that thou hast made with us. Are there any amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou o LORDE our God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these things.

The XV. Chapter.

When spaketh the LORDE vnto me, ad sayde: Though Moses and Samuel stode before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryne them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: Whyther shal we go? The tell the: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to honger, some in to captiuite. For I will bunge foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. The swearde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre ad beestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatere them aboute al so in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses the sonne of Ezechias Kinge of Juda, for the things that he dyd in Jerusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Jerusalem? Who shal be sory for the? O who shal make intercession, to opeyne peace for the? Seinge thou goest from me, ad turnest backward, saith the LORDE: Therefore I will stretch out myne honde agaynst the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatere the abroad with the fanne on every side of the londe: I will waist my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sonnes of the see. Vpon y mothers of their children, I shal bunge a destroyer in the noone daye. Sodenly and vnawarres, shal I sende a feare vpon their cities. She that hath borne vij. children, shal haue none, hir herte shal be full of sorowe.

The Sonne shall saye her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and sayn te for very heuynesse. As for those y remay-ne, I wil deluyner them vnto the swerde of their enemies, saith the LORDE. O mocha, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, as anemie and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet every man speake enell vpon me. And y LORDE answered me: Led not I the then in good: Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe y, when thine enemye oppresseth the. Dost thou yon hurte another, n one metalle that cometh from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I wil geue them out in to a pray, not for my money, but because of all youre synnes, that y haue done i all youre coastes. And I wil ge you with youre enemies in to a londe, y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

OLORDE sayde I then thou knowest all things, therefore remembre me, ad vnto me, deluyner me frō my persecutors: Receauem my cause in y lōge wyath, yet thou knowest that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. When I had founde chy wordes, I at them vngadely: they haue made my hert ioyfull & glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God of hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scowars, neher is my deluyte therein: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heuynesse cease for euer? Are my plagis then so great, y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not conuynce? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto the: and so shal I make the a strong wall of stele agaynst this peop'e. They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuaile. For I myself will be with the, to helpe the, and deluyner the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryde the out of the bondes of the wicked, and deluyner the out of the honde of rantes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Oruer, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt take y no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible death, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as do ge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and honger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace frō this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shal not be buried: no man shal bewepe them, no man shal clippe or shawe himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shal not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heuynesse for father and mother. Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: Beholde, I shal take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth ad gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde, yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye see it.

Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefor hath the LORDE denyed all this greate plage for vs? O what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE our God? Then make thou them this answer: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saith the LORDE) and haue cleued vnto strange goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsaken, and haue not kepe my lawe. And ye w' your shamefull blasphemies, haue exceded the wickednes off youre fathers. Soe every one off you foloweth the frawerde euil ymaginacion off his owne hert, and is not obedi- ent vnto me.

Therefore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue strange goddes daye and night, there wil I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therefore (saith the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall no more be sayed: The LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lōde of Egypte: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, & from all londes wher I had scatred them. For I wil bunge the agayne in to the lōde, that I gaue vnto the- ir fathers.

Beholde (saith the LORDE) I will sende out many fishers to take them, and after y wil I sende out many hunters to hunte the out, from all mountaynes and hilles ad out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd from my face, neher can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first wil I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stinkinge Idols and abominacions, wherw' they haue fylled myne heretage. O LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shal come vnto the from the indes off the woulde, and saye: Vnrelyoure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make, those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therefore, I wil once teach them (saith y LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, y my name is y LORDE.

The XVII. Chapter.

Oure synne (o ye off the trybe of Juda) is writte in the table of y' hertes, & graue so vpon the edges of y' alters w' a penne of yron & with an Adamant clawe: y' youre children also maye thynke vpon youre alters, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes & felde. Wherefore, I will make all youre substaunce & treasure be spoyled, for the greate synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all y coostes off youre lōde. Ye shal be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saith the LORDE: Cursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ad that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from y LORDE. He shal be like the heeth, that groweth in the wilderness. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shal not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wilderness, in a salt and vnooccupied londe. O Bluffed is the man, that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harne, when it commeth, but his leaues are greene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bunge forth frute. Amonge all thinges lyuynge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hert.

Who shall then knowe it? Euen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, ad search the reynes and rewarde euery mā acordinge to his wayes, and acordinge to the frute off his counceils.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but buri-
geth forth no yonge: he commeth by riches, but not righteously. In the myddest off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very soole. But thou (O LORDE) whose throne is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holyrest: Thou art the comforte off Israel. All they that forsake thee, shalbe confounded: all they that departe from thee, shalbe witten in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite of the waters of life.

Heale me, O LORDE, and I shall be whole:
saue thou me, and I shall be saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledunge the flock in thy wayes, haue compelled none by violence, for I neuer desired any mā's deeth, this knowest thou well. My wordes also we re right before the. Be not now terrible vnto me (O LORDE) for thou art he, in whom I hepe, when I am in parrill. Let my persecuters be confounded, but not me: let them be a frayed, and not me. Thou shalt bunge vpon the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right. soie.

Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: Go and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Jerusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citefyns of Jerusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: Take hede for yourselynes, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Jerusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but ha-lowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded you re fathers. Howbeit they obeyed me not, nether hearkened they vnto me: but were obstinate & stubburne, ad nether obeyed me, ner re-ceaued my correccion.

Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saith the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to y cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath:
If ye will halowe the Sabbath, so that ye do no worke there in: then shal there go tho-

row the gates of this cite, kinges and pry-ces, that shall sit vpon the stole of David:
They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ry-
de vpon horses, both they and their princes:
The whole Iuda and all the citefyns of Jerusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited.
There shall come men also from the cites of Iuda, from aboute Jerusalem, ad from y londe of Ben Janun, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wildernesse: which shall bringe burnt offrings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre up thankes geuynge in the house of the LORDE.
But yf ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare yours burthens thorow the gates off Jerusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I se fyre vpon the gates off Jerusalem, ad it shal burne vpon the houses off Jerusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The XVIII. Chapter.
This is another communication, that God had with Jeremy, sayenge:

Rise, and go downe in to the potters house, and there shall I tell the mox off my mynde. Now when I came to the potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessell that the potter made off claye, brake amonge his ho-des: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, acordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: Maye not I do w^e you, as this potter doeth, O ye hese off Israel: saith the LORDE: Beholde, y house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the potters honde.

When I take in honde to rote out, to destroie, or to waiste awaye any people or kigo-me: yff that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) couerte from their wickednes: Immediately, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bunge vpon the. Agayne: When I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a peple or a kingdom: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Im-mediatly, I repente off the good, that I de-uysed to do forthem.

Speake nowtherfore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge out of your honde agaynst you.

Therefore, let euery man turne from his euell waye, take vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: No more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginations, and do euery mā acordinge to the wil fuinesse of his owne mynde.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Are amonge the heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the daughter of Sion hath done. Shal not yf snowe (yf melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moystr-the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be so grauen awaye, that they runne no more, geue moystnesse, ner make frutefull?
But my people hath so forgotten me, yf they haue made sacrifice vnto wayne goddes.
And whyle they folowed their owne wayes
they are come out of the hie strete, and gone into a sore waye not vsed to be troden. Where thorow they haue brought their londe in to an everlastinge wilderness and scome:
So yf who so euer trauaileth ther by, shal-be abashed, and waggeth their heades. With an East wynde will I scatred the, before the ire enemies. And when their destruction cometh, I will turne my backe vpon them, but not my face.

Then sayde they: come, let vs ymagin-sin thinge agaynst this Jeremy. See this dyd euen the prestes, to whom yf lawe was committred: the Senatours, yf were the wyfist and the prophetes, which wanted not yf worde off God. Come sayde they: let vs cut out his euge, and let vs not regarde his wor-des. Considre me (O LORDE) and heare the voyce of myne enemies. Do they not recompence euell for good, when they dygg a pye for my soule? Remembre, how that I stode before the, to speake forth, ad to turne awaye thy wrath from them.

Therefore let their childre dye of hunger,
and let them be oppressed with the swearde.
Let their wyues be robbed of their childre, and become wyddowes: let their husbodes be slayne, let their yonge men be kyled with the swearde in the felde. Let the noyse be her-de out of their houses, when the murderere cometh sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my feet. Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their counsell, that they haue deuysed, to slaye me.
And therefore forgene them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltye: This shalt thou do vnto the in y tyme of thy indignacion.

The XIX. Chapter.

Oroner, thus saide the LORDE vnto Jeremy: Go thy waye, and bye the an erthen pytcher, and bringe forth the Senatours and chiefe prestes in to the valley of the childre off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of buick, & shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ad ye citefyns of Jerusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bunge soch a plage vpon this place, that yf eares of all that heare it, shal glo-
we. And that because they haue forsake me, and unhalowed this place, and haue offered in it vnto straunge goddes: whos necher they,
their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also w^e the bloude of innocentes, for they haue set up an altar vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt offeringe vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therefore, yf tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) yf this place shal no more be called Tophet, ner yf valley of yf childre off En-non, but yf valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda & Jerusale, & kill the downe w^e the swearde in yf sight of their enemies, ad of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcasses wil I ge-ue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and bestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, ad despyed: that who so geeth there by, shal be abashed & geast vpon her, because of all hir plagis.

I will fede them also w^e the flesh of their sonnes & their daughters. See euery one shal eate vpon another in the beseginge & straynes-se, wher w^e their enemies (yf seke their lyues) shal kepe the in. And the pytcher shalt thou breake in the sight of the mē, yf shalbe w^e the,
and saye vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE off hostes: Euen so wil I destroye this people & cite: as a potter breaketh a vessel, that can not be made whole agayne.

In Tophet shal they be buried, for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to the yf dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (for the houses of Jerusalem & the houses of the kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet, because off all the houses, in whose parlors they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hostes of heauē, and poured out drynke offrings vnto straunge goddes.
And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where

The prophet Jeremy.

the LORDE had sent him to prophesie, and stode in the court off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bunge vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plagis that I haue deuysed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate, and wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The XX. Chapter.

When Pashur the preast, the sonne off Ammer, chiefe in the house off y^e LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so fast fastly: he synote Jeremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate off Ben Jamin, in the house off y^e LORDE. The next daye felowinge, Pashur brought Jeremy out off the stockes agayne. Then sayde Jeremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nempie Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull and afrayed) euery where. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure y^e: which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before y^e face.

And I wil geue whole Iuda vnder the power off the kinge off Babilon, which shal carie some vnto Babilon prisoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Moreover, all y^e substaunce off this londe, all their precious and gorgeous wycke, all costlyneste, and all the treasure off the kinges off Iuda: wil I geue into the hōdes off their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon.

But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine household, and to Babilon shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me, and makest me stronge agayne. All the daye longe am I despysed, and laughed to scoone off euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. For y^e which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

Wherefore, I thought from hence forth, not to speake off him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnyng fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisiois and blasphemies, yee euen off my ne owne companyons, and off such as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon humle vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his tounge: y^e we maye ouercome him, and be a venged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mighty giaunte: therfore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shal haue an euertlasting shame. And now, O LORDE off hoostes, thou righteous searcher which knowest the reynes and the very hertes: la me se them punished, for vnto the I committe my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath deluyered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: unhappy be y^e daye, wherein my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the citica which y^e LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure off them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue herself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remayned still in her. Wherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience off labour and sorrow: and to lede my life with shame.

The XXI. Chapter.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him in Pashur the sonne off Nieldia, and Sephomias the sonne off Maasia prest, sayenge: Prece vnell at the LORDE (we praye the) off our behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (pauenture) will deale with vs, accordinge to his marvelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Jeremy: Oene Sedechias this answer. Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherewith ye fight agaynst the kinge off Babilon and the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute y^e walles: and I wil brige the together in to the myddest off this cite, and I myself will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, and with a mighty arme, in great displeasure and terrible wrath: and will saye them, that dwell in this cite: yee both me and carrell shal dye off the pestilence.

And after this (saith the LORDE) I shall deluyer Sedechias the kinge off Iuda, and his seruantes, his people (and such as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swearde, and hunger) into the power off Nabuchodonosor kinge off Babilon: yee in to the hōdes off their enemies, in to the hōdes off those y^e folowe vpon their lyues, which shal smyte them with y^e swerde: they shal not pite the, they shal not spare them, they shal haue no mercy vpon them.

And vnto this people thou shalt saye:

Thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye off life and deeth. Who so abyde in this cite, shal perish: ether wth the swearde, with hunger, or with pestilence. But who so goeth out to holde on y^e Caldees parre, y^e besege it, he shal saue his life, and shal wryte his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite (saith the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geat in to the honde off the kinge off Babilon, and be brennt with fyre.

And vnto the house off the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: heare the worde off y^e LORDE (o thou house off David) for thus saith the LORDE: Minstre rightuousnes, and that soone, deluyre the oppressed fro violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quench it, because off the wickednes off youre ymaginations. Beholde (saith the LORDE) I wil come vnto you, that dwell in the valles, rockes and felde, and saye: Tush, who will make vs afrayed? or who will come in to oure houses? For I will vifit you (saith the LORDE) because off the wickednes off youre inventions, and will kyndle such a fyre in youre wood, as shal consume all, that is aboute you.

The XXII. Chapter.

Thus sayde the LORDE also: Go downe in to the house off the kinge off Iuda, and speake therethese wordes, and saye: heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off David: thou and thy seruantes and y^e people, that go in and out at this gate. Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deluyre the oppressed fro the power off the violent: do not grene ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, and shed no innocent bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vnto Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon houses, both they and their seruantes, and their people. But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by my ne owne self (saith y^e LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kynges house off Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye off it, yf I make the not so waist? (thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in: I will prepare a destroyer with his weapons for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shal speake one to another: Wherefore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenamt off the LORDE their God, and haue worshipped and serued strange goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he cometh not agayne, and seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saith the LORDE, as touchinge Sellum the sonne off Josias kinge off Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shal never come hither agayne, for he shal dye in the place, where vnto he is led captiue, and shal se this londe nomore. Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vnrightuousnes, and his perlers with the good, that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neghburs labour, ner payeth him his hye. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, and gorgeous perlers: he causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes make he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou prouokest me to wrath with y^e Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as longe as he dealt with equite and rightuousnesse? Dee when he helped y^e oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saith the LORDE. Where theles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon couetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wrenge and violence. And therfore, thus saith the LORDE agaynst Joachim, y^e sonne off Josias kyng off Iuda: They shal not mourne for him: (as they vseto do) alas brother, alas syfter:

The prophet Jeremyn.

Nether shall they saye vnto hym: Alas sye, alas for that noble pryncce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast with out the gates of Jerusalem.

D Clymme vpon the hill off Libanus (o thou donghter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crye from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite. But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shal be dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shal be caried awaye in to captiuite: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, ad makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal y mour nyng be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman traungling with childe.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE.) Though Jechonias the sonne off Joachim kinge off Juda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him off: And I wil geue the in to y power off the that sette to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the power off the Caldees. Moreover, I will sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, ad there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desire to retorne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This man Jechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shal be sent awaye, and cast out in to a lode, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall any of his sede be so happie, as to sit vpon the seate of David, and to beare rule in Juda.

The XXIII. Chapter.

A Be vnto the shepherdes, that destroye, and scatere my flocke, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that feede my people: Ye scatere ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therfore, now will I viset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saith y LORDE: And will gather together the remna unt of my flocke, from all londes that I haue dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also amonge them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will raise vp the righteous brannch off David, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equitye and rightousnes agayne in the earth.

In his tyme shall Juda be saued, and Israel shal dwell without feare. And this is the name that they shall call him: even the LORDE oure righteous maker. And thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that it shall no more be sayde: the LORDE lyeth, which broughte the children off Israel out of the londe of Egypt: But the LORDE lyeth, which broughte forth, ad led the sede of the house off Israel, out off the north londe, and from all countries where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shate: I am become like a dionden man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very sure of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes. Because the londe is full of aduocaters, wherow it is destroyed and mourneth, and y pleasant pastures of the deserte are dryd vp. See the waye that men take, is wicked, their gouernaunce is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are polluted wthoutes, ad their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, the waye ye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, when in they maye sticke and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, euen the yere of the ir visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene fully amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y they preached for Baal, ad discaued my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the prophetes off Jerusalem foule aduocaters, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hode, flatteringe them, so that they can not retorne from their wickednes. All these with their cietyes are wcome, as Sodom, and as the inhabitants off Gomorre.

Therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with wormewood, and make them drynke the water of gall. For so the pe phetes of Jerusalem is the sicknes of Apocri he come in to all the londe.

And therfore the LORDE of hostes geaeth you this warnynge: heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and discaue you: for they speake the meanynge of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sittan in the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his deuyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wecher of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perforce, and fulfull the thought of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanynge.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my counsell and had my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginacions. Am I the God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farr off? saith the LORDE. Maye any man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach yes in my name, saye ge: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this continue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotylte of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that every one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, wher Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstandeth my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therfore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpo the prophetes, that steale my worde purely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tungen to speake:

The xxiii. Chap. Fo. xxxiii.

The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith y LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lies, and discaue my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. They shal do this people greate harme, saith the LORDE.

If this people, ether my prophete or prest are the, and saye: what is the burthen of the LORDE? Thou shalt saye vnto them: What? burthen? Therfore will I cast you fro me (saith the LORDE) because ye youre selues are a burthen. And the prophet, prest or people that vseth this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) him will I viset, and his house also.

But thus shall ye saye, every one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the lyuynge God the LORDE of hostes oure God.

Thus shall euery man saye to the prophetes: what answer hath the LORDE geuen the? Or, what saith the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstandinge sent vnto you, and forbade you to speake of the LORDES burthen.

Beholde therfore, I will repute you as a burthen, and will cast you out of my presence: yee and the cite also, that I gaue you and youre fathers: and will bringe you to an everlastinge confucion, and in to soch a shame, as shal neuer be forgotten.

The XXIII. Chapter.

The LORDE shewed me a visio: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before y Temple of the LORDE after y Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon had led awaye captiue Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Juda, the mightie men also of Juda, with the workemasters and conyngemen of Jerusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good fyges, euen like as these that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very noughtie figes, which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Jeremyn? I sayde: fyges, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

The prophet Jeremy.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saith Y LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good fyges, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place into the lande of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne into this lande: I will buyde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with the ir whole herte.

And like as thou knowest the naughtie fyges, which maye not be eat, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saith the LORDE) let Sede chias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remayne ouer in this lande, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plagued in all kingdomes & landes. And will make them to be a reprove, a comon by worde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal scatter them. I will sende the swerde, hunger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clene consumed them out of the lande, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

The XXV. Chapter.

A Sermon that was giuen vnto Jeremy, vpon all the people of Iuda: In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babylon. Which sermone, Jeremy the prophet made vnto all the people of Iuda, & to all the Inhabitors of Ierusalem, on this maner:

From the xij. yeare of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxiij. yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me, And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vpearly, I haue geue you warnynge in season, but ye wolde not heare me. Though the LORDE hath sent his seruantes, all the prophetes vnto you in season: Yet wolde ye not obeye, ye wolde not encline yo^r cares to heare.

He sayde: turne agayne euery man from his euell waye, & from youre wicked ymaginations, & so shal ye dwell for euer in the lande, that the LORDE promised you & youre fore fathers: And go not after straunge goddes, seruet them not, worshippe them not, & angre me not with the workes of youre hōdes: then will not I punyssh you. Neuertheles, ye wolde not heare me (saith the LORDE) but

hane besied me with the workes of youre hōdes, to youre owne greate harme.

Wherefore, thus saith the LORDE of hostes: Because ye haue not hearkened vnto my worde, so, I will sende out, & call for all the people, & dwell in the north (saith the LORDE) & wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babylon my seruauant, and wil bange them vpon this lande, and vpon all that dwell therein, & vpon all the people that are abrode them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wilderness, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome & the bryde, the voyce of the noynted, with the cresshettes: & this whole lande shal become a wilderness, & they shal serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babylon, thre score yeares and ten. When thre score yeares are expyied, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babylon & his people, saith the LORDE: yee & the lande of the Caldees, & wil make it a perpetuall wilderness, & wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that lande, which I haue dryssed agaynst it: yee all that is written in this booke, which Jeremy hath prophesied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuerse nations & greates kynges, for I wil recompense them, accordinge to their dedes & workes of their owne hondes.

For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of indignacion fro my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende thee) to drinke of it: that when they haue drunke thereof, they maye be madd, & out of their wittes, when the swerde cometh, that I wil sende amonge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDEs honde, & made all the people drinke thereof, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, & all the cities of Iuda, their kinges & prynces: come be thē desolate, waiste, despyssed & cursed, accordinge as it is come to passe this daye. For Pharaos kinge of Egipte, his seruantes, his prynces & his people altogether one another and all kinges of the lande of Egypt, all kinges of the Philistynes lande, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron & the remnant of Asdod, the Edomites, the Moabites & the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tyre & Sidon: the kinges of the Isles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz & the shauen Imaath: all the kinges of Araby, & generally all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Sumir, all the kinges of Elam, all the kinges of the Medes, all kinges toward the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: & eue and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commandement of the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, speake, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thou row the swerde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hostes threaten you: drinke it ye shal, and that shortly. For lo, I begynne to plague the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: chynke ye then, that I will leaue you unpunished? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swerde vpo all the inhabitours of the earth, saith the LORDE of hostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitation. With a greates noyse shal he come from his court regall. He shal geue a greates voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shal be herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his court of iustice with all flesh and punyssh the vngodly, saith the LORDE.

For thus sayeth Y LORDE of hostes: Be holde, a miserable plague shal go from one people to another, and a greates stomy water shal arise from all the endes of the earth. And the same daye shal the LORDE himself slaye them, from one ende of the earth to another. There shall no more be made for euy of them, none gathered vp, none buried: but shal lie as dunge vpon the grounde.

Wourne (o ye shepherdes) & crie: spuincle youre selues with asshes, o ye rammes of the flocke: for the tyme of youre slaughter is fulfilled, and ye shal fall like vessels conynghly made for pleasure.

The shepherdes shall haue no waye to fle, and the rammes of the flocke shall not scape. Then shal the shepherdes crie horribly, and the rammes of the flocke shal mourne: for the LORDE shal consume their pasture, and their best felde shal lie deed because of the horrible wrath of the LORDE. They shal forsake their foldes like as a lyon: for their landes shalbe waiste, because of the wrath of the destroyer, and because of his fearfull indignacion.

The XXVI. Chapter.

In the begynnyng of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kyng of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: Stonde in the court of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) came to do worshippe in the LORDES house, all the wordes of I command: the to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) they will herke, and turne euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plague, which I haue determined to brynge vpon them, because of their wicked inventions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vpon tyme, and still sendynge: yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhured of all the people of the earth. And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo: and this cite shalbe so waiste, that no man shal dwell therein?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumoure, & they came soone out of the kinges palace into the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these wordes: This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye yourselves haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house & agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. Therfore amende youre wayes, and youre aduysementes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of

theLORDE youre God: so shal theLORDE repēt of the plague, yf he had dewyfed agaynst
you. Now as forme: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expedient and good.
But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre felnes, this cite & all the inhabitours there of, gilcie of innocent blonde. For this is of a treuch: that theLOR DE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes : This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE our God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp & sayde thus vnto all the people : Micheas the Moersaite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda : Thus saith the LORDE of hostes : Sion shalbe plowed like a filde, Ierusalem shalbe an heape of stones, & the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wood. Dyd Ezechias y kinge of Iuda & the people of Iuda put him to death for this : No verely, but rather feared y LORDE, & made their praier vnto him. For the which cause also y LORDE repented of the plague, y he had denyed agaynst them. Shuide we then do soch a shamefull dede agaynst oure soules ? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORDE, called Urias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim : this mā preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lōde, acordinge to all as Jeremy saith. Now when Iochim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herd his wordes, the kinge went abouce to slaye him. When Urias perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & departed in to Egypte.

Then Joachim the Kinge sent seruantes into the lode of Egypte, Namely: Elmatha the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men wth him into Egypte, which fetched Urias out of Egypte, & brought him vnto Kinge Joachim that slewe him with the sworde, & cast his deed body into y^e comō peoples graue. But Abicam the sonne of Saphan helped Jere my, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slayne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

At the begynnyng of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Iuda, came this worde vnto Jere my from the LORDE, which spake thus vn to me: Make the bondes & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende the to the kin ge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge

The xxv. Chap.

of Amon, the kinge of Tirus, & to the king of Sidon: & that by the messengers, which shal come to Jerusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto the masters: Thus saierh the LORD of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto yo^r ma sters: I am he that made the earth, the sea, & y^e catell that are vpon the ground, with my greate power & outstretched arme, & he ue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. As now will I deliuer all these landes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Ba bilon my seruaunt. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. All people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his chilides children, vntil the tyme of the sam be he come also: Yet many people & grea tinges shal serue him.

Moreover, that people & Kingdome which will not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that will not put their neckes vnder y^e yocke of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I put with sweards, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hand, saith the LORDE. And therefore, forewarn yours prophetes, soysayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye to you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon.
For they preach you lies, to bunge you farre from youre londe, & that I might cut you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yocke of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I will re-maine still in their owne lode (saith the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell therein.

All these things tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put youre neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye liue.
Why wilte thou and thy people perish with the swearde, with hunger, with pestilence as the LORDE hath denyed for all peple, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon.
Therfore geue no eare vnto those prophets (that tell you : Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, nether haue I sent them, saith the LORDE: how bethey are bolde, falsly for to prophete in my name: that I mighte y sooner dryue you out, & that ye mighte perish with yo^r preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORD: hearene the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be broughte together agayne from Babilon: for they prophesie vnto you. Hearethem not, but saye the kinge of Babilon, y remayne lyue. Where fewerall ye make this cite to be destroyed?

But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commyt
ted vnto them, then let them praye the LOR DE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the or naments (which are in the house of the LOR DE, and remayne yet in the house of the kin ge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lawer, the seate and the residue of the oma nentes that yet remayne in this citie, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon to ke not, when he caried awaye Iechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Iuda, with all the power of Iuda and Ierusalem, from Je rusalem vnto Babilon, captyue.

zechus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, as touchinge the resi-dew of the ornaments of the LORDES house, of the kinge of Iudaes house, and of Jerusalem: They shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they shall remayne, vntil I vsset them, saith the LORDE. Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. And this was done in the same yere: end in the begynnynge of the rigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

Be in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Sannias y sonne of Assur the prophet of Gaboon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes 7 of all the people, & sayde: Thus saierth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: I haue broke the yocke of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare wil I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornaments of the LORDES house, y Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I will bringe agayne Jehomas the sonne of Joachin the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the prisoners of Iuda, (y are caried vnto Babilon), & in to this place, saierth y LORDE, for I wil breake y yocke of the kinge of Babilon.

Then the prophet Jeremy gave answer into that prophesie that was, before the pres-tes & before all the people that were present in the house of the LORD. And the prophet Jeremy sayde: Amen, ye LORD do this; & grantee the thing which thou hast prophecied: that he maye bringe agayne all the ornaments of the LORDS house, & restore all the prisoners from Babilon into their place.
Nevertheless, verie thou also, what I will

saye, that thou & all the people maye heare:
The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which prophesied of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many na-cions & greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

And Hananias the prophet took the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, & brake it: & with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORD spoken: Euen so will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nations, yee & that within this two yeare. And so the prophet Jeremy wente his waye. After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORD came vnto the prophet Jeremy sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saith the LORD: Thou hast broken the chayne of wodd, but in steade of wodd, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babylon, yee & so shall they do. And I wil geue him y beeftes in the selve. Then sayde the prophet Jeremy vnto y prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORD hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a false beleue. And therfore thus saith y LORD: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lōde, & within a yeare thou shalt die, because thou hast falsely spokē agaynst the LORD. So Hananias the prophet died the same yeare in the seuenth Moneth.

For thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Let not these prophetes and soothsayers y^e be amonge you, disceane you: z beleue not youre owne dreames. For why, they prech you lies in my name, z I haue not sent them, saith the LORDE. But thus saith the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled lxx yeares at Babilon, I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I wil carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deuysed for you, saith the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, z not trouble (which I geue you all redie) z that ye might haue hope agayne. Ye shal crie vnto me, ye shal go z call vpon me, z I shal heare you. Ye shal seke me, z fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saith the LORDE) and will delyuer you out of prison, z gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scatred you, saith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captyue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath ray sed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the finger that syteth in the stole of Dauid, and all y^e people that dwell in this cite, youre bre thren that are not gone with you into captiuite.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hostes: Beholde, I wil sende a swerde, hunger z pestilence vpon them, z wil make them like vntymely syges, that maye not be eate for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the swerde, with hunger z death.

I will delyuer them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, z put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: z that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saith the LORDE) which I sent vnto them by my seruantes the prophetes. I stode vpearly, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saith the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye prisoners, whom I sent from Ierusalem vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LOR

DE of hostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab y^e sonne of Colaias, z of Sedech the sonne of Niasia, which prophesied vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil delyuer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye see them before youre eyes. And all y^e prisoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal cate up them this terme of cursinge, and saye: The God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedech z Achab, when the kinge of Babilon was in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their honours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, z assure, saith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Jerusalem, z to Sophonias the sonne of Maasias the prest, yee and sent them to all the prests where in thou wytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordened the to be prest in stede of Joiada the prest, that thou shouldest be the chiefe in the house of the LORDE amonge prophetes, z preachers, z that thou mightest put them in prison, or in y^e stocks, howe they peneth it then, that thou hast not reproued Jeremy of Anathot, which neuer leaue his prophetieng. And beside all this, I haue sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and orde vs planely, that oure captiuite shal longe endure: that we shulde buyde vs house to dwell therein, z to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes thereof. Which lettre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and I Jeremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Sende wordes to all them that be in captiuite, on this maner: Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge Semeia y^e Nehelamite: Because that Semeia hath prophesied vnto you without my commission, z brought you in to a false hope, therfore thus the LORDE doth certifie you: Beholde, I wil vyset Semeia the Nehelamite, z his seide: so that none of his shall remaine amonge this people, z none of them shal see the good, y^e I will do for this people, saith the LORDE. For he hath preached falsly of the LORDE.

The XXX. Capter.
These are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a booke. For lo, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I will hange agayne the prisoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saith the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spaketh the LORDE, concernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, every man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauayle. Who euer sawe a man trauayle with child? Enquere therafter, z se. Xce all their faces are marvelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye be lictened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Jacobs trouble, from the which he shal yet be delyuered. For in that daye, saith the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, z breake thy bondes. They shal nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shal do seruyce vnto God the LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, whom I will raise vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruant Jacob, feare not (saith y^e LORDE) and be not afayed, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the also from farre, z thy seide from the londe of their captiuite.

And Jacob shal turne agayne, he shal be in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shal make him afayed. For I am with the, to helpe the, saith the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correcte the, and that with discrecion. For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without fauour. Therfore thus saith y^e LORDE: I am sorry for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to meble with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy louers haue forgotten the, and care no thinge for the. For I haue geuen the a cruel stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy mysdedes, for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy mysdedes and synnes, I haue donethis vnto the.

And therfore all they that deuoure the, shal be deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captiuite. All they that make the waist, shal be waisted themselues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy healeth agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saith the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye vnd despised, o Sion.

For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Jacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shal be buyl ded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal haue their righte foundacion. And out of them shal go chantesgeyunge, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not diminish: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shal subdue them. Their children shal be as a fore tyme, and their congregacion shal continue in my sight. And all those that vexed them, will I visit.

A caprayne also shal come of them, and a prynce shal sprynge out from the myddest of them: him will I challenge to myself, and he shal come vnto me. For what is he, that geueth ouer his herre, to come vnto me? saith the LORDE. Ye shal be my people also, and I wil be youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shal the wrath of the LORDE breake out as a stormy water, as a mightie whyle wynde: and shal fall vpon the heades of the vngodly.

The terrible displeasure of the LORDE shal not leaue of, vntill he haue done, z perfourmed the intent of his herte, which in the latter dayes ye shal vnderstonde. At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) shal I be the God of all the generacions of Israel, z they shal be my people.

The XXXI. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in y^e wilderness from the swerde, founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LORDE now also appeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlastinge loue, therfore I spide my mercy before the. I will repaie the agayne (o thou doughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, z go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vines agayne vpon y^e hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shal plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shal crie: Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God.

Ggg

for thus saith the LORD: Reioyce with gladnes because of Jacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye: The LORD shall deliuer his people, the remnant of Israel, make them whole.

B Beholde, I will bunge them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the wolde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and such as be also deliuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greata.

They departed from hence in heynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne. I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stamble: for I will be Israels father, and Ephraim shalbe my firstborne.

Hear the woide of the LORD (o ye Gentiles) preach in the Isles, that lie farre off, and saye: he that hath scattered Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORD shall redeme Jacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plentousnes of goodes, which the LORD shall geue them: Wheat, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watered garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

C Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORD.

Thus saith the LORD: The voyce of heynes, wepyng and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORD: leaue of from wepyng and crienge, withholde thine eyes from teares, for thy labour shalbe rewarded, saith the LORD. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies: yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORD) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Moreover I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captiue) complayne on this manner: O LORD, thou hast correcte me, and thy chastenyng haue I receaved, as an vn-tamed calfe. Conuertethou me, and I shalbe conuerted, for thou art my LORD God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall forsake my self: and when I vnderstande, I shall synne vpon my thee. For verely I haue committed shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reproofe and confucion.

Vpon this complayne, I thought thus by myself: is not Ephraim my deare sonne? Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence they me that I first comoned with him, I haue humer in remembrance: therfore my very herte dryueth me vnto him: gladly and longly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORD. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (othou daughter of Israel) turne agayne to these cities of thine. How longe wilt thou go astray, othou strickinge daughter? For the LORD will worke a new thyng vpon earth: A woman shall compass a man.

For thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: It will cometherto, that when I haue broughte Juda out of captiue, these wordes shalbe herde in y londe and in his cities: The LORD, which is the sayre brydegrome of righteuousnesse, make the frutefull, othou holy hill: And there shall dwell Juda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and hussbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule, and refresh all faynte hartes. When I herde this, I came agayne to myself, and mused, like as I had bene waken out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saith the LORD) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Juda, with men and with cattell. Yee it shall cometherto, that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to reche them out, to scatter them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chaste them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buyde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saith the LORD.

Then shall it no more be sayde: y fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for every one shal bye his owne mysdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

Beholde, the dayes come (saith the LORD) y I will make a new couenant with y house of Israel & with y house of Judas: after the couenant that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the hand, & led them out of the londe of Egypt: which couenant they brake, wherfore I punished them sore, saith the LORD: But this shal be the couenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes, saith the LORD: I will plante my lawe in the inward partes of them, and write it in their hertes, and wilber their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thence forth shal no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: Knowe the LORD: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hiest, saith the LORD. For I will forgene their mysdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. Thus saith the LORD which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes thereof were scarce: his name is the LORD of hostes. Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saith the LORD: So shal the sede of Israel neuer ceasse, but all waye be a peop'e before me.

Moreover, thus saith the LORD: Like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saith the LORD. Beholde, the dayes come saith the LORD, y the cite of y LORD shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto y gate of the corner wall. From thence shal the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Garb, and shal come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcasses, and of the ashes, & all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the hoisgate towardes y east, wher as the Sanctuary of the LORD also shal be set. And when it is now buylded, & set vp of this fashion it shal neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

The XXXII. Chapter.

These wordes spaketh the LORD vnto Jeremij, in the tenth yeare of Sedechias kinge of Juda, which was y fouy year of Nabuchodonosor, whattyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Jerusalem. But Jeremij the prophet laye bounde in y court of the prison, which was in the kinge of Judas house: wher Sedechias the kinge of Juda caused him to be layed, because he had prophesied of this manner: Thus saith the LORD: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the bondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Juda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the bondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shal speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shal lye another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shal he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORD. But yf thou takest in hode to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prosper.

B And Jeremij sayde: Thus hath the LORD spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme y londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the court of the prison, (acordinge to the roode of the LORD,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anathot, in the countre of Ben-Jamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lose it out for thy self, therfore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commandement of the LORD, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him therethe moneye: euen seuen cycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writynge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him therethe moneye vpon the waighes. So I toke the euynce with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ower) and I gaue the euynce vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presen of the witnesses, that he named in the euynce, and before all the Jewes that were therby in the court of the prison.

I charged Baruch also before them, sayinge: The LORD of hostes the God of Israel commandeth the, to take this sealed euynce with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORD of hostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

Now when I had deliuered the euynce vnto Baruch y sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORD, sayinge: O LORD God, Is it thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greates power and his arme, and there is nothinge to harde for y. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, thou recompcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the besome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greates and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: greates in counsell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, to rewarde every one after his waye, and accordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greates tokens and wonders in the londe of Egypte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon these men: to make thy name greates, as it is come to passe this daye: Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egypte, with tokens, with wonders, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greates terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lode, that flowereth with mylke and honye.

Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therfore come all these plagis vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulwarkes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swerde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (O LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnessetherto: and yet in the meane season the cite is deliuered in to the power of the Caldees.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therfore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal deliuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, they shal take it in: For the Caldees shal come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlours they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offeringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wiaht.

Forseinge the children of Israel and the children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, wha haue they els done, but prouoked me with the woikes of their owne hondes: saith the LORDE.

O, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wiaht, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre: Wherein I cast it out of my sight, be cause of the greates blasphemies of the childre of Iuda and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yet they, their kinges, their princes, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the citeyns of Ierusalem.

When I stode vpearly, and taught them, and instructed them, they turned their backs to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correct. They haue set their goddes in y house, that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded his places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

Moreover thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concerninge this cite, which (as ye your selues confesse) shalbe deliuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes, wherein I haue scatered them in my wiaht, in mysearfull and greates displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, wher they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prospere. And I will set vp an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shal not runne away frome.

Yet I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greates plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shal haue their possessions in the londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal neither be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hondes of the Caldees: yet londe shalbe bought for money, & eueryde made ther vpon & sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Jamin, & rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpo the mountaynes, & in them that lie beneth, yet & in the cities that are in the deserte. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saith the LORDE.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

When the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremij on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the countre of the preson: Thus saith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh the LORDE which perfourmeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herder the: I haue shewed greates and hierchinges, which were vnkowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concerninge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and wepens, when the Caldees come to be segethem: and they shalbe fylled with the dede carcasses of men, whom I will slaye in my wiaht and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and truth.

And I will retorne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all mysdedes (wher in they haue offended agaynst me) I will cleanse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shal heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yet they shalbe as a feyred and astonnied at all the good dedes and benefices, that I will do for them. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE: In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wil: ernesse, wher in neither people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that neither people ner catell shal dwell there) shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne.

ne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shal synger: (Prayse the LORDE of hostes, for he is louyng, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shal offere vpon giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes. It shal come yetther to, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Jamin, in the felde of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promysed vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shal do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. In these daies shal Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shal dwell safe, and he that shal call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: nether shal the prestes and Levites want one to offere all waye before me, burne offeringes, to kyndle the meat offeringes, & to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremij after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruante, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. So shal also the prestes and Levites neuer sayle, but serue me. For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruante, and of the Levites my ministers.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came to Jeremij, sayenge: Considrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynnedes (saye they) had the LORDE chesen, & those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, y they haue no hope to come to gether eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therfore thus saith the LORD: If I haue made no couenaunt with daye & night, and geue no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruauit: so that I wil take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abrahā, Isaac and Jacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuite, and be mercifull vnto them.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

These are the wordes which the LORD spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, & all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes y^e were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Jerusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel: Go, & speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & tell him: The LORD sendeth this word: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his bondes, but shalt be led awaye prisoner, and deliuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORD, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORD vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the sworde, but shalt die in peace. Like as y^e fore fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were biente: so shalt thou be biente also, & in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lord. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORD.

Then spake Jeremy the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Jerusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste besieged Jerusalem, and the remnant of the cities: Namely, Lachis & Azekah, which yet remayned of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORD spake vnto Jeremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Jerusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a libertie: so that every man shulde let fre go his seruauit and handmayde, Hebrew & Hebrewesse, & no Iewe to holde his brother as a bondeman. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruantes and handmaydens, wherin they had letten go fre, and so made them bondes agayne.

For the which cause the worde of the LORD came vnto Jeremy from the LORD himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORD God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with your fathers, when I brought them out of Egypt, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: When seven yeares are out, every man shal let go fre his bought seruauit an Hebrew, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But y^e fathers obeyed me not & hearkened vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in y^e ye proclaimed, every mā to let his neghbour go fre, & in y^e ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned youre selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, y^e every man hath requyred his seruauit and handmayden agayne, when ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be your bondemen. And therefore thus saith the LORD: Ye haue not obeyed me, every man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neghb^r: wherfore, I will call you vnto a fū dome, saith the LORD: euen vnto the sworde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plagued in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Ye chose men that haue broken my couenaunt, and not kept the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof the prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Jerusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wote thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the bondes of them that folowe vpon thei lyues.

And their deed bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and bestes of the fild. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deliuer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that be syre to slaye them, and in to the hōde of the kyng of Babilons hooste, which now is departed from you: But thorow my commandement (saith the LORD) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shal fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Moreover I will laye the cities of Iuda so wast, that man shal dwell therein.

The XXXV. Chapter.

These wordes which the LORD spake vnto Jeremy, (in the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda) these: Go vnto y^e house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe the to y^e house of the LORD in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Jaiamas the sonne of Jeremy, the sonne of Sabazania, and his brethren and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORD, in to the closet of the children off Zanan the sonne off Igdaia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the treasury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, for Jonadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and your sonnes shal neuer drynke wyne, buyt no houses, so we no sede, plante no vines, yet ye shal haue no vynyardes: but for all your tyme ye shal dwell in ceteres, y^e ye maye lyue longe in the lōde, wherin ye be strangers.

Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaundmēt of Jonadab y^e sonne of Rechab oure father, in all y^e he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, & sonnes & ouredoughters. Neither buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amouge vs neither vynyardes, ner come lōde to sow: but we dwell in tentes, we ok eye, & do acordinge vnto all, that Jonadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now y^e Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde: come, let vs go to Jerusalem, y^e we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees & the Assirians: & so we dwell now at Jerusalem. Then came y^e worde of the LORD vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: Go & tell whole Iuda & all the inhabitours of Jerusalem: Wyll ye not be resourmed, so obeye my wordes: saith the LORD. The wordes which Jonadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaunded his sonnes, y^e they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast & surely kepte: for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne: but obeye their fathers cōmaundement. But as for me, I haue stōde vpearly, I haue spokē vnto you, & geuen you earnest warnynge: & yet haue ye not bene of edict vnto me. Ye haue sent my seruantes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vpearly, & sent you worde, sayenge: Turne you, every man from his wicked waye: amēde y^e lyues, & go not after straunge goddes, to worshippethē: y^e ye maye continue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and your fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childre of Jonadab Rachabs sonne haue steadfastly kepte their fathers cōmaundement, y^e he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therefore thus saith the LORD of hoostes y^e God of Israel: Beholde, I wil bringe vps Iuda & vps every one y^e dwelleth in Jerusalem, all the trouble y^e I haue deuysed agaynst the. For I haue spokē vnto the, but they wolde not folowe: I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answer. Jeremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites: Thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: For so moch as ye haue obeyed y^e cōmaundmēt of Jonadab y^e father, & kepte all his preceptes, & done acordinge vnto all y^e he hath bydden you: Therfore thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: Jonadab the sonne of Rechab shal not saye, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allwaye before me. The XXXVI. Chap.

In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kyng of Iuda, came y^e worde of the LORD vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take a booke, & write therein all y^e wordes, y^e I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda & to all the people, fro the tyme y^e I begane for to speake vnto the (in y^e reigne of Josias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda heareth of the plage, which I haue deuysed for the, they maye peradventure turne, eue ryman fro his wicked waye, that I maye forgive their offences and synnes.

Then dyd Jeremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, & Baruch wrote in the booke at y^e mouth of Jeremy, all the wordes of the LORD, which he had spoken vnto him. And Jeremy commaunded Baruch sayenge: I am in prison, so that I maye not come in to the house of y^e LORD: therfore go thou thither, & rede the booke, that thou hast writen at my mouth: Namely, the wordes off the LORD, & rede the in the LORDS house vpon the fastinge daye: that the people, whole Iuda, & all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peradventure they will praye mekely before the face of the LORD, and turne, every one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wraich and displeasure, that the LORD hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vnto all that Jeremy the prophet cōmaunded him, readinge the wordes off the LORD out off the booke in the LORDS house. And this was done in the fyfth yeare off Joachim y^e sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, in

Jer. 37. a the ix. moneth when it was commaunded, that all the people of Jerusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Juda vnto Jerusalem.

Jer. 38. d Then red Baruch the wordes of Jeremy out of the booke within the house of the LORDE, out of y^e treasury of Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the scribe, which is besyde the hyer loffe off the new dore of the LORDES house: that all y^e people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne off Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of y^e booke, he wēte dore to the kinges palace in to y^e scribes chābre for there all y^e prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnachā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hana- nias, with all the pūnces. And Micheas tol- dethem all the wordes, y^e he herde Baruch rede out of the booke before the people.

C Then all the prynces sent Jehudi y^e son- ne of Nathamias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the booke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Ba- ruch the sonne of Nerias toke y^e booke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Sit dore, and rede the booke, y^e we maye heare also. So Baruch red, y^e they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abashed one vpon a- nother, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil cer- tifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how di- dest thou wyte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mo- uth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the booke.

A. 19. b Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Jeremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the booke in the chambie off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kinge all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kinge sent Je- hudi to fetch him y^e booke, which he broughte out of Elisama y^e scribes chambie. And Je- hudi red it, that the kinge and all the pryn- ces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kinge sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Jehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof, he cut the bo- ke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpon the herth, vntill the booke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Let no man was abashed therof, or tene his clothes: nether the kinge himselfe, ne his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wol- de not burne the booke: notwithstandinge y^e kinge wolde not heare them, but commaun- ded Jeramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sa- rias the sonne of Esriel and Selamias y^e son- ne of Abdiel, to laye bondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Jeremy the proph- et, but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. Af- ter now that the kinge had brente the booke, ad y^e sermons which Baruch wrote at y^e mouth off Jeremy: The wordes of the LORDE ca- me vnto Jeremy sayenge: Take another bo- ke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first booke, which Ja- chim the kinge off Juda hath brente.

And tell Joachim the kinge off Jude, Thus saith the LORDE: thou hast brent y^e booke, and thoughtest within thy selfe: Why hast thou writtē therein, that the kinge off Babilon shal come, z make this lōde waste: so that he shall make both people and land to be out of it? Therefore thus the LORDE saith, of Joachim the kinge off Jude: There shal none of his generacion sit vpon the throne of David. His deed corse shal be cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frof of the night maye come vpon him: And I will visyte the wickednes of him, of his fide, and of his seruantes. Moreover all the euel that I haue promised the (though they ha- de me not: will I bunge vpon them, vpon y^e inhabitours of Jerusalem, and vpon all Ju- da. Then toke Jeremy another booke, and ga- ue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Naa- as, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Jeremy: all the sermons that were in the first booke, which Joachim the kinge off Jude dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

Sedechias y^e sonne of Josias (which was made kinge thow Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon) reigned in the lōde of Juda, in the steade off Jeho- nias the sonne of Joachim. But nether he- ner his seruantes, ner the people in the lōde wolde obeye the wordes of y^e LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Jeremy. Neuerthe- les Sedechias the kinge sent Juchal the son- ne of Selamias and Sophonias the sonne of Naasia the prest to the prophet Jeremy, seyinge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Jeremy walked sie amon- ge the people at that tyme, and was not put in prison as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egypte: which when the Calde- es that beseged Jerusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy the prophet, sayenge: Thus saith y^e LORDE God of Israel, This answere shal ye geue to the kinge of Juda, that sent you in come for counsell: Beholde, pharaos he- oste which is come forth to helpe you, shal- lerne to Egypte in to his owne lōde: But the Caldees shal come agayne, z fight aga- ynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. So thus saith the LORDE: disceane not yo^r owne myndes, thynke ynge on this maner:

Tush, the Caldees go now their waye frem vs: No, they shal not go their waye. Soe though ye had slayne the whole hoeste off the Caldees, that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was broke vp from Jerusalem for feare of the Egipcians ar- mye, Jeremy went out of Jerusalem towarde the lōde of Ben Jamin, to do certayne busi- nesse there amōge y^e people. And whē he ca- me vnder Ben Jamins porte, there was a

C porter called Jarias the sonne of Selamias y^e sonne of Hananias, which fell vpon him z toke him, sayenge: y^e mynde is to rume to the Cal- dees. Then sayde Jeremy: It is not so, I go now to the Caldees. Neuertheles Jarias wol- de not beleue him, but brought Jeremy boū- de before the pūnces. Wherfore the pūnces were angrie with Jeremy, causinge him to be beaten, z to be layed in prison in the hou- se of Jonathas the scribe. For he was the ru- ler of the prison. Thus was Jeremy put in to the dongeon z prison, and so laye there a longer tyme. Then Sedechias the kinge sent for him, z called him, z axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynes (that now is in honde) cometh off the LORDE? Jeremy answered yee y^e it doth: z thou (sayde he) shalt be deliuered in to the kinge of Babilons power.

D Moreover, Jeremy sayde vnto kinge Se- dechias: What haue I offended agaynst y^e, agaynst thy seruantes, or agaynst this peo- ple, that ye haue caused me be put in prison? Where are youre prophetes, which haue pro- phesied vnto you and sayde, that y^e kinge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you z this lōde? And therfore heare now, o my lord the kinge: let my prayer be accepte before the, z sende me nomore in to y^e house of Jonathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sede- chias the kinge commaunded to put Jere- my in the fore entre off the prison, and day- ly to the geuen him a cake of bried, and els no dighete meate, vntill all the bried in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Jeremy remayned in y^e fore entre off the prison.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Sapharias the sonne off Mathā, Se- dolias the sonne of Pashur, Juchal the sonne of Selamias, z Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, y^e Jeremy had spokē vnto all the people, name- ly on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shal perish, ether with the swearde, with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Cal- dees, shal escape, wynginge his soule for a pray, z shal lyue. So thus saith the LORDE

This cite (no doute) must be deliuered in to y^e power of the kinge of Babilō, z he also shal wyne it. The sayde the prynces vnto y^e kinge: Syr, toe besech you let this man be put to death, for thus he discourageth the hōdes of the souldyers y^e be in this cite, z the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh such wordes vnto the. This mā verely labourereth not for peace of y^e people, but mischief. Sedechias the kinge answered and sayde: lo, he is in yo^r hōdes, for y^e kinge maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Jeremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off A- malech, that dwelt in the fore entre off the prison. And they let dore Jeremy w^e ceas- des in to a dongeon, where there was no wa- ter, but myre. So Jeremy stak fast in the my- re. Now when Abdemelech the Moian be- ynge a chamberlayne in the kinges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Jeremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kinges house, and spake to the kinge (which the sat vnder the porte off Ben Jamin) these wor- des: My lord the kinge, where as these men medle with Jeremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in prison, there to dye of hunger, for the- re is no more bried in the cite. The kinge commaunded Abdemelech the Moian, and sayde: Take frem hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, z drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdeme- lech toke the men w^e him, z went to y^e house of Amalech, z there vnder an almyer he gat- older agges z wome cloutes, z let the dow- ne by a corde, in to the dongeon to Jeremy.

Jer. 38. a

The prophet Jeremy.

And Abdemelech the Moian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte the and the coardes: ad Jeremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Jeremy with coardes and take him out of the dongeon, and heremayned in the fore entrie of the prison. The Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Jeremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE. And the kynge sayde vnto Jeremy: I wil aye the somwhat, but hyde nothinge frome. The Jeremy answerde Sedechias: As I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffice death: yf I geue the counsell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto Jeremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made v these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: As case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be biēt, yee both thou and thy household shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shalt this cite be deliuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shall set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremy: I am afrayde for the Jewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O hearken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseeke y) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Judas house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, yf thou art disceined: and that yf men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy feet fast in the myre, and gone their waye frome the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be yf kynge of Babilons prisoner, and this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremy: loke yf no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceave, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what saydest thou to the: hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what saydest thou to the. Then geue them this answer: I haue humbly sought the kynge, that he will let me lyue more in Jonathas house, that I dye not there: Then came all the prynces vnto Jarm, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him. Then they be their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Jeremy abode still in the fore entrie off the prison, vntill the daye that Jerusalem was wonne.

The xxxix. Chapter.

When the cite off Jerusalem was taken (for in the ix. yere of Sedechias kynge of Juda in the tenth moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Jerusalem. And in the xi. yere of Sedechias in the fourth moneth yf. daye of yf month, he brake into the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, and sat the dwne vnder the porte: Nergall Sarezzer, Samgarnebo, Sarschim, Rabsaris, Nergal Sarezzer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Juda with his sodrins sawe them, they fled, and departed out off cite by nyghte thorow the kynges garde, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Jericho, and broughed him prisoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon vnto Rablatha, that lieth in the londe off Hamath, where he gaue iugment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Juda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and bounde him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees biēt vp the kynges palace, with yf other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Jerusalem. As for the remnant of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to hope them (what so ever was left of the come for te Nabuzaradan the chiefe captaigne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradan the chiefe captaigne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge dwell still in the lōde off Juda, and gaue them vnyardes and cornfeldes at the sametyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kynge of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradan the chiefe captaigne a charge, concerninge yf any sayenge take and cherish him, and make much off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

So Nabuzaradan yf chiefe captaigne, Nabuzsabbathe the chiefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarzar the treasurer and all the kynge of Babilons lordes, sent for Jeremy, and caused him be set out off the fore entrie off the prison, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan: that he shalde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. Now whyle Jeremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie off the prison, yf wordes off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Moian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes yf God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue denyed for this cite, will I bringe vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil deliuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the hondes off those men, whom thou fearest. For doubtles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swerde: but thy life shalbe saued, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORDE.

The xl. Chap.

This is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Jeremy, when Nabuzaradan the chiefe captaigne had let him go free from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the prisoners, that were caried from Jerusalem and Juda vnto Babilon. The chiefe captaigne called for Jeremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spakemightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and perswumed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therfore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I will set the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vpon the: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: loke where thou thinkest conuenient and good for the to abyde, the dwell. If thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne w Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, whom the kynge of Babilon hath made gouernoure ouer yf cities of Juda, and dwell w him amonge the people, or remayne, where so ever it pleasech yf. So the chiefe captaigne gaue him his expyses w a rewarde, and let him go. Then wente Jeremy vnto Godolias yf sonne of Ahicam to Masphat, and dwelt there w him amonge

The xl. Chap. Fo. xli.

Now when yf captaynes of the hooste of Juda (which w their felowes were scatred abroad on every syde in yf lōde) vnderstode, yf the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias yf sonne of Ahicam gouernoure in the lōde, and yf man, wife and childe, yee and the poore men in the londe (yf were not led captiue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Jurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathanias, Johana and Jonathan the sonnes of Carea, Sarcas the sonne of Tanhorneth, the sonnes of Ophneus yf the prophetite, Jesamas yf sonne of Machari, w their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne off Saphan, swore vnto the and their felowes on this maner: Be not afrayed to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, and do the kynge of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prosper. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, and to satisfie soch as come to vs. Therefore gather you wyne, come and oyle, and kepe them in youre ware houses, and dwell in youre cities, that ye haue in keepinge.

See all the Jewes also yf dwelt in Moab vnder yf Ammonites, in Idumea and in all yf countrees, wher they herde, yf the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, gouernoure vpon the yf were left in Juda: All the Jewes (I saye) returned out off all places where they were fled vnto: and came in to the lōde of Juda to Godolias vnto Masphat, and gathered wyne and other scences, and that very much.

Morouer Johanna the sonne of Carea and all yf captaynes of yf hooste, yf were scatred on every syde in the londe, came to Godolias in Masphat, and sayde vnto him: Knowest thou not yf Baalis kynge of yf Ammonites hath sent Ismael yf sonne of Nathanias, to slaye the? But Godolias yf sonne of Ahicam beleued the not. The sayde Johana the sonne of Carea vnto Godolias in Masphat these wordes secretly: Let me go (I praye the) and I will slaye Ismael the sonne of Nathanias, so yf no body shal knowe it. Wherfore will he kill the, yf all the Jewes which resorte vnto the, might be scatred, and the remnant in Juda perish? The sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicam to Johanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Ismael.

The xli. Chap.

In the seventh moneth it happened, yf Ismael the sonne of Nathanias as yf sonne of Elisama (one of yf kynges bloude) came w the that were greatest about the kynge, & ten men that were sworn with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael y sonne of Nathanas w those ten men that were sworn to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan w the swearde, & slewe hym, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Jewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vntowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, fro Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, & were all hewe, bringinge meat off fringes and incense in their hondes, to offere it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathanas went forth off Masphat wepinge, to meete them. Now when he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathanas (with them that were sworn vnto him) slewe them, euē at the myddest off the pye. Amonge these lxxx. men there were ten, y sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greete treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared the, and slewe them not with their barthen. Now the pye wherein Ismael dyd cast the deed bodie off the me (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynge

9. Re. 15.

Ma caused to be made, for feare off Baasa the kynge off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the remnant off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne had made Godolias the sonne off Ahicam gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathanas caried them awaye prisoners toward the Ammonites. But when Johanna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, herde off all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had done: they toke their companions, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sonne off Nathanas, and founde him by the waters off Rabim in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captayne, sawe Johanna y sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye fro Mas phat, were brought agayne. And when they returned, they came to Johanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathanas fled from Johanna y eight off his sworne companions, & went to the Ammonites. Then Johanna the sonne off Carea and all the captaynes off the hooste that were w him, toke the remnant off the people, whom Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had led awaye (when he had slayne Godolias the sonne off Ahicam) whom they also had rescued from h. m. fightinge men, men & children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and went from thence, and sat them downe at Beth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethle, that they might go in to Egipte for feare off the Caldees: off whom they were a frayd, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Ahicams sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure the londe.

The XLII. Chapter.

So all the rulers, and Johanna the sonne off Carea, Jesaias the sonne off Osiar came with all the people the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Jeremij the prophete: O heare oure peticion, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE y God, and for the remnant, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremij the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto your LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and lette what answer the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothing back fro you. And they sayde vnto Jeremij: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be our recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will hearken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende: that we maye prospere, when we haue heard the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremij. Then called he Johanna the sonne off Carea, and all the captaynes off the people that were with him: & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to saye south youre prayers be fore him: If ye dwell in this londe, I shall burye you, & not breake you downe: I shall plant you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as is ynge the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deliuer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I will haue mercy vpon you, and bringe you agayne into youre owne londe.

Nevertheless, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre hunger, there will we dwell. Wherfore heare now the worde off the LORDE, o ye remnant off Juda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God off Israel: If ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, ad to be there as straungers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouerake you in Egipte: and the hunger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vnder take to go in to Egipte, the rewease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with hunger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, that shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours off Ierusalem, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: for there ye shal be reweyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbiddeth you (o ye remnant off Juda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye: els shal ye begyle youre selues. For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and lette what answer the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, ad we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. If ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shal perishe with the swearde, with hunger & pestilence: euen in the same place, wher your lust was to go, and dwell.

The XLIII. Chapter.

Now when Jeremij had ended all y wordes off y LORDE God vnto y people, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne off Osiar, & Johanna y sonne off Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Jeremij: Thou lyest, the LORDE oure God hath not sent y to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egipte, and dwell there: But Baruch the sonne off Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bringe vs in to the captyuite off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs awaye prisoners vnto Babilon.

So Johanna the sonne off Carea, and all the captaynes off the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement off the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Juda: But Johanna the sonne off Carea & all the captaynes off the hooste, caried awaye all the remnant in Juda, that were come together agayne from the heithen (amonge whom they had bene scattered) to dwell in the londe off Juda: Men, women, children, the kynges daughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne off Ahicam. They caried awaye also the prophete Jeremij, Baruch the sonne off Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement off God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremij, sayenge: Take greete stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the doore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men off Judamay se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon my seruant, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall spiede his tente ouer them.

And when he cometh, he shal smyte the lōde off Egipte with slaughter, with prisonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples off the Egiptians goddes, and burne them vp, & take them selues prisoners. Moreover he shall araye himself w the lōde off Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his core, and shall departe his waye from thence in peace. The pilers also off the temple off the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the temples off the Egiptians goddes.

The LXIII. Chapter.

This is the wordy was shewed to Jeremij concerninge all y Jewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis phus, at Memphis, & in the lande of patres. Thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: He haue sene all y^e mysery, y^e I haue brought vpon Jerusalem, and vpon all the cities of Juda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: & y^e because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger:

In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad worship vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner yo^r fathers haue know-ne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no such abhominable thinges, & thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner heere, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion & wrath was kindled, and it brente vpon the cities of Juda, the feldes with the streets off Jerusalem: so that they were made waiste and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euill vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childre and babes of Juda: so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the worshippes of youre owne hondes: wher ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the lande off Egip-te, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might utterly perishe, and that ye might be renyled and shamfully intreated of all naci-ons. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off yo^r forefathers, the wickednes off y^e kynge of Juda and their wyues, y^e wickednes that ye youre selues ad youre wyues haue done in the lande off Juda, in the cite and in the lande off Jerusalem?

Yet are ye not sorry this daye, ye feare not,
neither walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geue vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God off Israel: I am stedfastly ad-vysed and determed, to punyssh you, and to rote out all Juda. As for the remnant off Juda that purposly wente in to Egip-te, the fe to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In y^e lande off Egip-
te shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swerde and with hon-ger. For from y^e leest vnto y^e most, they shall perishe with the swerde and with hunger.
Moreover they shall be renyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egip-te, as I haue visited Jerusalem: with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnant off Juda, which are gone to dwell in Egip-

te, shall be left to come agayne in to y^e lande off Juda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shall come agayne, but such as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, & a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, ye and all the people that dwelt there in Egip-te in the cite of Patmes, answered Jeremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORD, we will in no wyse heare them: but what soeuer geeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: like as we and o^r forefathers, oure kynge and oure heade haue done in the cities off Juda, and in the streets and feldes off Jerusalem. For thou haddest plenty of vytales, then we were in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene off heauen, we haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perishe wth the swerde and hunger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene off heauen, did we make her cakes ad peure vnto her burnt offerings, to do her sacrifice without oure husbandes wylls?

Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, ye the men, to the women and to all the fellowes, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORD remembre the sacrifices that ye, yo^r forefathers, youre kynges & rulers (w^{ch} all the people) haue offred in the cities off Juda, in the streets and lande off Jerusalem:
and hath he not considered this in his myn-de? In so much, that the LORD might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inventions, and the abhominable thinges which ye dyd. Is not youre lande desolate now, ye and abhorred, so that no man dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe
this daye?

Dyd not all this happen vnto you, because ye made such sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORD? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe
this daye.

Moreover, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORD all Juda, ye that be in the lande off Egip-
te: Thus saith the LORD off hostes the God off Israel: Ye and you re wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in de-
de.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: We will not say-le, but do the thinge that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynt off ringes to the Quene off heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne inten-te. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORD all Juda, ye that dwell in the lande off Egip-
te.

Beholde, I haue sworne by my greate name (saith the LORD) that my name shall not beareth the thowen of any mans mouth of Juda, in all the lande off Egip-te: to saye: The LORD God lyueth, for I wil watch, to pla-gethem, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Juda that be in the lande off Egip-te, shall perishe with the swerde and with ho-ger, vntill they be utterly destroyed.

Nevertheless, those that fled awaye for y^e swerde, shall come agayne in to the lande off Juda, but there shall be very fewe of them)
And all the remnant off Juda, that are gone in to Egip-
te, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shall be founde true: theirs or mine. Take this for a token, that I wil vi-set you in this place (saith the LORD) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perforce my purpose vpon you, to punyssh you. Beholde (saith the LORD)
I wil deliuer Pharaos Ophraim kynge off Egip-te in to the hondes of his enemies, y^e se-te after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kynge off Juda in to the hondes of Na-buchodonosor: kyng off Babilo, which soughte after his life.

The XLV. Chapter.

These are the wordes of Jeremy the prophet spake vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias, after that he had written these sermons into a booke at the mouth off Jeremy. In the fourth yere off Joachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Thus saith the LORD God off Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so much as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORD hath geuen me payne for my trouble: I haue wecried myself wth sighinge, and shall I synde no rest: Therfo-retell him (O Jeremy) y^e the LORD saith thus: Beholde, the thinge that I haue buyl-ded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole lande. And sekest thou yet promocion? Loke not for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vpon all flesch, saith the LORD. But thy life will I geue thee for a pray, where so euer thou goest.

The XLVI. Chapter.

These are the wordes off the LORD to the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. These wor-des folowinge preached he to the Egipcians concernyng the hoose off Pharaos Necho kyng off Egip-
te, when he was in Charca-mis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Ba-bilon slewe him, In the fourth yere off Joachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Ye make redy buckler and shyld, ye go forth to fight: See harnessse youre horses, & set youre selues vpon them: Ye set youre salottes fast on, ye bringe forth speares, ye scoure youre swordes, & put on youre brest plates.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed: why shied ye backe: where fore are youre worthies slayne? Yee they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon everychone off them, saith the LORD.
The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye,
and the worthies shall not escape.

Towarde the north by the water off Euphrates they shall stumbe and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & raginge like the streames off water: It is Egip-te that ryseth vp
like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greate noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye y^e cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to house backe, roll forth y^e Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre bucklers, ye Libeans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORD God off hostes, a daye of vengeance, that he maye avenge him off his enemies. The swerde shall denoure, it shall be satisfied and bated in the
it bloud: For the LORD God off hostes shall haue a slayn offeringe towarde the North, by the water off Euphrates. Go vp (O Galand) & bringe triacle vnto the douch-ter off Egip-
te.

But in payne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The heathen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shall be full of thy confusion: for one strongeman shall stumbe vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremy, concerninge y^e hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babylon, which was to destroye the londe off Egypte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egypte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Sconde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie worchies are fallen: why stodeth they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greates, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swearde of oure enemye.

Crie euen there: O Pharaos kynge of Egypte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. As truly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as y^e mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stoode in the see. O thou daughter of Egypte, make redy thy geer to flye. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nema shal dwell therein. The londe of Egypte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forwarde. Hir wagi- ed souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come wares, as it were hewers downe of wood. And they shall cut downe hir wood (saith the LORDE) with out eny discretion. For they shal be mo in nobie then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell the. The daughter of Egypte shalbe confounded, when she shalbe deliuered in to the bondes off the people off the north.

Moreover thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vy- set that restless people off Alexandria, Pharaos and Egypte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharaos, and all them y^e litten vnto him. For I will deliuer them in to the bondes off those, that sette after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babylon, and in to the power off his seruantes. And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE.

But be not thou afrayed (o my seruant Jacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For I, I will helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuite. Jacob also shal come agayne, and be in rest: he shal be rich, and no man shal do him harme. Feareth he not (o Jacob my seruant) saith the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatted the. Nevertheless I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcte the: yee and that with discretion: nether wil I spare the, as y^e ne that were faultlesse.

The XLVII. Chapter.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophete agaynst the Philistines, before that Pharaos smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall grewe to a greates floude, runnyng euer and conuynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barbed horses, at the shakynge off their charmes, and at the remblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their bondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Philistines. He shal make waiste both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all palestina, and the other Iles, that be denyed fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swar- de off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to y^e sheeth, reste, and leave off. But how can it ceasse, when the LORDE himselfe hath ge- nen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and rased it up agaynst the cities off the see co- ast?

The XLVIII. Chapter.

Thus saith y^e LORDE off hoostes y^e God of Israel agaynst Moab: Woe to y^e cite off Nebo, for it shalbe layd waiste, brought to confusion and taken. Yee y^e stryde cite off Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afrayed: Moab shalbe no more had in honoure: Wicked counsell shalbe taken vpon hesbon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be no more amonge the nombre off the Gentiles, yee that they maye no more be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shal persecute y^e. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: Woe is greates waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. As the goinge vp vnto Labeih there shal arise a lamentacion: and vnto towarde Horonaim, there shal be herde a cruell and a deadly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues: be like vnto the heeth in y^e wilderness, for, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shal go awaye in to captiuite.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shal escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the felde shal be layed waiste: it is as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye speedely: for hir cities shalbe made so desolate, that no man shal dwell therein. Cursed be he that doth the worke of the LORDE negligently, and cursed be he that kepeth backe his swearde from sheddynge off bloude.

Moab hath euer bene rich and carlesse from hir youth vp, she hath sytten and take ease with hir treasure. She was neuer yet put out off one vessell in to another (y^e is) she neuer wente awaye in to captiuite, therefore hir caiste remayneth, and hir sauoure is not yet chaunged.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp, to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankardes rattell, and shate to & fro. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherein she put hir trust.

Wherefore do yethynke thus: we are mightie, and strongemen off warre: Moab shalbe destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir chosen yongemen shal be slayne, saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at hande.

All hir neighbours shal mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou daughter Dibon, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shal come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to y^e stryde, & loke aboute the: are they that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thynge is happened? O Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And mysery shal come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpon holon, and Jaza: vpon Mephat and Dibon, vpon Nebo and the house off Diplathaim, vpon Cariatharim and Bethgannul, vpon Bethnabon and Cariath, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

The home off Moab shal be smytte downe, & hir arme broken, saith the LORDE. Make hir bititen (for she magnified hir selfe aboue the LORDE) that men maye clappe the: it shal be at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israeli, shalte thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken amonge heathenes? Yee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be byrnen awaye. He Moabites shal leave the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like dones, that make the: in nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hye mynded. I knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogancy and the pryde off hir stomach, saith the LORDE. For hir furiosnes maye nether vpholde her wth strength, nor debte. Therefore shal there mournyng be made for Moab, and euery man shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to them that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o Jazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne brailches shal come ouer y^e see, and the brailches off Jazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shal breake in to thy harvest and grape gatheringe. Myrrh and cheere shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shalbe no sweete wyne in the presse, the treader shal haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shalbe none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesbon to Eleale and Joaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off the yere olde. The waters also off Memrim shalbe dried vp.

Moreover I will make Moab cease (saith the LORD) from the offerings and censings that she hath made unto her goddesses in her places. Wherefore my heart mourneth for Moab, like a crowne playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the buicke wail my heart mourneth also, euen as a pye, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shall be very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shaven, and all beards clipped off: all bondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpon all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shall be mourning: for I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessel saith the LORD. How fearfull is she: How mourneth she: How doth Moab hange downe her heade, and is ashamed. Thus shall Moab be a laughing stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

For thus saith the LORD: Beholde, the enemye shall come flyenge as an Aegle, and spiede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wyane the strong holdes. Then the mighty men heretofore in Moab, shall be like the herte off a woman travelinge with childe.

And Moab shall be made so desolate, that she shall no more be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORD. Fears, pyt, and snare shall come vpon the (o Moab) saith the LORD. Who so escapeth the feare, shall fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare.

For I will bunge a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORD. They that are able to sle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, and shall burne vpon that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Who be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: See thy sonnes and doughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bunge Moab out off captiue agayne, saith the LORD. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The XLIX. Chapter.

Concerninge the Ammonites, thus saith the LORD: Hath Israel no child, or is he without an heire? Why hath your kynge then taken Gad in? wherefore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I will brynge a noyse of warre into Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shall be desolate, and her cities burnt up: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORD. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shall be rooted out off the grounde, saith the LORD. The cities off Rabath shall crye out, and gyde them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner, yee his priestes and prynces with him.

Wherefore trustest thou in the water fumes, that flowe to and fro, o thou faine doughter: and thy nestest thou art so safe by reason off thy treasure, that no man shall come to thee?

Beholde, I will brynge a feare vpon the, saith the LORD. God off hostes, from all those that be aboute thee: so that ye shall be scattered euery man from another, and no man shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But a feere that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiue agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORD off hostes spoken on this maner: Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned cleene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backs, as ye came into the depe, o ye cities off Dedan.

For I will bunge destruction vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. If the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? If the night robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take a moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discover his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His seide shall be waisted awaye, yee his brethern and his neighbours, as he himselfe shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leane thy fatherlesse childen behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wyddowes shall take their comfort in me. For thus hath the LORD spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmetered, like of the cuppe, have drunken with the fist: and thy nestest thou then to be free?

No, no thou shalt neither be quyet nor free, but thou must drynte also: For why, I haue sware by my selfe (saith the LORD) that Dofra shall become a wilderness, an open shame, a laughing stocke and cursyng: and her cities shall be a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly in scorned of the LORD, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Syethen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: I will make the but small amonge the Syethen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomacke and thy pryde of thy heretage are diseased, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Neuertheless though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORD. Moreover Idumea shall be a wilderness: who so goeth by it, shall be abashed, and wonde at all his miserable plagues. Like as Sedom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpon the downe (saith the LORD) so shall no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shall haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasant meadowes of Iordane vnto the graue pastures of Eithi, so wil I dryue him, and make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherd maye stonde in my handes?

Therefore heare the counsell of the LORD, that he hath taken vpon Idumea: and his purpose, that he hath deuysed vpon the cite syne of Theman: The leest of the flocke shall warre them in pecea, and loke what sayre theynge they haue, they shall make it waiste, and them selues also. At the noyse of their fall, the earth shall quake, the crye of their voyce shall be heard vnto the reed sea. Beholde, y enemye shall come and sle vpon higher, like as it were an Aegle, and spiede his wynges vpon Dofra. Then shall the hertes of the worthies in Edom be as the herte of a woman travelinge of childe. Vpon Damascus, Hemoth and Arphad shall come confusion, for they shall heare euell tydings: they shall be crossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shall be foue a frayde, and shall sle, trembling shall come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shall ouer take her as a woman travelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: her yonge men shall fall in the stretes, and all her men of warre shall be taken awaye in that tyme, saith the LORD off hostes. I will kindle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shall consume the palace of Benadad. As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Habor, whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babylon smote downe, the LORD hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vnto Cedar, and destroye the people toward the east. Their tentes and their flockes shall they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessel, Their Camels also shall they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearfull crye.

See, get you soone awaye, crepe in to cannes, that ye maye dwell there: O ye inhabitants of Habor, saith the LORD: for Nabuchodonosor y kynge of Babylon hath holden a counsell concernyng you, and concluded his deuysage agaynst you. Arise, and get you vpon agaynst yonder rich and carelesse people (saith the LORD) which haue nether gates nor doore barres, and that dwell not together. Their Camels shall be stollen, and the dionnes of their catell dryuen awaye.

Moreover, these that be shaven wil I scatter toward all the wyndes, and bringe them to destruction: yee and that thoro their owne familiers, saith the LORD. Habor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an everlastinge wilderness: so that no body shall dwell there, and no man shall haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORD spake to the prophet Jeremij concernyng Elam, in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kynge of Iuda. Thus saith the LORD off hostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bunge the foure wyndes from y foure quarters of heauen, and wil scatter them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shall be no people, but some of Elam shall sle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be a frayde of their enemies, and of them that sette their lyces: and wil bunge vpon them the indignacion of my wrath, saith the LORD. And I wil persecute them with the swerde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my sciole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kynge and y prynces from thence, saith the LORD. But in processe of tyme, I wil bunge Elam out off captiue agayne, saith the LORD.

The L. Chapter.

The wordes of the LORD spake vnto the prophet Jeremij, concernyng Babylon, and the lande of the Caldees: Preach amonge the Gentiles, let your voyce be heard, make a toke: crye out, kepe no silence, but saye: Babylon shall be wonne, Bel shall be confounded, and Merodach shall be overcome.

The prophet Jeremyn.

Her their goddes shal be brought to shame, and their ymages shal stonde in feare. For out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir longe so waiste, that no body shal dwell therein: neither man ner beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes & at that tyme (saith the LORD) the childre of Israel shall come, they & the children of Juda, wepinge & makinge haile, & shal sette the LORD their God. They shall aye the waye to Sion, they shall they en: & their faces, & come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceined them, & haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, & forgotten their folde. All they y came vpon them, haue deuoured the: & their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORD, yee euen the LORD which is the bewre of their rightuousnes, & y defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, & departe out of y londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from y northen londe, & bunge them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, & wyne it: Their arrows shal not mysse, like as a connyng archer shureth not wronge. And the Caldees shal be spoyled, & all they that spoyl them, shal be satisfied, saith the LORD: because ye were so chearfull & glad, to treade downe myne heretage, & fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calves in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shal be sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, vyode, waiste, & dued vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of y LORD, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, shal stonde still, & be abashed, & shal wondre at all hir plages.

Go forth in yo' araye agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all y that can handle bowes: shute as her, spare no arrows, for she hath synned agaynst the LORD. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her residue aboute: she shal yelde herselfe, her foundacions shal fall, & hir walles shal come downe, for it shal be the vengeance of the LORD. Yee vengeance shal be taken of her, & as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, & him y handleth the sickle in harvest. For feare of the sword of the enemy, every man shall seeke his owne people, & every man shall flee to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue disperfed them. Firste the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath binshed all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will visit the kinge of Babilon & his kingdome, as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bunge Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Chamir & Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mounte of Ephraim & Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORD) yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: yf men enquire for the synne of Juda, there shal be none: for I will be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remaine ouer.

God dwelle (othon a venger) in the enemies londe, & visiteth them that dwell therein: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORD: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter & greate murthure, namely on this manner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken & bruised in sunder: how chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wilderness amonge the heithen on this manner: I myselfe haue layed wayte for the, & thou art taken: vnawarres art thou trapped & snared: for why, thou hast provoked y LORD vnto anger: The LORD hath opened his house of ordinaunce, & brought forth the weapons of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the londe of the Caldees, is the LORD of hostes worke.

These thinges shal come vpon her at the last, they shal breake into hir priuy chambers, they shall leane her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shall so destroye her, y nothinge shal be left. They shal slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye & tyme of their visitacion is at hande. Me thinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled & escaped out of the londe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeance of the LORD oure God, the vengeance of his temple: Yee a voyce of them, that crye agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pych youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. Recompense her, as she hath deserved: and accordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp herselfe agaynst the LORD, agaynst y holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yongemen fall downe in the stretes, & all hir men of warre shal be roced out in y daye, saith the LORD. Beholde, I speake vnto the (othon proude) saith the LORD God of hostes: for thy daye shal come, eue the tyme of y visitacion. And the proude shal stonble & fall, & no man shal helpe him vp. I will burne vp his cities with fyre, & it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

Thus saith the LORD of hostes: The childre of Israel & Juda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuitie, kepe them fast, & wil not let them go: but their avenger & redeemer is mightie, whose name is the LORD of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shak, & iudge them that dwell therein, one with another. The swearde shal come vpon the Caldees (saith the LORD) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, & vpon their wyse me: The swearde vpon their soych sayers, (as for those, they shal become foolles.) The swearde vpon their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, & vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder the: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stolen awaye: The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shal be dued vp: For the londe worshippeth ymages, & delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therefore shal wilde beestes, Apes & Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, neither shal any man haue his habitacion there for euer more. Like as God destroyed Sodom & Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saith the LORD: So shal no man dwell there also, neither shal any man haue there his habitacion. Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, & many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes & bucklers, cuell are they & vnmecifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, & come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his bondes shal waie feable: Sorowe and bewynes shal come vpon him, as a woman trauelinge with childe. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Jordane vnto the grene pastures of Echan, so wil I dryue the forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, & ordene to soch thinge: For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me: or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me: Therefore heare the counsel that the LORD hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the dewyce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amonge the people shal teare them in peces, & loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue: they shal laye it waiste. The noyse at y wyynyng of Babilon shal be as the earth, & the crie shal be herde amonge the Gentes.

The li. Chapter.
Thus hath the LORD sayde: Beholde, I will rayse vp a perious wynde agaynst Babilon & hir citezens, y beare euell will agaynst me. I wil sende also in to Babilon sanners, to sanne her out, & to destroye hir londe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Moreover, the LORD hath sayde vnto the borne men, & to them y clymme ouer the walles in brest places: Ye shal not spare hir yongemen, kyll downe all hir hoost. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the londe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. As for Israel & Juda, they shal not be forsake of their God, of the LORD of hostes, of the holy one of Israel: no, though they haue fylled all their londe full of synne. Sle awaye from Babilon, e every man saue his life. Let no man holde his tunge to hir wickednes, for the tyme of the LORDS vengeance is come, yee he shal rewarde her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDS honde a golden cuppe, y maketh all londes droncken. Of hir wyne haue all people droncken, therefore are they out of their wittes. But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourne for her, bryng plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peradventure be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Babilon whole (saye they) but she is not reconcured. Therefore wil we let her alone, & go euery man into his owne countre. For hir iudgme is come in to heauen, & is gone vp to the cloudes. And therefore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORD oure God.

Make sharpe the arrows, and fyll the quyners: for the LORD shal rayse vp the sperte of the kynge of the Medes, which hath already a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shal be the vengeance of the LORDS, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set yo' watchmen in araye, yee holde prenye watches: & yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deuycce, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

The prophet Jeremy.

O thou that dwellest by the greates waters, o thou that hast so greates treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: & the rekyng of thy wynges. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a corage shall crie Alarum Alarum agaynst the. Yee euen the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wysdome preyed yf rounde wolde, & with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the ayre waxe scarce: he draweth vpon the cloudes from the endes of the earth. he turneth yf lighteninges to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secreete places. By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for yf thinge that they make, is but disceate, & hath no breath. Vayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perishe.

D Nevertheless, the porcion of Jacob is none such: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rede of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thou owest I haue scattered the nacions & kyngdomes: Thou owest the haue I scattered horse & horseman, yee the charrettes, & such as sat vpon them: Thou owest the I haue scattered man & woman, olde and yonge, bacheler & mayden. Thou owest the I haue scattered the shepherde & his flocke, the husbandman & his catell, the prynces & the rulers. Therfore wil I rewarde the cite of Babilon & all hir citsyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noy some hull) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my hande ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: & wil make the a brennte hill, so that neither corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shal be taken eny more out of the but waiste & desolate shalt thou lie for euer more, saith the LORDE.

E Set vp a toke in the londe: blowe the trompettes amonge the heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Memi & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greates a sorte of hoises agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them yf people of the Medes wth their kynges, prynces & all their chiefe rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be a fray, when the deuycce of the LORDE shal come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waiste, that no man shal dwell any more therein. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shal be like women. Their dwelling places shal be brennt vp, their barres shal be broken. One pursuauant shal meete another, & one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kyng of Babilon tydinges: that his citie is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupied, the fennes brennt vp, and the souldiers are a frayd.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: The doughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a thiefe shuffloore, but shortly shal hir harvest come. Tu buchodonosor the kyng of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. he swallowed me vplike a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my deuites: he hath cast me out, he hath taken my staunce awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the doughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saith Jerusalem. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I wil drynke vpon hir see, & drye vpon hir mountaynes.

Babilon shal become an heape of ston, a dwelling place for dragons, a fearful & wondrous place, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like Lyons, as the yongelions when they be angrie, so shal they be de them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before the, & they shal be dryd for ioie: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sefah wonne? O, how was the glory of yf the londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the heithen? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath covered her with his greates waves. hir ciues are layed waiste, the londe lieth vnburied & voyde: it is a londe, where no man dwelleth, & where no man trauelith thow. Nowe I wil vyset Bel at Babilon: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I pte out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shal name none more vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

O my people, come out of Babilon, that every man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not saynte hereto, & feare not at euery rumoure that shal be herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydinges, yee straunge wickednes and lordshipe. And so, the tyme cometh that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and the whole londe shal be confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. heauen and earth with all that is therein, shal reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saith the LORDE.

Like as Babilon hath beaten downe and slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swearde, haist ye, sit & denot still, remembre the LORDE as farre off: and thinke vpon Jerusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were covered with shame, because the straunge alcautes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde saith the LORDE: the tyme cometh, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lde they shal mourne and fall. Though Babilon dymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power on hir: yet shal I sende her destroyers saith the LORDE.

A pitious crie shal be herde from Babilon, and a greates misery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryueth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the waves of greates water floudes, and made greates crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shal come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence the. Yee (saith the LORDE) I wil make their prynces, their wyse men, their chiefe rulers & all their worthies, drynke: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saith the kyng, whose name is yf LORDE of hoostes.

Merouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shal be brennt vp. And the thinge that the Gentiles and the people haue wrought with greates tranayle and labour, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

The liij. Chap. Fo. xlvij.

This is the charge that Jeremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Naasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kyng of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable pryncce. Jeremy wrote in a booke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that he writen agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this place, so that nether people ner catell shal dwell there eny more, but to lie waiste for euer: and when thou hast redde out the booke, bynde a stone to it, and cast it in the myddest of Euphrates, and saye: Thus shal Babilon syncke, & be thrust downe with the burthen of trouble, that I wil bringe vpon her: so that she shal neuer come vp agayne. Thus farre are yf preachinges of Jeremy.

The liij. Chap.

Sedechias was xxi. yeare olde, when he was made kyng, & he reigned xj. yeare in Jerusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Jeremies doughter of Lobna. he lyued wickedly before the LORDE euen as Joachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Jerusalem & Iuda, so longe till he had cast the out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kyng of Babilon. But in yf. yeare of his raigne, In the xij. Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon with all his hooste came before Jerusalem, & beseged it, & made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeare of kyng Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix. daye of the Moneth, there was so greates hunger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the peple of the londe. So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now yf Caldees had compassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilderness.

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kyng in the felde of Jericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kyng awaye prisoner to Babelatha, vnto the kyng of Babilon in the londe of Hemiath, where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kyng of Babilon also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee z put all the princes of Juda to death at Reblatha. Moreover he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be carried into Babilon: z let him lie in prison, till he dyed.

Now y tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xij yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne and the kynge of Babilons seruantes came vnto Jerusalem, z brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kinges palace, all the houses z all the gorgeous buyldinges in Jerusalem. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y were with the chiefe captaeyne, brake downe all the walles of Jerusalem rounde aboute.

As for the poore people z soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kynge of Babilon, yee z what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne carried them awaye prisoners. But y poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne leane in the londe, to occupie the vynyardes z felde. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y LORDE: z carried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouls, flesh hokes, spunklers, spones z all the brasen vessel that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, spunklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chiefe captaeyne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes y stode vnder y seate, which kynge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: z all the vessel conteyned so much metall, that it mighte not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, z the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, z foure fingers thich and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, z euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: z vpon the knoppes were whopes, z pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundred and xviij, which han ged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chiefe captaeyne also toke Sarias y hiue z Sophonias that was chiefe next him, and the thie keepers of the treasury. He toke also of the cite a chamberlayne which was captaeyne of the souldyers, z seven men that were the kinges seruantes, which were kept in the cite: z Sepher a captaeyne that was to muster the men of warre: with y men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne carried them to the kynge of Babilon at Reblatha: and the kynge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha: londe of Remath. And thus Juda was to be awaye captyue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor led awaye captyue.

In the seventh yeare of his reigne, he carried awaye of y Jewes, thie thousande and twenty. In the xviij yeare Nabuchodonosor carried awaye from Jerusalem eight hundredth z xxxij personnes. In the xxiij yeare of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne, toke awaye seven hundredth Jewes prisoners. The whole summe of all the prisoners, is foure thousande and thie hundredth.

In the xxxviij yeare after that Joachin the kynge of Juda was carried awaye, the xij daye of the xij Moneth, Evilmerodach kynge of Babilon (the same yeare y he reigned) gaue Joachin the kynge of Juda pardon, and let him out of prison, and shewd lonyngly to him: And set his throne about trones of the other kinges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the ches of his prison, yee and heatt with him all his lifelonge. And he had a cōtinall luyngge geuen him of the kynge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge allowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The ende of the prophet Jeremij.

The Lamentacions of Jeremij.

And it came to passe after Jerusalem was brought in to captiuite, and Jerusalem destroyed: that Jeremij the prophet sat wepinge, mournynge and makinge his mone in Jerusalem: so that w an heavy herte he sighed, z sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

How sitteyth the cite so desolate, y some tyme was full of people: how is she become like a webowe, which was the lady of all nacions: how is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes?

She wepeth sore in the night, so that y teares runne downe hir ches: for amonge all hir loners, there is none, that geueth her any comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, z are become hir enemies.

Juda is taken prisoner, because she was defiled: z for seruyng so many straunge goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the heithen. She findeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man cometh more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, z haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: hir children are ledde awaye captyue before their enemye.

All the bewtie of the daughter of Sion is awaye, hir princes are become like weathers, that synge no pasture. They are drye awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

Now both Jerusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery z disobedience, yee the ioye z pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seynge hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, z there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lookinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Jerusalem synned euere more z more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthynesse. See she sigheth, and is a shame of herselfe.

Hir slepytes are defyled, she remembred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no man to comforte her. O LORDE, considere my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious thinges that she had, yee euere before hir eyes came the heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (newertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregation.

All hir people seke their bried with heuynesse, z loke what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wherewith the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and thowne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euere be mournynge.

The yacke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliuered me into those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myselfe.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best me. The LORDE hath troden downe the daughter of Juda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gashe out of water: for the comforter that shulde quicken me, is farre frome. My children are dryen awaye, for why: the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Jacob, and Jerusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue provoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considere my heuynesse: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuite.

I called for my loners (but they begyled me): for my prestes and councelers, but they perished: euere while they sought for meate, to saue their lynes.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heuynesse. The swearde harteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

W They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt bringe forth the ryme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorrow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The II. Chapter.

W As how hath y^e LORDE darkened the daughter of Sion so sore in his wrath? As for the honoure of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: how happeneth it, that he remembered not his owne fore stole, when he was angrie?

The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Jacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the daughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & thowne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the home of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemye: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Jacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

He hath bent his bowe like an enemye, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and enery thinge that was pleasaunt to se, he hath smytten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the daughter Sion.

The LORD is become, like as it were an enemye, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the daughter of Iuda wth much sorow and heynesse.

His tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solempne feastes hath he put downe. The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Sion, are ciene forgotte. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kyng & prestes to be despised.

The LORDE hath forsaken his owne altar, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemye. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the daughter Sion, he spied out his lyne, & diuene not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrets and the broken walles together.

His portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smytten in sonden: hir kyng & prynces are caried awaye to the Gittes. They haue nether lawe nor prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

The Senatours of the daughter Sion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strewed ashes vpon their heades, and gydded them selues with sack cloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

Myne eyes begynne to sayle methowm wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuys peured vpon the earth, for the greate hurt of my people, seynge the children and babes dyd sweare in the stretes of the cite.

Euen when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

What shal I saye of the (O thou daughter Ierusalem) to whom shal I like thee? To whom shal I compare the (O thou daughter Sion) to comforte her withall? Thy herte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

Thy prophetes haue loked out vayne & light thinges for the, they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the from captiuite: but haue ouerladen the, and thowm falsedescattered the abroad.

All they that go by the, clappe their handes at the: hissinge and wagginge their handes vpon the daughter Ierusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so sayre, & haue the whole londe reioysed?

All thine enemies gape vpon the, whysperringe and bytinge their teeth, sayenge: let us deuoure, for the tyme that we loked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge that he was purposed to do: and persecuted that he had denyed longe ago: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and v^{er} the home of thine enemye.

Let thine herte crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the daughter Sion: let thy wres rine downe like a ryuer daye & night: not, & let not the aple of thine eye leane of.

Seconde vp, and make thy prayer with fast watch of the night, poure out thine heart like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine handes, for the lyues of thy yonge children: that dye of hunger in the stretes.

Behold (O LORDE) & confidre, why hast thou gathered me vp so clene? Shal the women then eate their owne frute, euen children of a spanne longe? Shal the prestes and prophetes be slayne thus in the Sanctuary of the LORDE?

Yonge & olde lye behinde the stretes vpon the grounde, my maydens & yonge men are slayne with the swearde: whom thou in the daye of thy wrothfull indignacion hast put to death: yee enen thou hast put them to death, & not spared them.

My neighbours that are rounde aboute me, hast thou called, as it were to a feast daye: so that in the daye of the LORDES wrath none escaped, nether was eny left behinde. Those that I had brought vp & nourished, hath myne enemy destroyed.

The III. Chapter.

Anthemā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiece of misery. He diuene me forth, and led me: yee in to darcknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, & layeth it euē vpon me.

My fleshy & my skynne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brussed.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, & closed me in with gall and trauayle.

He hath set me in darcknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, & hath layed heavy lynces vpon me.

Though I crie & call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stopped vp my wayes with squared stones, & made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyuer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

Iam laughed to scoone of all my people, they make songes vpon me all y^e daye longe.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, & geuen me wormwood to drynke.

He hath smytten my teeth in peces, & rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope forme in the LORDE.

O remember yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwood and the gall.

Ye thou shalt remembre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whyle I confidre these thinges in my herte, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, & that his lounge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulness is greate, and reneweth it self as the moynynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saith my soule) therefore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto the, that wth put their trust in him, and to the soule that seeketh after him?

O how good is it with stillnesse to waite and carie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offereth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reproues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to y^e multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, & cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To iudge the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saith: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES commandement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherfore them murmureth the lvinge man: let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs lōke well vpon oure owne waies, & remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to y^e LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure handes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers & haue offended, wilt thou therefore not be intreated?

Then hast couered vs in thy wrath, & persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Then hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the heithen.

The Lamentacions of Jeremmy. The iiii. Chap.

y All oure enemies gape vpon vs.
 y Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee bespite and destruction.
 y Whole ryuers of water gush out of my
 ne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.
 y Myne eyes runne, and can not cease, for there is no rest.
 y O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe fro heauen, and conside?
 y Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the daughters of my cite.
 y Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.
 y They haue put downe my life into a pit-te, and layed a stone vpon me.
 y They poured water vpon my heade, then thoughte I now am I done.
 y I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.
 y Thou hast herde my voyce, z hast not turned away thine eares fro my sighinge and crienge.
 y Thou hast enclined y self vnto me, whe-
 I called vpon the, z hast sayde: feare not.
 y Thou (O LORDE) hast maintened the cause of my soule, and hast redeemed my life.
 y O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.
 y Thou hast well consided how they go a-bonte to do me harme, z that all their coun-cels are agaynst me.
 y Thou hast herde their despytefull wor-des (O LORDE) yee and all their ymagina-cions agaynst me.
 y The lippes of myne enemies, z their deny-ceo that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.
 y Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.
 y Rewarde them (O LORDE) accordinge to the workes of their bondes.
 y Genethem y thinge, that their owne her-te is afrayed of: euen thy curse.
 y Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy in-dignacion, z rote them out from vnder the heauen. The iii. Chapter.
 y How is the golde become so dymme?
 y How is the goodly coloure of it so sore chaunged? and the stones of y Sanctuary thus scatred in the corner of eue-ry strete?
 y The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, z clothed with y most precious golde: how are they now become like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters hande?

The Lamyes geue their yonge ones sucke,
 w bare brestes: but the daughter of my peple is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernes like the Estriches.
 The tonges of the suckinge children, dene to y rose of their mouthes for very thurst.
 The yonge children are bled, but there is no man, that geneth it them.
 They that were wonte to saye belialy, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moche of donge.
 The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then y wickednesse of So-dome, that sodely was destroyed, and accused with bondes.
 Her abshayners (or Nazarees) were why-ter then y snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.
 But now their faces are very black: Iust moch, that thou shouldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones, Ie is wythered, and become like a dry stock.
 They that be slayne with the sweerde, are happier, then such as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the futes of the felde.
 The womē (which of nature are pitifull) haue sodden their owne children with their bondes: that they might be their meat in y miserable destruction of the daughter of my people.
 The LORDE hath perfourmed his payment: he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundations
 therof.
 Neither the Kinges of the earth, nor all y inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue be-lieued, that the enemye z aduersarye shoulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalem.
 Which neuertheles is come to passe for y synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocent bloude within her.
 So that these blynde men were stumbl-ge in the stretes, and stayned them selues w bloude, which els wolde touche no blynde cloth.
 But they cried vnto every mā: flethe stay-nyng, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. (say-der they) ye must be blynde, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, z byde no longer here.
 The countenance of the LORDE hath banyshe them, z shal neuer loke more vpon

The Lamentacions of Jeremmy. Chap. v. Fo. li.

them: for they them selues nether regarded
 the prestes, nor pitied their elders.
 Wherefore yet oure eyes sayle vs, whyle
 we loke for vayne helpe: seynge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.
 They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we cannot go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.
 Oure persecuters are swifter then the Aegles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in y wilderness.
 The very breth of oure mouth: euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe takē in ou-resynnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his sha-dome we shalbe preserued amonge the hethen.
 And thou (O daughter EDOM) that dwel-lest in the lande of Shur, be glad and reioyce:
 for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be droncke.
 Thy synne is wel punished (O thou dought-er Sion) he shall not suffice the to be caried awaye any more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter EDOM) shall be vyset, and forthy synnes sake, he shal lede the into captiuyte.
 The V. Chapter.
 y Alto remembraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cosidre and se oure co-fucion. Oure inheritaunce is turned to the straungers, z oure houses to the aleaun-tes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure needes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.
 Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bried ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, z we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man deliuerah vs out of their hōdes. We must get o lyvyng with the parrell of oure lyues, because of the dronch of the wilderness.
 Oure synne is as it had bene brent in an oven, for very sore hunger. The wyues are rauished in Sion, z the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vsen o

more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.
 Therefore oure hert is full of heynesse, z oure eyes dymme: because of y hill of Sion that is destroyed, In so moch, that the fores runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that re-maynest for euermore, and thy seate wolde with out ende: Wherefore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turnethou vs vnto the, z so shal we be turned. Renew o daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeased at vs.

The Prophet Baruch.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I. Baruch readeth the booke before the syngers and all the people, which sende money to Ierusalem.
 Chap. II. They knowlege, that they haue deser-ued punishment: God promyseth them for-geuenesse.
 Chap. III. They praye hartely beinge in prison, and he exhorteth them to amende.
 Chap. IIII. A sermon to the people, with an exortation to patience.
 Chap. V. He comforteth them, and sheweth the vocation of the heithen.
 Chap. VI. A copie of the epistole, that Jeremmy sent to the Jewes, which were led awaye pre-soners vnto Babilon.

These are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchir, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yere the seuerth daye of the moneth: what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The prophet Baruch.

The first Chapter.

Ald Baruch by drede the wordes of this boke, that Jehonias the sonne of Joachim kynge of Juda might heare: and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke: yee and before all the noble kinges sommes, before y lordes of the counsell and elders: and before the whole people, from y lowest unto the hiest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by y water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

They made a colleccion also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Jerusalem vnto Joachim the sonne of Zechia the sonne of Salon prest, with y other prestes: and to all the people which were w him at Jerusalem, what tyme as they had gotten the ornamentes of the temple of y LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might bringe them agayne in to the londe of Juda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban: namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had take Jehonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captiue from Jerusalem vnto Babilon.

And they sayde: Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferinges and incense withall: make you vnclenched bryd, z offre for synne vpon the aulter of the LORDE our God. And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: y their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten our eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and synde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE our God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE our God, and vnto this daye is not his wiath turned yet awaye from vs. And set that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be rehearsed in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hye dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

Thus shal ye saye: The LORDE o God is righteous, but we are worthy of cofusion z shame: like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Juda, z to euery one y dwelleth at Jerusalem to o kinges, prynces, prestes, prophetes z to oure fathers. We haue synned fore the LORDE our God, we haue not put our trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE our God, we walke in the commaundementes that he geue vs. Sens the daye that he brought our forefathers out of the londe of Egypte vnto this present daye, we haue bene ent a my beleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto y LORDE our God: destroyenge oure selues vnto the utter, and shryeking backe, that we shal de not heare his voyce.

Wherfore there are come vpon vs gruelous plagues z dyuerse curses, like as the LORDE hath sayd by Moyses his seruante: which brought our forefathers out of the londe of Egypte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mylk and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Nevertheless, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE our God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man followed his owne mynde and wicked imagination: to offre vnto straunge goddes, and to dwell in the sight of the LORDE our God.

The ii. Chapter.

Our the which cause the LORDE our God hath perfourmed his daye, wherof he certified vs, and our houses that ruled in Jerusalem: yee and our kinges, oure prynces, with all Israel and Juda. And soch plagues hath y lord brought vpon vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauens, like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is writen in the lawe of Moyses: that a man shulde eate y flesh of his owne sonne, z the flesh of his owne doughter. Moreover, he hath deliuered them in to the bondes of all the kinges, y are rounde aboute vs (so becomfounded and desolate) z scattered the abodes in all londes z nacions. Thus are we brought in to the londe of Babilon, z not abone, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE o God, z not bene obedient vnto his voyce. Therefore y LORDE o God is righteous, z we with o fathers (as reason is) are brought to ope shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for the plagues y are come vpon vs already, y LORDE had denyed the for yet wolde we not praye vnto y LORDE our God, y we might euery man turne fro his wicked wayes. So y LORDE hath caused soch plagues to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath commaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner hearkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in y commaundementes of y LORDE, y he had geue vnto

The prophet Baruch.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egypte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wonders, with thy greates power ad stretched arme: and hast gotten thy selff a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE our God, we haue synned, we haue bene wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnes. Turne thy wiath fro vs (we beseeche the) for we are but a few left amonge the heithen, where thou hast scattered vs. Heare o prayers (o LORDE) z oure peticions, bringe vs out of captiuitie, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sight of the, which haue led vs awaye: y all londes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE our God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

O LORDE, loke downe fro thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, z heare vs. For the deed, y be gone downe to their graues, z whose soules are out of their bedies, ascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner righteousness: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuily and wretchedly, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule as crybeth prayse and righteousness vnto the LORDE. O LORDE, we pteure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE our God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wiath z indignacion vpon vs: accordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge:

Thus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre shoulders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. Yf ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of y LORDE your God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Juda, within Jerusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off mynthe and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not hearken vnto thy voyce, to do the kynge of Babilon seruyce: and therfore hast thou perfourmed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kinges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be traslated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heauens of y Sonne, z in the celde of y night, ad dwel in greates misery: w hunger, w sweat, de, w pestilence z are clene cast forth. As for the temple wher in thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waiste, as it is to se this daye: z y for the wickednes of the house of Israel z the house of Juda. O LORDE o God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes z accordinge to all y greates louinge mercy of thine, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moyses, in the daye when thou didest commaunde him, to rote thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: Yf ye will not hearken vnto my voyce, the shal this greates multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatter the abode. Not withstandinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in y lode of their captiuitie, they shal remembre them selues, z lerne to knowe, y I am the LORDE their God: when I geue the an herte to vnderstande, z eares to heare. Then shal they prayse me in the lode of their captiuitie, z thynke vpon my name. Then shal they turne them fro their harde backes, z from their vngodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, y happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised w an ooth vnto their fathers: Abraham, Isaac z Jacob: z they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace the, and not minyssh the. And I wil make another covenante with them: soch one as shal endure for ever: namely, y I will be their God, and they shal be my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe y I haue geue the.

The iij. Chapter.

Ald now o LORDE almighty, thou God of Israel: o soule y is in trouble, z o spiete y is vexed, crieth vnto the, heare vs (o LORDE) z haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before y. Then endurest for ever, shulde we the utterly perishe: O LORDE almighty, thou God of Israel: heare now y prayer of y deed Israelites z of the ir childre, which haue synned before y, z not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, for the which cause these plagues hang vpon vs. O LORDE, remembre not y wickednes of o forefathers, but thinke vpon thy power z name now at this tyme: for thou art y LORDE o God, z y (o LORDE) wil we prayse. For then hast put y feare i o hartes, to y intent y we shulde call vpon y name, z prayse y in oure captiuitie: and y we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers, y synned before the.

The iij. Chap.

B Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuyte, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, because of all their wickednesse and departynge from the.

Psal. 78. a

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: pondre them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thine enemies lode: thou art waken olde in a straunge countre, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? Enē because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. For yf thou haddest walked in the waye of God, truly thou shuldest haue remayned still safe i thine owne londe.

Iere. 2. b

O lerne then where discrecion is, where vertu is, where vnderstodunge is: that thou mayest knowe also fro whence cometh longe life, a necessary lyuynge, the light of the eyes & quyetnes. Who euer founde out hir place: or who came euer in to hir treasures?

Where are y prynces of the heithen become, and soch as ruled the besties vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that boorded vp syluer and golde (wherein men trust so moch) and made no ende of their gatheringe: What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bunge their woikes to passe: They be roted out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Yonge men haue seene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: neither haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it fro the. The Agarenes sought after wysdome, but that which is earthly, like as the marchauntes of the lode do. They of Theman are conynge also, & they labour for wysdome & vnderstodunge: but y waye of true wysdome they knowe not, necher do they thynke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greates is the house of God: and how large is the place of his possession? Greates is he, and hath none ende: hie and vnmessurable. What is become of those famousse giannes, that were so greates of bodyes, and so worthy men of warre: Those had not the LORDE chosen, necher haue they founde the waye of reformation, therfore were they destroyed: and for so

Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wysdome there, & broughte her downe fro the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, & hath chosen her aboue golde, and broughte her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wysdome, necher is there eny man seke out hir pathes. But he that wotech all thynges, knoweth her, & he hath founde her out with his foreknowledge. This same is he which prepared the earth at the begynnyng, & fylled it with all maner of foules & bestes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: & when he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth him wth feare. The starres kepe their watch, & geue their light, yee and y gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And with chearfulness they shewe light vnto him y made the. This is oure God, ad there shall none other be compared vnto him: It is he, y hath founde out all wysdome, and hath geuen her vnto Jacob his seruant, & to Israel his beloued. The III. Chapter.

This is the boke off the commaundementes of God, and the lawe y geueth for ener. All they y kepe it, shall come to life: but sech as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Jacob, and take holt of it: walke by this waye, therow his bightnesse and shyne. Geue not thine benenynce another, and thy worshippe to a straunge people. O Israel, how happie are we, seige the God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaunt vnto him: Be of good cheare, ye people of God, o thou awncient Israel. How are ye solde amonge the heithen, howe not for youre utter destruction: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath & displeasure, therfore were ye deliuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offeringe vnto deuels and not God. We haue forgoten him that broughte you vp, ad youre hearts be greued, o Jerusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Shall o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me into greates heuynesse: ad why? Ife the captiuyte of my people, of my synnes and daughters, which the euerlastinge God will brynge vpon them. With ioy dyd I nourshe them, but now must I leane them with wepyng and sorow.

The prophet Baruch.

Chap. v. Fo. liij.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddome ad forsake: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of every man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his rightousnesse, ner walke in the waye off his comaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godlynesse, they had no lust to go in them.

O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let us calle remembraunce the captiuyte, that the euerlastinge God hath broughte vpon my sonnes and my daughters. He hath brought a people vpon them from farre, an outrageous people, and of a straunge language: which necher regarde the olde, ner pyte the yonge.

These haue caried awaye the deare beloued of my wyddomes, leauynge me alone, lach desolate and childlesse. But alas, what can I helpe you? Now he y hath brought these plagis vpon you, deliuer you also fro the bondes of youre enemies.

Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put off the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sack cloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hiest. Be off good cheare, o my children: crie vnto the LORDE, and he shall deliuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue off oure euerlastinge Sauoure.

With mournyng and wepyng dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neighbours of Sion sawe youre captiuyte from God, Enē so shall they also se shortly youre health in God, which shall come on you with greates honoure and euerlastinge worshippe.

O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shall come vpon you. For the enemye hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruction, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlynges haue gone rough hard wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abroad with the enemies. But be of good comfort (o my children) & crie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraunce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarne from yo God, so shall ye now endenoure youre selues & tymes more, to turne agayne, and to seke him.

For he that hath brought these plagis vpon you, shall brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Jerusalem: for he which gaue y that name, exorte the so to do.

The wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perishe: and soch as haue reioysed at thy fall, shall be punysshed. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shall be correcte. For like as they be now glad of y decaye, so shall they mourne in their owne destruction. The ioye off their multitude shall be taken awaye ad their cheare shall be turned to sorowe. For a fyre shall fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shall be inhabited of deuels for a greates season.

The V. Chapter.

Jerusalem, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that cometh vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsaken, and that were scatred abroad) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put off thymournyng clothes (o Jerusalem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshippe ad honoure, that cometh vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shall put the cloake off rightousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshippe vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his bightnesse, that is vnder the heauen: See an euerlastinge name shall be giuen the of God, with peace of rightousnesse, & y honoure of Gods feare.

Arise o Jerusalem, stode vpon hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, haueynge God in remembraunce. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shall the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off y kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute moitynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fyll the valleys, & so to make them eauen with the ground: y Israel maye be diligit to lyne vnto y honoure of God. The woddes & all pleasaunt trees shall ouershadowe Israel, at the comaundement of God. For hyther shall God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightousnesse, that cometh of himself.

A copie off the epistle, that Jeremy the prophet did sende vnto the Jewes, which were led away prisoners by the kynge of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was commaunded him of God.

The VI. Chapter.

BEcause of the synnes that ye have done agaynst God, ye shal be led awaye captiue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeaeres, and for a longe season: namely, viij. generacions: & after that wil I bunge you awaye peaceably from thence. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulness before the heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afayed, and let not the feare of them overcome you.

Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORD, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped: Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the rymbre of those goddes, y carpenter hath polished them: yee glyced be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench y loneth perrours is truely dectre, euen so are these made & hanged w golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, & trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and dectre their goddes therewith. Yet can not these goddes deliuer them selues from rust and mothes. Whē they haue couered them with clothynge off purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē.

One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countrey: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swerde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murderers.

By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therefore se y ye nether worshipec them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel y a man vsesh, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the sece of those that come in. And like as y dores are shuttūde aboute vpo him, y hath offende the kyng: O as it were a deed body kepte by the graue: Euen so the prestes keep the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set vpo dells before thē (yee verely and y many) of they can not se one, but euen as blacke sionde they in the temple. It is sayde, y serpentes and woimes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge thē & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke is in the temple. The oules, swaloues & bydes fle vpon them, yee and the cattes run ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are goddes, therefore feare them not. The god that they haue, is to make them beuifull: all that, excepte some body dighe off the rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast into a foume, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no birth of life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no strength: by they declare vnto men, that they are nothinge worth. Confounded be they that worshipec them. For yf they fall from grounde, they can not rylse vpayne of themselves: Yet though one helpe them vp, & set them right, yet are they not able to stand alone: but must haue proppes for them, like deed men. As for the thinges that offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, & dectre it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, & vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the misshew laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therefore be not ye afayed of them. From wher ce cometh it thē, that they be called goddes? The women sit before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodd, and the prestes sit in the temples, hauynge open clothes, whose faces and beerdes are shaven, and haue no haire vpon their heades: roaringe and crying vpon their goddes, as men do at the fete when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garment of the ymages, and dectre their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or ill, y eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kyng, ner put him downe. In like maner, they maye nether geue riches, ner rewardes. Though a man make a vowe vnto them, & kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can

ne restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They can shewe no merite to the wyddow, ner do good to y fatherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde & syluer, are but euen as other stones, y be hewen of y mountayne. They y worshipec thē, shal be confounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes: yee how darre men call thē gods? And though the caldees worshipec thē, hearinge y they were but domme & conuener speake: Yet they them selues offere vnto thē, and wolde sayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they conde sele, y maye not mooue. But when these men come to vnderstōdinge, they shal forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greatesoite off women gyded with coardes, sit in the stretes, & burwe oluue berries. Now yf one off them be conuerted awaye, & lye w eny soch as come by, she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner her coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne & lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, y they are goddes? Carpenters & goldsmithes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtinuance: How shulde then the thinges that are made of them, be goddes? Day after daye are they thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their poste-ritie. For as soone as there cometh eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, wher they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner deliuer thē from mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodd, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people & kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shal be openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mē hōdes, & that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe, ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe fro wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixt heuen and earth.

Whether happeneth a fyre into the house of those goddes of wodd, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape & saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the tannes therin. They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Moreover, these god-

des of wodd, of stone, of golde & syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee y very wicked are stronger thē they. These stryke them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde & syluer fro thē, and so get thē awaye: yet can they not helpe thē selues. Therefore it is moch better for a man, to be a kyng, & so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he y oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a doer in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therein: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sonne, the Mōne & all the starres when they geue their shyne & light, are obedient, & do men good: When the lightenyng glisteth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in every countrey, & whē God commaundet, the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe fro aboue & commaunded, it burneth vpon hills & woddes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strength. Wherfore mā shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they can euer geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They can shewe no tokens in heauē for y heithen, nether shyne as the Sonne, ner geue light as the Mōne: yee y vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rose, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therefore feare thē not.

For like as a fraiboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are the goddes of wodd, of syluer & golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodd, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, & soone saydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstōde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be consumed at the last, which shal be a greatesoite of confusion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, y hath no ymages & worshipperth none, for he shal be farre from reprofe.

The prophet Ezechiel.

The first Chapter.

I chaunced, in the xxx. yeare the fift daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the prisoners by the ryuer off Cobar; where the heauens opened, and I sawe a vision of God. Now the fift daye off the Moneth made out the fift yeare off kyng Joachim's captiuite. At the sametyne came yf worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpon him. And I looked: and beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greates doube full of fyre, which wth his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in yf myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the lictnesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: so wynged, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

Their legges were straight, but their fetters were like bullockes feet, and they glistred, as it had bene saye scoured metall. Under their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and the four wynges were toward the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one ener touched another. When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Eagle.

Their faces also and their wynges were respied out aboue: so that two wynges off one touched ener two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Every one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the spire led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goinge.

The first. Chap. Ho. lv.

The fashion and countenance of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, enen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whe yf beestes were forwarde and backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whe I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

The fashion and worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned the not aboute i their goinge. They were large, greates and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodie were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whe the beestes wente, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes list them selues vp from yf earth, the wheles were list vp also. Whyther so euer the spire wente, thither wente they also, and yf wheles were list vp and folowed the, for yf spire of life was in the wheles. When yf beestes were forth, stode still, or list them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, and were list vp, for yf bieth off life was in the wheles.

Above ouer yf heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Chistall, and that was spied out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abroad, one toward another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse off greates waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greates God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode fall, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Above the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Vpon the seate there sat one like a man. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vponwarde.

And beneth when I looked vpon him vnder yf loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Neether shyne and glistre yf lightened rounde.

The prophet Ezechiel.

de aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a rayne daye apearcth in the cloudes. Eue so was the similitude, wherein the glory off the LORDE appeared. Whe I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and hertened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The II. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: Stande vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. And as he was communynge with me, the spiete came into me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off mā: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue take parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, and their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende y vnto a people y haue rough vsages and stiff stomaches: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himself hath spoken, y whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde hounsholde: they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

B Therefore (thou sonne off mā) feare the not, neither be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise y. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwarde hounsholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obedient or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne off mā) obeye then all thinges, that I saye vnto y, and benet thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked hounsholde. Open thy meuth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokynge vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherein was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull monnynges: alas, and mo.

The III. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: thou sonne off mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my meuth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me:

The iiij. Chap.

Thou sonne off mā, thy bely shall eate, and thy bowels shall be fylled with y boke, that I geue the. Then dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then honey.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne off mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, and shewe the y wordes, that I commaunde the: for I sende the not to a people that hath a straunge, vntowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nations, which haue diuerse speaches and hard languages, whose wordes thou vnderstandest not: Neuertheles, yf I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe y, for they wil not folowe me: Yee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therefore, I will make thy face piewaile agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy fowde shall be harder then an Adamar of syle stone: that thou mayest feare them y lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwarde hounsholde.

He sayde mozeuer vnto me: thou sonne off mā, take diligent hede with thine eares, to y wordes that I speake vnto the, sit ten them in thine herte: and go to the prisoners off thy people, speake vnto them, and saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the spiete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse off a greete rushinge and remouynge off the most blisset glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that rushed one agaynst another, yee and the ratynge off the wheles, that were by them, which rushinge & noyse was very greate.

Now when the spiete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heu and a sorowfull mynde, but the hande off the LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Moneth Abib, I came to the prisoners, the dwelt by the water off Eobar, and remained in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seven dayes, beinge very sory.

And when the seven dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off mā, I haue made the a watch man vnto the house off Israel: therefore eate good & de to the wordes, and geue them warninge at my commandement.

The prophet Ezechiel.

A I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that without donce he must dye, and thou genest him not warnynge, ner speakest vnto him, that he maye turne from his well waye, and so to lye: Then shall the same vngodly mā dye in his owne vnrigh- twines: but his bloude will I requyre off thine hande. Neuertheles, yf thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsa- ket not his vngodlynesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go fro his righ- twynesse, and do the chynge that is euell: I will laye a stonblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not ge- uen him warnynge: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre off thine hande.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhortest the righ- tous, that he synne not, and so yf righteous donot synne: Then shall he lye, because he hath receaved thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the ho- ly off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vn- to me: Seconde vp, and go in to the felde, yf I maye there talke with the.

So when I had risen vp, and gone forth into the felde: Beholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Eobar.

Then fell I downe vpon my face, and y spiete came into me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy self in thine house.

Beholde (O thou sonne off mā) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the wth all, so that thou shalt not escape out off the. And I will make thy tynge cleue so the ro- se off thy mouth, that thou shalt bedomme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate hounsholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saith the LOR- DE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwar- de hounsholde.

The IIII. Chapter.

A Thou sonne off mā: take a tyle sto- ne, and laye it before the, and descry- be vpon it the cite off Jerusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and stro- ge ditches are grauen on euery syde off it: & yf also comes, and an hoost off men

rounde aboute it.

Mozeuer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixte the & y cite in steade off an yron wall. Then set thy face toward it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wynte it. This shall be a token vnto the house off Is- rael. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left sy- de, and laye the syme of the house off Is- rael vpon the.

Certaine dayes apoynted, thou shalt sle- pe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes. Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: The hundredth & xx. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house off Isra- el. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house off Iuda.

A daye for a yeare, a daye (I saye) for a yeare, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Jeru- salem, and discover thine arme, that thou ma- yest prophete agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes off thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell seade, milum and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, accordinge to the nom- bre off the dayes that thou must lye vpon y syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for the hundredth and xx. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall ha- ue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie sydes euery daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begyn- nynge to the ende.

Thou shalt dryncke also a certayne mea- sure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an hin shalt thou dryncke daylie from the be- gynnynge to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake the o- uer with māns donge, yf they maye seie. And with that, sayde the LORDE: Euen thus shal the children off Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scare them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Behol- de, my soule was yet neuer slayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, neither came there euer eny vnclene flesch in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde:

Att ij

The prophet Ezechiel.

Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bried ouer with all, before the.
And he sayde vnto me: Beholde thou son ne off man, I will mynyshe all the prouisi-on of bried in Jerusalem, so that they shall weye their bried, and eate it with scarcenesse.
But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bried ner water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The V. Chapter.

Alkeche then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shauethe hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder.
And burnethe thirde partetherof in the fy-re in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe. As for the thirde parte that remaineth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare kny-fe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same,
z bynde it in they corelappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest off y fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

Morouer, thus saye the LORDE God:
This same is Jerusalem. I set her in the middest of the heithen and nations, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgements more then y Gentiles the selues, and broken my commaundementes more then the nations, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus sa-ieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye w-your wickednesse farre exceede the heithen, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue net walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kept myne ordinaunces) Therefore thus saith y LORDE God:

I will also come vpon the, for in the myd-dest of the will I syt in iugment, in the sight of the heithen, and will handle the of soch a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. For in the the fathers shal be sayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers.
Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the whole remnant will I scatere in to all the wyndes.

The vi. Chap.

Wherefore, as truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) seynge thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy shamefull offences:
For this cause will I also destroye the. My ne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spere the.

One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of hunger: Another thi-de parte shall be slayne downe rounde abo-te the, with the swearde: The other thir-de parte that remaineth, will I scatere abrotowards all the wyndes, and drave out the swearde after them. Thus wil I performe my indignacion and set my wiath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I be ue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which a feruent gelousy haue spoken it.

Morouer I will make the waiste and shoulder, before all the heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punyssh the in my wiath, in myne anger, and with the plage off my wrothe displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and woundinge stocke, amonge the heithen that lye aboute the.

Euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shall come to passe, when I shal come agaynst them the perious darteres of hōger, which shal be but death: Yet therfore shall I shew them, because I will destroye you. I will increase hunger, and mynyshe all the prouisi-on off bried amonge you.

Plages and mysery will I sende you, and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pestilence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you.
Euē I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The VI. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophesie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: That hath the LORDE God spoken to the mountaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will brynge a swearde vnto you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre alters, and breake downe your temples. Your slayne men wil
I laye before youre goddes, and the dead carcasses off the children off Israel wil
I cast before their ymages, youre bones wil

The prophet Ezechiel.

I strowe rounde aboute youre alters, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, y hillchapels layed waiste: youre alters destroyed, z broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, y' sepels layde eane with the groude, your owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how y I am the LORDE.
Those y amonge you haue escaped the swear-de, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatere you amonge the nations. And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuitie.

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull her-etice, wherewith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee z put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesse ad abhominacions, which they haue done: and shall come to knowe, how that it is not in vay that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me:
Gather thine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the ab-hominacions and wickednesse of the house of Israel, for because of the, they shal perish with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre off, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and y other that are besieged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē youre slaymen lye amonge youre goddes, and aboute youre alters: vpon all hie hilles and top-pes off mountaynes, amonge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euē in the places,
wher they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols.
I will stretch myne hōnde out vpon them, z will make the londe waiste: So that it shall be desolate and voyde, from the wildernesse off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am
the LORDE.

The VII. Chapter.

The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call; O thou sonne off man. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel:
The ende cometh, yee verely the ende com-

meth vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the:
for I will sende my wiath vpon the, and wil punyssh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and re-warde the after all thy abhominacions. My-ne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy wayes, and declare thy abhominacions.
Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LOR-
DE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, y' howe is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at hande, the daye of sediciis hard by, z no glad tidings vpon the most taynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wiath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy wayes, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

Myne eye shal not ouersee the, nether wil
I spare the: but rewarde the after thy way-es, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how y I am the LORDE, y' smyteth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come. the honre is runne out, the rodde flourisheth, wysfulnesse waxeth grene, malicious violence is growne vp, and the vngodly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no com-playnte be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:
Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that sellereth, let him not be sorry: for why, Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lye. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, y it shal not be hyndered: To mā also w' his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trumpettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swearde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swearde: and he that is in the cite, shall perish with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the doues in the felde: euery one shalbe a frayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

The prophet Ezechiel.

The viij. Chap.

Esa. 1. c. All bondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weak as the water: they shall gyde them selues with sack cloth, feare shall fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: their syluer and golde maye not buyer them, in the daye of the fearfull wrath of the LORDE.

D They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, neither fyll their emptic belies therewith: for it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Jeweles for their pompe and pryde, but also abominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhored. Moreover, I will geue it into y handes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to y wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

My face wil I turne from the, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene rydaunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrightrous iudgment of innocent bloude, z the cite is full off abominacions.

Wherfore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrantes from amonge the heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, ad they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in vayne at their prophetes. The lawe shal be gone from the priestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heynesse, and y hōdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, z accordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

It happened, that in the sixte yeare, the fift daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the LORDES off the counsell off Juda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpo me.

And as I looked vp, I sawe as it were a lickenesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, and from his loynes vppwarde it shyned marvelous cleare.

This similitude stretched out an hōde, and toke me by the hayre lockes off my heade, and the spire lift me vp betwixte heauens and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Jerusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very much.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: eue as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an altier made vnto the ymage off pynocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, seist thou what this do? Seist thou the greates abominacions that the house off Israel commyt in this place: which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt see yet greater abominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and when I looked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, digge thorow the wall. And when I digged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a doore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy way in, z loke what wicked abominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off women z beastes, all Idols and abominacions off house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

There stode also before the ymages lordes off the counsell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iasias the some off Saphan: And amonge one off them had a censoure in his hande: z out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, hast thou sene what the Seniors off the house off Israel do secretly, eue as one in his chambier? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seeth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the woulde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt see the greates abominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the doore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there women mourninge for Thamuz. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne off man? Turne y aboute, z thou shalt see yet greater abominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte off the LORDES house: z beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the altier, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backs vpon the Temple of the LORDE, z their faces towarde the east, and they worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne off man? Thinketh the house off Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and undertake to provoke me vnto anger? Yee z purposely to cast vpon their noses vpon me? Therfore wil I also do some thinge in my wrathfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, neither wil I spare them. Yee and though they crye in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The ix. Chapter.

It cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, every man with his weaponed honde to the slaughter. Then came there fyue men out of the stretes of the vpper porte towarde the north, and every man a weapon in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lymnyng rayment, and a wyters ynd hōre by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brazen altier: for the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the thresholde of the house, z he called the mā, that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him, and the wyters ynd hōre by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Jerusalem, and set this marck n Thau vpo the foreheades off them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abominacions, that be done therein. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, o-actse none, spare none: Wyll, z destroye both eldemen and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this marck n Thau vpo them: se that ye touch them not, and begyne at my Sanctuary. Then they began at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wete out and slewe downe thorow y cite. Now when they had done y slaughter, z I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, z cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the residue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpo Jerusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house off Israel and Iuda is very greateso that the lōde is full of bloude, and y cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: For they saye: Tush, y LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therfore wil I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, neither wil I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him, and the wyters, ynd hōre by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The x. Chapter.

As I looked, beholde, In the firma-ment that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole off Saphir vpo them: Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might see.

Now the Cherubins stode vpo the right syde of the house, when the man wete in, and the cloude fylled the ynnemur courte. But the glory off the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloude, and the courte was full of the shyne off the LORDES glory. Yee and the founde off the Cherubins wynges was herbe in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce off the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man y was clothed in lymnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest off y wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth this honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto y fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him: that had on the lymnyng rayment in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges off y Cherubins, there appeared the lickenesse off a mā hōte: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins.

rubins, so that by every Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to loken upon) after y^e fashion of y^e precious stone of Tharsis: For (unto the sight) were they fashioned like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they were all iij together, not turnyng aboute in their goinge: But wherethe first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. Their whole bodies, their backs, their hodes & wynges, yee & the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call y^e wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Every one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, & they were lifted vp above. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: & when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues upwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, y^e wheles were lift vp also with the, for the spire of life was in the wheles.

Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the threshold of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flactred with their wynges, and lift the selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Every one had foure faces, & every one foure wynges, & vnder their wynges, as it were mens hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had senethem, by the water of Cobar, & so was the countenance of the: Every one in his goinge wente straighe forward.

The XI. Chapter.

When the spire of the LORDE lift me vp, & brought me vnto y^e east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxv men vnder the dore: amonge whom I sawe Jaasania the sonne of Asur, & Pheltias the sonne of Bamas, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked counsell take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buyde houses:

The xi. Chap.

This Jerusalem is the cauldron, & we be the flesh. Therfore shalt thou prophesie vnto them, yee prophesie shalt thou vnto them, & some of man. And with that, fell the spire of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me: Speake, thus saith the LORDE: On this manner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) I knowe the ymaginacions of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murdered in this cite, & filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, & this cite is the cauldron: But I will bunge you out of it: ye haue drawe out y^e swearde, & so will I also bunge a swearde ouer you, saith y^e LORDE God. I will dryue you out of this cite, and deliuer you in to youre enemies hande, & wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be your cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therein: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punyssh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, nether kept his lawes: but haue done after the customes of the heithen, that liue vnder aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Bamas dyed. Then fell I down vpon my face, & cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then verily destroy all the remnant in Israel: And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this manner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynnesmen, & y^e whole house of Juda, which dwell at Jerusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therfore tell them, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amonge the Gentiles, & scatere you amonge the nacions, & I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londe where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, & bunge you from the countrees where ye be scatred, & will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: & thus shal ye come. And as for all impediments, & all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, & wil plant a new spire within y^e bowels. That for ny herte wil I take out of youre body, & geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe my ordinances, & do them: that ye maye be my people,

The prophet Ezechiel.

ple, and I your God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynge: Those mens deedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their wynges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, & stode vpon the mount of the citeto murder the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the spire of God) brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the pusoners. Then the vision that I had seen, vanysht awaye from me. So I spake vnto the pusoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The XII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwer behonsholde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate honsholde. Therfore (O thou sonne of man) make thy heart redy to flit, and go forth by saye daye light, y^e they maye se. For euen in their sight shal thou go from thy place to another place: yf peradventure they wil confidie, y^e they can vobedient honsholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shal thou beare out by saye daye light, that they maye se: & thou yf self shal go forth also at euen in their sight, as a man doth whē he fliteth.

Dygge thou downe the wall, that they maye se, and beare thowrow it the same thinge, that thou wast vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Syde thy face that thou se not y^e earth, for I haue made the a shewtoke vnto the house of Israel. Now as y^e LORDE commaunded me, so I dyd: y^e gather that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. And euen I brake downe an hole thowrow the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpon my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornyng, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, yf frauwerde honsholde are they, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punysshment toucheth the chiefe rulers at Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am your shewtoke: like as I haue done, so shal I happen vnto you: Flye shal ye also, and go in to captiuyte. The chiefe that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie staff there thowrow: he shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I spiede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, and carie him to Babylon, in the lode of the Caldees: which he shal not se, & yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hooftes that be aboute him: I will scatere them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. So when I haue scatred them amonge the heithen, and strowed them in the londe: they shal knowe, that I am y^e LORDE. But, I will leane a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fearfull treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this manner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Jerusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke your water with heynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shal be layde waiste, for y^e wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what manner of byworde is that, which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge, all the visios are of none effecte: Tell them therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make that byworde to cease, so that it shal nomore be comonly used in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophesied, shal be fulfilled. There shall no vision be in vayne, nether eny prophesie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For is it I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I y^e LORDE speake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwerde honsholde) will I deuise some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: Is it farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecieth. Therfore saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORD God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saith the LORD.

The XIII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophetic agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: & saye thou vnto them that prophete out of their owne herres: Heare the worde of the LORD, thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto those falsch prophetes, that folowe their owne spieere, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the fowles vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gap, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, that me might abyde the perill in the daye of the LORD. Vayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachinges withall. The LORD (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORD hath not sent them. Vayne visions haue ye sene, & spokē false propheties. when ye saye: the LORD hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

B Therfore, thus saith the LORD God: Because youre wordes be vayne, & ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saith the LORD. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out vayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner witten in the booke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the land of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORD God. And that for this cause: they haue disceined my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with loose claye. Therfore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered mortar, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shur of rayne, greate stones shal fall vpon it, & a sore strome of wynde shal breake it, so shal y wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the mortar, that ye dawbed it withall? Therfore thus saith the LORD God: I will breake out in my wroth full displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shur of rayne, & hale stones in my wroth, to destroye withall.

As for y wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered mortar, I wil breake it downe, &

make it eanen with the grounde: so that the foundation thereof shal remoue, & it shal fall: yee & ye youre selues shal perishe in the midst thereof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORD. Thus wil I perforce wroth vpon this wall, & vpon them that dawbed it with vntempered mortar, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophetic in the cite of Jerusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saith the LORD God. Wherfore (o thou sonne of man) set thy face agaynst the daughters of y people, which prophetic out of their owne herres: & speake thou prophetic agaynst them: saye: Thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder alle holes, and bolsters vnder the heades of yonge and elde, to catch soules whel. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captivitye, ye promysed them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for a hand full of barley, & for a peece of bie: & ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, & ye myse life to them, that lyne not: Thus yf I semble with my people, y beleue y lie.

Wherfore thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil also vpo the pilowes, that with ye catch the soules in flyenge: then I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters shal wil I teare in peces, & deliuer my people out of youre hondes: so that they shal come nether in youre hōdes to be spoyled, & ye shal be we, that I am the LORD. Seinge y with youre lyes ye discomferte the heart of the righteous, whom I haue not discomferte. Agayne: For so moch as ye corage the hōde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, & lyne: therfore shal ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophetic vpon re owne gessinges: for I wil deliuer my people out of youre hondes, that ye maye knowe how that I am the LORD.

The XIII. Chapter.

Here resorted vnto me certayne of the elders of Israel, & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORD vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the men beare their Idols in their herres, & y purposly vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they chaunge counsell at me? Therfore speake vnto them, & saye: thus saith the LORD God: Every man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herre, purposynge to stembly

his owne wickednesse, and cometh to a prophet, to enquire eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORD myself geue answer, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be sinners in their owne herres, because they be cleaue from me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORD God: Be converted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all yf abominations. For every man (where he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourmeth in Israel) which departeth from me, and carieth Idols in his herre, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and cometh to a prophet, for to aske counsell at me: then shal I vnto y man wil I the LORD geue answer, by myne owne self.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comen byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how y I am the LORD. And yf that prophet be disceined, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORD myself haue disceined that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shal be punished for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to y synne of him that ageth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that y house of Israel be led nomore fro me: therfore, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORD God. And the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synnerh agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouision of their bread, and sende dertch vpon them, to destroye man & best in the londe. And though Noe, Daniel and Job these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their righteuousnesse deliuer but their owne soules, saith the LORD God.

As I bringe noysome bestes in to the londe, to waite it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for bestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only deliuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waiste.

Or, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and best in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

As I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and best, and yf Noe, Daniel and Job were therein: As truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their righteuousnesse.

Moreover, thus saith the LORD God: Though I sende my foure tribulous plagues vpon Jerusalem: the swearde, hunger, perious bestes and pestilence, to destroye man and best out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. Beholde, they shal come forth vnto you, and ye shal se their waye, and what they take in honde, & ye shal be comforted, as touchinge all the plagues that I haue brought vpon Jerusalem.

They shal comforte you, when ye set their waye and wrotes: and ye shal knowe, how y it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Jerusalem, as I dyd, saith the LORD God.

The XV. Chapter.

As the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What cometh of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amonge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do me take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to asshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therfore thus saith the LORD God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wodd: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Jerusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shal go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shal consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORD, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waiste: because they haue so sore offended, saith the LORD God.

The XVI. Chapter.

A Gays, the worde of LORDE spake unto me, sayinge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Jerusalem their abominations, and saye thus saith the LORDE God unto Jerusalem: Thy progeny and thymer came out of the lande of Canaan, thy father was an Amouite, thy mother a Cethite. In y daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, y stringe of thy navel was not cut off: thou wast not barked in water to make thee cleane: Thou wast neither rubbed w salt, ner swabbed in cloutes: No man regarded the so much, as to do eny of these thinges for y, or to shewe the soch favour, but thou wast verely cast out vpon y felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, & sayde unto the: thou shalt be purged from thine owne bloude, fro thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clenfed. So I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, & wast greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by y, & loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee eny the tyme to wowe the. Then spied I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: Yee I made an ooth vnto the, & married my self with the (saith the LORDE God) & so thou becamest myne owne. Then washed I the with water, & purged thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I ganethe chaunge of raymentes, I made the shues of Tarus lecher: I gyrded y aboute w white sylke, I clothed the with kerchies, I decked the w cosly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spages vpo thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, & set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou decked with syluer & golde, & thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke & of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothyng but symmels, honny & oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou & beutifull, yee even a very Quene wast thou: In so much, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpo the, saith the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, & played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, & hast fulfilled their desyres: Yet thou hast taken thy garmentes of dyuerse colours, & decked thine alters therewith, when thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, in soch a fashion, as neuer was done, nor shal be. The goodly ornamētes & Jewels which I gave the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou take, & made the into ymagyns of, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmentes of dyuerse colours thou hast taken, and decked them therewith: w oyle & incense hast thou set before them, the meate which I gave the, as symmels, & honny: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete savoure. And thou came also to passe, saith the LORDE God. Thou hast take thine owne sonnes & daughters, whom thou haddest begotten, and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whoremie of thine (thinkest thou) that thou hast my children, and gwest them ouer to be whored vnto them? And yet in all thy abominations and whordome, thou hast not remembered the dayes of thy youth, how naked wast thou wast at that tyme, & troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickedneses (wo wo vnto the, saith y LORDE) thou hast buylded thy steeves and budel houses in every place: yee at the head of every strete hast thou buylded the an altar. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to every one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which haue much flesh: & thus hast thou used thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne hand ouer the, and wil mynsh thy stoare of filth, and deluyr the ouer in to the milles of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abominable waye. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, & not had ynough. Thou hast thou still committed thy fornicacion from the lande of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I cumcide thine herte (saith the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou art a cions whore: buyldinge thy steeves at the heade of every strete, and thy budel house in all places. Thou hast not bene as an other whore, y maketh boosse of hir wynges: but as a wise y breaketh wedlocke, & seeketh other in steade of hir husbode. Gif thou are geuen to all other whores, but thou wast rewardes vnto alle thy louers: & off-them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, & to committe fornicacion with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee the hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, & no reward is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therefore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as thou hast speeche moneye, & discovered thy shame, thou wost thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Jools of thy abominacions in the lande of thy children, whom thou hast gotten them: Beholde therefore, I wil gather to gather all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee & all them whom thou fauourest, and every one that thou hast: and will discover thy shame before the, that they all maye see thy fylthines.

Moreover, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murdurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy. I wil geue the ouer into their power, that shal breake downe thy steeves, and destroye thy budel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy sayre & beutifull Jewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked & bare: Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, & slaye the downe with their sweardes. They shal burne vpon thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to crasse, so that thou shalt geue out no more rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased: seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges. Beholde therefore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saith the LORDE God: howbeit, I neuer vnto the, according to thy wickednesse and all thy abominacions. Beholde, all they y vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art enen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir housbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoketheir husbodes and their children. Your mother is a Cethite, and your father an Amouite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpo thy left hande.

But thy youngest sister that dwelleth on y right hande, is Sodoma and hir daughters.

Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the symmes of thy sister Sodoma werethese: pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Ioulesse: these thinges had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and needy, but were proude, and dyd abominable thinges before me: therefore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. Neither hath Samaria done half of thy symmes, yee thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse: In so much that in comparison of all the abominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therefore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast overcome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therefore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuite, namely the captiuite of Sodoma and hir daughters: the captiuite of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuite amonge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with y self & thy daughters, shalbe broughte agayne to youre olde estate. When thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthines and abominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despysed the ooth, and broken the couenante. Nevertheless, I wil remember the couenante, that I made with the in thy youth, in so much that it shall be an everlastinge couenante: So that thou also remember thy wayes, and be ashamed of the: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and younger sisters, whom I wil make thy doughters.

ters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, & thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORD: that thou mayest thinke vpon it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confusion nomore: when I haue forgiven the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORD God.

The XVII. Chapter.

an. 7. 2

The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakinge and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saith the LORD God: There came a greete Aegle with greete wynges, yee wightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it into the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a fructfull ground, he brought it vnto greete waters, & set it as a willow tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greete wyne stocke, but lowe by the ground: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spied out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greete one, which had greete wynges and many fethers: and beholde, & rotes of this vyne had an hunger after him, and spied out his braunches toward him, to water his frutes: Nevertheless it was plated vpon a good ground besyde greete waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORD God: Shal this vyne prosper? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches withered and fade away? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planteed: shal it prosper therfore? Shal it not be dried vp and withered, yee even in the shutting out of his blossomes, as soone as y east wynde bloweth?

Moreover, the worde of the LORD came vnto me sayenge: Speake to that frauwarde household: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the Kinge of Babilon came to Jerusalem, and toke the Kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the Kinges seide, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an oath of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from his sent his Embassidors into Egypt, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shal he that prospere? Shal he be kepte safe, that doth such thinges? Or shulde he scape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORD God: he shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the Kinge dwelleth, that made huntinge whose oath he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hat broken. Neither shall pharao with his greete hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: wha they cast vp ditches, and set vp bulwarkes destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despised the oath, and broken the couenaunt (whereas he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shal not scape.

Therfore thus saith the LORD God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne oath that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne head. I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I carry him, there will I punyssh him, because of the grete offence that he made me. As for those fle from him out of y hoost, they shal be slayne with the sword. The residue shal be scattered toward all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORD haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORD God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will sette it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greete Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye abide in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shal knowe, that I the LORD haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vpon it: I haue dried vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to flourish: Euen I the LORD y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORD came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ychis comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the child is set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith the LORD God, ye shal vse this byword no more in Israel.

Beholde, all foules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. As a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth w no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mere with the hongrie: he clothech the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraueth his honde from doinge wronge: he hath faith fully betwixte man & man: he walbath in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & persoumeth the faith fully:) This is a righteous man, he shal surely lyue, saith the LORD God.

As he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer, a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and neddy: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter his pledge agayne: he listeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? he shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shal be vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seithall this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like: Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he repecth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he neether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he dealeth his meate with the hongrie: he clothech the naked: he oppresseth not the poore: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shal lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherfore shal he not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therfore: because the sonne hath done equy and right, hath kepeth all my commaundementes, and done them: therfore, shal he lyue in de.

The same soule y synneth, shal dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, ne-

nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shal be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf y vngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundementes, and do the thinge y is equall & right: doubtles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shal not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saith the LORD God: but rather that he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, accordinge to all the abhominacions, that y wicked man doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shal not be thought vpon: but in the fauour that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of y LORD is not indifferēt. Heare therfore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a righteous man turneth awaye from his rightuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynes: he must dye therin: yee for the vnrighuousnes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule al yue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shal lyue, and not dye.

And yet saith the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORD is not equall. Are my wayes vnrigh, o ye house of Israel: Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil indge every man, accordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saith the LORD God. Wherfore, be conuerted, and turne you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye fro you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new spere. Wherfore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel: seynge I haue no pleasure in y death of him that dyeth, saith the LORD God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

whelpes: One of hir whelpes she brought vp, & it became a lion: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The heithen herde of him, & toke him in their nettes, & brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comfort was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lion of him: which wente amonge the lions, & became a fierce lion: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waiste. In so much that the whole londe and euery thinge therein, were utterly desolate, & growe the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the heithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babylon: which put him in prison, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy mother, she is like a vyne in thy bloude, planted by the water syde: hir frutes and braunches are growen out of many waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made stauess thereof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceded f heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and cast downe to the ground. The East wynde dyed vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, withered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie ground. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath bren vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be stanes for officers. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The XX. Chapter.

In the xviij. yere the x. daye of the moneth, it happened, that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to be counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to be any thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answeere. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewethem the abominacions of their forefathers, & tell the: Thus saith the LORDE God: In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the seide of the house of Jacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: yee when I lift vp myne honde ouer them, and sayde: I am the LORDE your God, & uen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had promysed for them, which floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lode amonge all other. Then sayde I vnto them: Cast awaye euery man the abominacions that he hath beset him, and desyle not your selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE your God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not followe me: to cast awaye euery man the abominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made men poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them into the wilderness: I gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed the my lawes: which who so keepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and thereby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so keepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

Then I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to consume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the heithen, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them into the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & y because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my commaundementes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Nevertheless myne eye spared the, so y I wolde not utterly slaye the, & consume the in the wilderness. Moreover, I sayde vnto their fathers in the wilderness: walke not in the statutes of your forefathers, kepe not their ordinances, and desyle not your selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE your God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: for they are a token betwixte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE. Notwithstondinge, their sonnes rebelled agaynst me also: they walked not in my statutes, they kepe not my lawes to fulfill them: which he that doth shal lyue in them: neither halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Then I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Nevertheless I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the heithen, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatere them amonge the heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyue, & I vnhalowed them in their owne gyses: (when I appoynted for myselfe all their first borne to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.)

Therefore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Desyre all this, your forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, y I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thickettes: they made there their offringes, and provoked me with their oblacions, makinge sweete sauours there, & poured out their drinke offerings. Then I axed them, what haue ye to do with all that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euill as vncleane as your forefathers, & committe whoredome also with their abominacions. In all your Idols, where vnto ye bringe your oblacions, & to whose honoure ye burne your children: ye desyle your selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye the come, and are any question at me? O ye house of Israel: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answeere of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the heithen then, & do as other people in the londe, woe & stonemil we worshipec.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myselfe, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherein ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme & w indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you into the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished your forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of your habitation: as for the londe of Israel, they shal not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

So now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blasfeme my holy name with your offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, eue vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipec me: and in the same place will I sauaue them, and there will I requyre your heauy offringes, and the firstlinges of your oblacions, with all your holy thinges.

I wil accepte your sweete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherein ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lode, that I swore to geue vnto your forefathers. There shal ye call to remembrance your owne wayes and all your ymaginations, wherein ye haue bene desyled: and ye shal be displeased with your owne selues, for all your wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I create you after my name, not after your wicked wayes, nor accordinge to your corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Moreover, the worde of y LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the south: I create the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I will kindle a fire in the, & it shall consume the grene trees wth the drye. No man shal be able to quench his flame, but all that loke from the south to the north, shal be brennt therin: & all flesh shal se, that I the LORD haue kyndled it, so that no man maye quench it. Then sayde I: O LORD, they wil saye of me: Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The XXI. Chapter.

And the worde of the LORD came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, see thy face toward Jerusalem, & prophesie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, & wil drawe my swearde out of y^e sheeth, & rote out of y^e both the righteous & the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous & wicked, therfore shal my swearde goe out of his sheeth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORD haue drawen my swearde out of the sheeth, & it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therfore (o thou sonne of man) y^e thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that cometh, at the which all hertes shal melt, all bondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal fayme, and all knees shal waxe feble. Beholde, it cometh & shal be fulfilled, saith the LORD God.

Again, the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophesie, and speake: Thus saith the LORD God: speake, the swearde is sharpened & wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, & secured yf it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y^e dightenge, yf good holde maye be take of it. This swearde is sharpened & dight, yf it maye be gotten in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, & all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shal be slayne downe to the grounde therowthis swearde. Smyte thou vpon the, for wherfore shulde not the place & staff of iudgement come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, & smyte thine hondes together, make the swearde two edged, yet make it three edged, yf manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greateslaughter, which shal smyte them, even in their prey chambers: to make them abashed & sayn te at the hertes, & in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is, how wel dight & mere for y^e slaughter: Se the to some place aloft, ether vpon the heighte or on the lefte, & thither so ever thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes togeth^{er} also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignation. Euen I the LORD haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORD came yet more to me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two sitres, that the swearde of y^e kinge of Babilon maye come. Both these sitres shal goe out of ene londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the sitre shal he chose him a corner. Make yf a sitre, that the swearde maye come toward Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Jerusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shal sende in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two sitres: to are counsell at the sothsayers, casting the lottes with arores, to are counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyer. But the sothsayenge shal poynte to the right syde vpon Jerusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greatesoyse, to crie out Alarm, & set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to graue vpon dyches, & to make bulwokes.

Then theles, as for y^e sothsayenge, they shal holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be take and wome. Therfore saith the LORD God: For so moche as ye youre selues shewe youre effence, and heue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: In so moche (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shal be taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shal haue an ende: Thus saith the LORD God: take awaye the myre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them wil I, and destroye them: and that shal not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgement belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: Thus saith the LORD God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speak then: The swearde, the swearde, is drawen forth already to the slaughter, & secured that it glisteth (because then hast loke the vanities, & prophesied lyes) yf it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpon the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vpon agayne into the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe wherethou wast nourished & borne, and poure my indignation vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wroth, and deliuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and y^e bloude shal be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORD haue spoken it.

The XXII. Chapter.

Moreouer, the worde of y^e LORD came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloudthirstie cite? Shewe the their abhominacions, & tell them: Thus saith the LORD God: O thou cite, yf shedest bloude in y^e myddest of the, yf thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self guilty, in y^e bloude yf thou hast shed: & defyled yf y^e Idols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therfore will I make yf to be confounded amonge the heithen, & to be despised in all the lodes, whether they be nye or farre frother they shal laugh yf to scorne, thou yf hast gotten the so foule a name, & art full of myschefe. Beholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought every man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the stranger, in the haue they vered the wyddorne & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despised my Sanctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. Murthers are there in the, that shed bloude, & cate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse unhappynesse.

In yf haue they discovered their fathers shame, in the haue they vered women in the fildnesse. Every man hath dealt shamefully with his neighbours wife, & abheminably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath every man forced his owne sister, euen his fathers daughter: Yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken shury & increase, thou hast oppressed thyne ghylours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORD God. Beholde, I haue smytten my hondes vpon thy couerousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them filies, in the tyme that I shal bringe vpon the: Euen I the LORD that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

I will scatere the amonge the heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lodes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to cease out of the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORD.

And the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. All they that shulde be kasse, tynne, yd & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therfore, thus saith the LORD God: For so moche as ye all are turned into drosse, beholde: I will bringe you together vnto Jerusalem, like as syluer, brasfe, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowen there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wroth, and indignacion. I will bringe you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therein.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shal ye also be melted therein: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORD haue poured my wroth vpon you.

And the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell her: Thou art an vnclene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wroth: thy prophets that are in the, are sworn together to denoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddomes in yf. Thy prestes breate my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. They put no dyfference betwene the holy and unholy, nether discern betweene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

Thy rulers in the are like rauyslinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophets, they dawbe with untempered claye, they se vanities: and prophesie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORD God sayeth so, where as the LORD hath not spoken. The people in the londe vse wicked extorcion and robbery. They vere the poore and needy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vpon the hedge, and see him self in the gappe before me in the lodes behalfe, yf I shulde not utterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therfore wil I poure re out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: theirowe wayes will I recompence vpon theirowe heades, saith the LORDE God.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Ihe woide off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egypte. There were their brestes binssed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest off them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Jerusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whoynge, when I had take her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louners the Affrians, which had to do with her: euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckt in costly aray: saye yongemen, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yongemen off Affria: see she was made vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Neither ceased she fro the fornicaciō, that she vsed with the Egyptians: for in hir youth they laye wth her, they binssed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their whordome vpon her. Wherfore, I deliuered her in to y^e hōdes of hir louners, euen the Affrians, whom she soloued. The se discovered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, ad they punyshed her.

Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ad destroyed herself wth inordinate loue, more then she, & exceded hir sister in whordome: she loued y^e Affrians (which also laye wth her) namely, the prynces & greates lordes, that were clothed wth all maner of gorgeous apparell, all lusty hoysmen and saye yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with saye gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, loyng all like prynces (after y^e maner of the Babilonians and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediately, as soone as she sawe them, she bent in loue vpon them, and sent messengers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babilonians came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with theirowordome, and so was she polluted with them. And when hir lust was abate from them, hir whordome and shame was discovered & sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister. So, neuertheless she vsed hir whordome the longer the more, and remembred the dayes off hir youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the londe off Egypte: she bent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like y^e flesh of Affes, and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renned the fylchynesse of thy youth, when thy louners binssed y^e pappes, and married thy brestes in Egypte.

Therfore (o Ooliba) thus saith y^e LORDE God, I will raise vpon thy louners (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Affrians: all yonge and saye louners: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good hoysmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, & a grete multitude of people: which shall be harnesssed aboute the on every syde, wth busshettes, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh y^e before them, yet they the selues shall punysh the, according to their owne indgmet. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shall cut off thy nose and thine eares, and the remnant shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall carry awaye thy sonnes and daughters, & the residue shall be brent in the fyre. Thy shall stripe the out of thy clothes, & carry thy costly wels awaye with them.

Thus will I make an ende off thy fylchynesse & whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egypte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, & cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egypte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will dayntie in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hast yet euen in to the hondes of them, with wh^{ch} thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with y^e: All thy labour shall they take with them, and leave the naked and bere, and thus the shame of thy filchy whordome shall come to light. All these thinges shall happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled y^e self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister: therfore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy hand.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou shalt wynte off thy sisters cuppe, how depe & farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be lughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off wondrennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of y^e sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruction & wastinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out eue to y^e drygges, yet thou shalt eate vpon the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: for euen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Therfore thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so much as thou hast forgottē me, & cast me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylchynesse & whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reprove Oola & Ooliba: Shewethē their abhominaciōs: namely, y^e they haue brotē their weblocke, & stayned their hōdes wth bloude: yet euen wth their Idols haue they committed aduontry, & offered them their owne children (to be deuoured) wh^{ch} they had borne vnto me. Yet this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sanctuary in that same daye, & haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. So, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent y^e messengers for men out of farre countrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: thou sattest vpon a goodly bed, & a table spred before the: wher vpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greates cheare wth her, & the men y^e were sent fro farre countrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue bracelets vpon their hondes, & set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doubt, these wil vse their harlotry also wth y^e older whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola & Ooliba, those filchy women.

O ye all that loue vertue and rightwousnes, indgethē, punysh them: as aduoutrers and murderers ought to be indged and punyshed. For they are breakers off weblocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherfore thus saith the LORDE God: bringe a grete multitude off people vpon them, and make them bescattered and spoiled: these shall stone them, and gore them with their sweardes. They shall slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vpon their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all such fylchynnes out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vncleynesse. And so they shall laye youre fylchynesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shall be punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: & ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXIII. Chapter.

In the ix. yeare, in the x. Moneth, the x. daye off the Moneth, came the woide off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wyte vpon the name off this daye, yet eue y^e houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon set himself agaynst Jerusalem. Shewe y^e obstinate howsholde a parable, & speake vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, & poure water in to it: put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, & fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, & an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, & let the bones seyth well therein.

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of y^e pot, wher vpon the rustynesse hageth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast: therfore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be covered with dust. And therfore haue I letten her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wroth full indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saith y^e LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that bloudthirstie cite, for wh^{ch} I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou y^e bones together, kynble thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well soddē, that the bones maye be sucked out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote: that the fylch and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so much off it: the rustynesse must be brent out. Thy fylchynesse is abhominable, for I wolde haue clenched the, but thou woldest not be clenched. Thou canst not be pouged from thine vncleynesse, till I haue pouged my wroth full indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuysed: see it is come therto allready, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I will not be intreated: but according to thy wayes ad ymaginations, thou shalt be punyshed, saith the LORDE God.

C And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes wth a plague: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy cheskes therfore: thou mayest mourne by thy selff alone, but use no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, corner not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I spake vnto the people by tymes in the moynynge, and at euen my wyse dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was commaunded. And y^e people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Tell the house off Israel, thus saith y^e LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: euē the glory off youre power, the pleasure off y^e eyes, and ether thinge that yeloue: youre sonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

D Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bread: youre bonettes shal ye haue vpon youre heades, & shues vpon youre fete. Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre tymes ye shal be sorrowfull, and one repete with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shew tokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this cometh) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am y^e LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne off man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their loye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burch of their bodie: namely, their sonnes and daughters: The shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal y^e mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be no more domme: See and thou shalt be their shew tokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXV. Chapter.

21 The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, set thy face agaynst y^e Ammonites, prophesy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe off Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee ad ouer the house off Juda, I trow they be now led awaye prisoners: Beholde, I will deliuer y^e to the people off the east, y^e they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castles and houses in the. They shall eate the frute, and drynke vpon thy mylke. As for Babath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepesholde: and ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine handes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysish in thine herte ouer the londe off Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out my hande ouer the also, and deliuer the, to be spoiled off the heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the a layed waiste, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Juda, it is but like as all other cities be: Therfore beholde, I will make the a cū off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye the strength: their cities and chiefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely, Beresimoch, Baalim and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, y^e they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remembrance amonge the heithen. And thus will I punyssh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: Because that Edom hath avenged & cast himself vpon the house off Juda, therfore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out my hande vpon Edom, and take awaye man and best out off it. From Theman vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shal be slayne with the swerde. Thorow my people off Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpon Edom: they shal haue him, acordunge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitefull stomaches, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out my hande ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnant off the seacoast to perishe. A greate vengeance wil I take vpon them, and punyssh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The XXVI. Chapter.

1 It happened, that in the xi. yere, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Jerusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my body full. See therfore saith y^e LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpo the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst y^e, like as whe the see aryseth with his waves: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hang vpon their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God. The Gētes shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perishe with the swerde, y^e they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will bringe hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kynge off Babylon & a kynge off kynges) from the North, vpo Tyre, with horses, charrettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude off people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal be slaye with y^e swerde: But agaynst y^e, he shall make bullwortes & graue vpon dyches aboute the, & lift vp his shilde agaynst y^e. His slynges & batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, & wth his weapons breake downe thy towres. The dust off his horses shal couer y^e, they shal be so many: y^e walles shal shake at the noyse off y^e horsemen, charrettes & wheles: when he cometh to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hofes off his horse fete, shal he made downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people wth the swerde, & breake downe the pilers off thy strength. They shal waiste awaye thy riches, & spoyle y^e marchaūdis. Thy walles shal they breake downe, & destroye thy houses off pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymber & foundations, shal they cast in the water. Thus wil I bringe the melody off thy songes, & the voyce off thy minstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal no more be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the, yee a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buyded agayne: For euē I y^e LORDE haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God: thus saith the LORDE God spoken concerninge Tyre: The Isles shal be moued at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crie off the slayne, y^e shal be murthered in the. All kynges off the see shal come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: See with trembling shal they be clothed, they shal sit vpo the ground: they shal be a frayd at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, y^e hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see wth thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: Now art thou now so utterly destroyed: Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Isles, yee and the Isles them selues shal stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus saith the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I bringe the depe vpon the, y^e greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to y^e pytte: vnto a people that hath bene longed, and set the in a londe y^e is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so y^e no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in bone, in the lōde off the kynges. I wil make an ende off the, ad thou shalt be gone.

Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou nor be founde for evermore, saith y^e LORDE God.

The XXVII. Chapter.

1 The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou soane off mā, make a lamentable cōplāynt vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a poire off the see, y^e occupieth with moch people: and many Isles: thus speaketh y^e LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest off the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All y^e tables haue they made off Cipie trees off the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they take Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Otes off Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made off yuccy, & off costly wod out off the Ile off Cethim. Thy sale was off whyte small nedle worke out off the londe off Egipce, to haue vpo thy mast: & thy hanginges off yalow sylke & purple, out off y^e Isles off Elisa. They off Sidō & Arvad were thy maryners, & the wysest in Tyre were thy shippmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mented & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmen occupied their marchaūdis in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hangd vpon their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy beery.

Tren. 1.2

Eze. 26. 18.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost roude aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vp the ir shildes roude aboute thy walles, and made the marvelous goodly. Tharsis occupi-de with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yiron, tyme and lead, and made thy market greete. Iauan, Tubal and Mesch were thy marchauntes, which brought the men, & ornamentes off metall for thy occupyenge.
They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Martre, horse, hoisemen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchauntes: and many other Jles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephant bones and Paycockes for a present.
The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse woorkes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with needle woike, w^o whyte lymminge cloth,
with sylke and with Chustall.

Juda and the londe off Israel occupied with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also used marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte wolle: because thy occupienge was so greete, and thy wares so many. Dan, Iauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yronredy made, with Casia and Calamus, accordinge to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in sayre tapestry woike and quysbims. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied w^o
the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchauntes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precions stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Zaran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Nijiria and Chelmad, were all doers with y^e and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and needle woike, (very precious, & therefore packte & boude together w^o roapes) See and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off y^e marcheres. The shippes off Tharsis were the chiefe off thy occupyenge.

Thus thou art full, and in greete worshipe, enen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the one of many waters. But y^e easte wynde shal ouer-beare the in to the myddest off the see: so y^e thy wares, thy marchaundies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shal perishe in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The sub-mbes shall shake at the loude crye off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpo the see, shall leape out of their betes, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, ad lye downe in ashes. They shal shawe them selues, & put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with bitter sorrow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shal wepe for the: Alas, what can hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre?
Whenthy wares & marchaundies came to the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Jles are abashed at the, and all the kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue dunghed colour. The marchauntes of the cions wondre at the, In that thou art so dene brought to naught, & comest nomaie.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, in the prynces of Tyre: Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a prynced and hast sayde: I am a God, I haue my se-te in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man & not God, & y^e standest in thine owne cōceite, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkest thy selfe w^o ser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hid from y^e. With thy wysdome & thy vnderstandinge, thou hast gotten the greete welth of the see, and gathered treasure off syluer & golde.
With thy greete wysdome and occupyenge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greete riches thy heart is proude.

Therefore thus saith y^e LORDE God: So so moch as thou hast lift vp thine heart, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bring geenemies vpon the, enen the tyrantes of the heithen: these shal drawe out their swordes vpon thy benty and wysdome, and shal defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the myd-dest off the see, as they that beslayne. Let y^e thou wilt saye then (before the that slay y^e) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, enen as the vncircu-mised in the hōdes of y^e enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Moreover, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kyng of Tyre, & tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a scale of a licknesse, full off wysdome & excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in y^e pleasur gardē off God: thou art dectē with all maner of precions stones: with Ruby, Topas, Chustall, Jacynthe, Onyx, Jas-pis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, & golde.
Thy beuty & y^e holes y^e be in y^e were set forth in the daye of y^e creacion. Thou art a sayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off
God, there hast thou bene, and walked amoge the sayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the.

Because off thy greete marchaundise, thy heart is full off wickednesse, & thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount off God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and destroye the amo-ge the glisteringe stones. Thy heart was proude in y^e sayre beuty, & thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wysdome.
I wil cast y^e downe to the grounde, & y^e in y^e sight off kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sactuary, w^o the greete wickednesse off thy on-righteous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest off the, to consume the: ad wil make the to ashes, in the sight off all the y^e lōte vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amo-ge the heithen, shal be abashed at the: scinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face
agaynst Sids, prophetic vpo it, and speake.
Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpo the, & get me honoure in the:
that it maye be knowne, how that I am y^e LORDE, when I punyssh her, & get me honoure in her. For I wil sende pestilence & bloud sheddinge in to hir streetes, so y^e those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest off her: & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge briere vnto the house off Israel, ner vnto the that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde off Israel together agayne, from the nations amo-ge whom they be scattered: then shal I be sanctified in the, in y^e sight off the Gentiles: & they shal dwell in the lode, y^e I gauctomy seruauit Jacob. They shal dwell safely therein, buylde houses, and plante ynyardes: See safely shal they dwell therein, when I haue punysshed all those, that despysethem rounde aboute: and then shal they knowe, y^e I am the LORDE their God.

The XXIX. Chapter.

In the x. yere, vpon the xxi. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde off the LOR-DE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mi, set now thy face agaynst Phara-the kyng off Egypte, prophetic agaynst him and agaynst the whole lode off Egypte:
Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharaoh thou kyng off Egip-te, I wil vpo the, thou greete whall fish, y^e lyest in y^e waters: Thou y^e sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, & hāge all the fish in thy waters vpo thy scales: after y^e I wil drawe the out off thy waters, yee & all the fish off y^e waters that hange vpon thy scales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lode with the fish off thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beest-es of the felde, & for the foules off the ayre:
that all they which dwell in Egypte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of reede to the house off Israel. When they toke holde off y^e w^o their hōde thou brakest and prydest them on euery sy-de: and yff they leaned vpo the, thou brakest, ad hurdest the reynes off their backes. Therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil bringe a swearde vpon the, and rote out off the both man and beest. See the londe off Egypte shal be desolate and waiste, & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I myself haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I wil make the londe off Egypte waiste and desolate, from the towre off Syenes vnto the borders off the Moriās londe: so that in xl. yeres there shall no foote off man walke there, nether foote off ca-tell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe off Egypte to be desolate amo-ge other waiste countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeres, amo-ge other voyde cities: And I wil scatere the Egipcians amo-ge the heithen and nations.

Agayne, thus saith the LORDE God:
When the xl. yeres are expyied, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the naciōs, amo-ge whō they were scatred, and wil bunge the presoners off Egypte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne name.

tyne countre, that they maye be there a low lest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exal te them selues aboue the heithen: for I will sonnysh them, that they shall nomore rule the heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouote the enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ad they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yeare, the first daye of the first Moneth, came y^e worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou some off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babylon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labour to come before Tyre: that euery heademaye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether humer his hoest euyrwarde, for y^e greate tranayle y^e he hath taken there. Therfore thus saith y^e LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilo, y^e he maye take awaye all hir substance, to be hir robberies, ad spoyle hir spoyles, to paye his hoost their wagicis withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the home off the house of Israel to growe forth, z open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, howe that I am the LORDE.

The XXX. Chapter.

21 Whoner, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophesy & speake: thus saith the LORDE God: Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of y LORDE is come: the darke daye of y the houre is at hande, the swerde cemmeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundacions are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be astrayed, yee the Morians londe, Eybim & Eydia, all their cemon people, & Chub, & all y be confederate vnto the, shal fall wth the thorrow y swerde.

Thus saith y LORD: Thema ynreyners of the lēde of Egypte shal fall, the pryde of his power shal come downe: euē vnto the te-wer off Syenes shall they be slayne downe wth the swerde, saith y LORD God: amon-ge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, z amōge other waist cities they shal be waisted. And they shal knowe, y I am y LORD, when I fynde a fyre in Egypte, z when all his helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth frome in shippes, to make y^e cardoff Menans a frayed: and so we shal come pon them in the daye of Egipte, for bowdes it shal come. Thus saith the LORD God:

I wil make an ende of the people of Egipt thorow the honde of Nabuchedonosor kin-ge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrantes of the heathen shal be brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their sweardes vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slaynemen. I wil dye vp their floudes of water, and sell the l-de into the hondes of wicked people. They de and all y^e is therein, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORD haue sayde.

And thus saileth the LORD God: I will destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. There shal neme be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfullnesse will sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for pachures, I will make it desolate, and kindle a fy-re in Zoan. Alexandria will I punish, and my wroth full indignaciō vpon Sin, which is the strength of Egypte. All the sustaine of Alexandria will I destroye, and kindle fyre in Egypte.

Sin shalbe in greate heynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Meph shall haue daylie sorewe. The best men off heliepolis Bubasto shalbe slayne with the sworde, ad caried awaye captyue. At Taphmo the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the sep-tter of the londe of Egipthe, and when y pom-pe of hir pow^r shal haue an ende. A doore shal couer her, and hir doughtere shalbe led awaye into captyuyte. Thus will I punyssh Egipthe, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

It happened in the xi. yeare, vpon the seuenth daye of y first Moneth, y the LORDS worde came vnto me, sayenge: Behelde, this sonne of mā, I wil breake y arme of pharao Kynge of Egypte: and so, it shal not be bounde vp to be healed, nether shal eny playster be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to helde a swerde. Therfore, thus saith the LORD God: behelde, I will vpon pharao y kinge of Egypte, z brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) z will te the swerde out of .his honde.

As forthe Egipcians, I wil scatte them amonge the heithen, & strowethē in the ken-des aboute. Agayne I wil strengthe y^e arm of the kinge of Babilō, & geue him my swor-de in his hōde: but I wil breake pharaos arme, so y^e he shal holde it before him pitiely, like a wounded man.

See I will stablish the kynge of Babilons armes, & the armes of Pharaos shal fall down:
that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which geue the kynge off Babylon my sworde in his hōde, that he maye drawe it out vpon the londe of Egypte: and that when I scatter the Egyptians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in y^e lōdes abou t, they maye knowe, y^e I am the LORDE.

The XXXI. Chapter.

Wowner, it happened in the xi. yeare of first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaos the kynge of Egipte, ad to all his people: Whom art thou like in y great nesse: Beholde, Assur was like a Cedie tre vps the mount of Libanus, with sayre braū ches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His topppe reached vnto the clondes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Roūde abou te the rocces of him rāne there floudes of wa ter, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therfore was he hyer thā all the trees of the felde, and thorow y mul titude of waters that he sent frō him, he op tayne many and longe braunches. All fou les of the ayre made their nestes in his braū ches, vnder his bowes qēdried all the beastes of y felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all peo ple. Sayre and beutifull was he in his great nesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rocces stode besyde greate waters: no Ce-den of God, there was no Syre tre like his braunches, the playne trees were not like y^e bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his berty: so sayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, y^e all the trees in the pleasaunt gardē of God, had envye at hi. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: So: so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the clondes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil deliuer him in to y^e hondes of y^e mightiest amōge y^e heithē, which shall rote him out. Accordyng to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the heithen shall so scatere him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shade we, and forsaite him. When he is fallē, all y^e foules of y^e ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his biau-ties: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall arrayne to his hyenesse, nor reach his toppes vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be deliue-red vnder the earth, and go downe to y graue, like other men.

Moreover, thus saith the LORD God: C
In the daye when he goeth downe to the grave, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greates waters shal be restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be sorowfull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smytte. I wil make the heithen shate at the sounde of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them y descende in to the pyree. All the trees of Eden, w^{ch} all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitacons: for they shal go downe to hell wth him, vnto the that be slayne with the swear-de, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amonge the heithen. To whom shal-thou be likened, that art so glorious & greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder y earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne w^{ch} the swearde. Euen thus is it with pharao & all his people, saith the LORD God. E

The XXXII. Chapter.

In the xij. yeare, the first daye of the
xij. Moneth, the woode of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpo Pharao the kynge of Egipte, & saye vnto him: Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the heithen, & as a whalish in the see. Thou castest y^e waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters wth thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus sa yeth the LORDE God: I wil spredde my net o uer y^e, namely, a greate multitude of people:
these shal dryne the into my yarne, for I will cast the vpo the lode, and let the lye vpo the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpo the: I wil geue all the beastes of the fel de ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpo the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyennesse. I will water the londe with the abundance off thy bloude euen to the mou ntaynes. & y^e valleys shal be full off the.

When thou art put out, I will cover the heaven, and make his starres dymme. I will

B spiede a cloude ouer the Sonne, and the Moone shall not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bunge darcknesse vpon thy londe, saith y^e LORD God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bunge thy destruccions amonge the heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afrayed thorow y^e, that their hayre shall stonde vp, whē I shake my swerde at their faces. Sodenly shall they be astonnyed, every man in himself, at y^e daye of thy fall.

C For thus saith the LORD God: the kyng of Babylone swerde shall come vpon y^e, with y^e swerdes of the worthies will I smyte redowne thy people. All they that be mightie amonge the Gētiles, shall waiste the proude pompe of Egypte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the cartell also of Egypte will I destroye, that they shall come nanore vps the waters: so that nether mā nor beast shall claue, shall steepe them enymore. Then will I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, saith the LORD God: when I make the londe of Egypte desolate, and when y^e countre with all that is therein, shall be layde waste: and whē I smyte all the which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORD. This is the mournyng, that the daughters off the heithen shall make: yee a sorow and lamentaciō shall they take vp, vpon Egypte and all hir people, saith the LORD God.

D In the xij. yere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORD vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egypte, and cast them downe, yee ad the mightie people of the heithen also, even with the that dwell beneath: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how saye so ever thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amonge those that be slayne with the swerde, shall they lye. The swerde is geuen alre dyhe shall be diuyned forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, y^e be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with y^e swerde: shall speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, ad their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne ad fell all with the swerde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His cōmōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: alltogether wounded and slayne with the swerde, which men afore tyme brought feare into y^e londe off the lynyng.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swerde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles som tyme brought feare in to the londe off the lynyng: for the which they beare the blame, with the other that be gone downe to y^e graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which vncircumcised, and with them that be slayn thorow the swerde: for seynge that they mes past they made the londe off the lynyng a frayd, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesch also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swerde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lynyng a frayd.

Shaldest thou then lye also amonge the worthies, and vncircumcised Gētiles? which wth their reapers are gone downe to hel: whose swerdes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their benes: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to y^e lōde of y^e lynyng. Amonge the vncircumcised shall thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swerde.

There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, which wth their stryght are layed by them that were slayne with the swerde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Moreover, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidonians, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they came me to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swerde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to y^e pytte. Now when pharao seyth this, he shall be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swerde: both pharao and all his host, saith y^e LORD God. For I haue geuen my feare in the lōde of the lynyng. But pharao and all his people shall lye amonge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swerde, saith the LORD God.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Y Gayne, the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, speake to the childre of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swerde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: yf same man (whā he seyth the swerde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

If a man now heare the noyse off the trompet, and will not be warned, and the swerde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shall be vps his owne heade. For he herde the soude off the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnyng, he shall saue his life. Agayne, yf the watchman se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so yf the people is not warned: yff the swerde cometh, and take eny man from amonge the: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

D And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. If I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geast him not warnyng, that he maye bewarte off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shall he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deliuered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel. Ye saye thus: Our offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORD God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moche rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lye. Turne you, turne you from y^e vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

C Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall not saue him, whan so ever he turneth awaye vnsaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shall not hurte him, whan so ever he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse.

And yf rightuousnesse of the rightuous shall not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. If I saye vnto the rightuous, that he shall surely lye, and so he trust to his owne rightuousnesse, and do synne: then shall his rightuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne fro his synnes, and do the thinge that is lausfull and right: In so moche that the same wicked man geneth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doeth no wylge:

Then shall he surely lye, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shall neuer be thought vpon: For in so moche as he doeth now the thinge that is lausfull and right, he shall lye. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORD is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnrigh.

D When the rightuous, turneth from his rightuousnesse, and doeth the thinge that is wicked, he shall dye therefore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lausfull and right, he shall lye therefore. Yee ye saye: he waye of y^e LORD is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I will iudge every one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yere, the v. daye of the Moneth of oure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Jerusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: y^e cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORD had bene vpon me the euenyng, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntill the mornynge that he came to me: yee he opened my mouth, so yf I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of y^e LORD vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ad he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therefore tell them: Thus saith the LORD: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lyft vp to Idols, and haue shed bloude: shall ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swerdes, ye worke abhominacions, every one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shall ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto the: Thus saith the LORD God: As truly as I lye, all ye that dwell in this wilbernesse, shall be slayne wth the swerde: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and denmes, shall dye off the pestilence. For I wil make the londe desolate and waiste, and y^e p^{er}pe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauallye therby.

Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lode waiste and desolate, because off all their abheminacions, that they haue wrought. And thou some off man, the children off thy people y^e talke of the, by the walles and in the doores of their houses, sayenge on to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after y^e manner of a greates people: yee my people syt downe befoir the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not thereafter: For in their mouthes they shewethemselues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a baler y^e hath a siveretune, and is pleasur to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. Whē this cometh to passe (for lo, it cometh in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Unto the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, prophesye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophesye, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede y^e flockes?

1 Pe. 5 a

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but y^e flocke haue ye not nourished: The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: y^e lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled the. Thus are they scattered here and there without a shepherd: yee all the beestes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandunge vpon all mountaynes and vpon euery hye hill, yee they be scattered abrode in all felde, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seeketh after them.

Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so much as my

shepe are rabbed, and deuoured off all the wyld beestes off the felde, hauyng in the ppherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heareth the LORDE God: Beholde, I myself will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make the asle from feeding of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For I will deliuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will loke to my shepe myself, and sit them. Like as a shepherd amonge the flocke seeketh after the shepe that are scattered abrode, even so will I seeke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scattered in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bunge them out from all people, and gather them together out off all londes. I will bringe them in to their owne lode, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in alle the places of the countre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall there foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shal they fede: even vpon the mountaynes off Israel.

I will fede my shepe myself, and bunge them to their rest, saith the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seeke: soch as go astraye, will I bringe agayne: soch as be wounded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykynge, these will I preferue, and fede them with y^e thinge that is lausfull. And as for you (o my shepe) saith the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, amonge the withers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture w^{ith} youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be sayne to eat y^e thinge, that ye haue troden downe with y^e fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will sener the fat shepe from the leane: for so much as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap^{er} y^e fete, and shulders, and runne vpon them with y^e fete, hones, so longe till ye haue utterly scattered them abrode. I wil helpe my shepe, so y^e they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne o^{ne} shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherd: even my seruant Dauid, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherd. The LORDE wil be their God, and my seruant Dauid shal be their prince: Even I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Moreover, I wil make a coneuant of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out off the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the wooddes. Good fortune y^e prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the woodde maye bunge forth their frutes, y^e y^e ground be hir increase. They shal be safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue broke their yocke, and deliuered them out off the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore be spoyled of the heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lode: but safely shal they dwell, y^e no man shal fraye them. I wil see vp an excellent place for them, so y^e they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reproche of y^e heithen any more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am w^{ith} them, y^e y^e they euen the house of Israel are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The XXXV. Chapter.

Upon the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face toward the mount Seir, prophesye vpon it, y^e saye vnto it: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hode ouer the, yee waiste y^e desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, y^e thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. For so much as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, y^e with a cruel honde hast made them astrayed, what tyme as they were troubled y^e punished for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lyue, (saith y^e LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shal bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate y^e waiste, and bringe to passe, that there shal no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fill w^{ith} his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shal lye full of them, that are slayne with y^e swerde. I wil make the a perpetuall wildernes, for that noman shal dwell in thy cities: y^e yemaye knowe, how y^e I am the LORDE.

And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nations and both these londes must be myne, y^e I wil haue them in possession, where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will haue the accordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amonge them, how I haue punished the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyteful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waiste, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee y^e multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saith y^e LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waiste. And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: even so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, y^e knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Upon the sonne of man, prophesye vpon the mountaynes of Israel, y^e speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because ye^r enemyte hath sayde vpon you: A ha, y^e hie everlastinge places are now become ours: prophesye therefore, y^e speake: thus saith y^e LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted y^e trode downe on euery syde, y^e become a possession vnto y^e residue of y^e Gētilles, which haue brought you in to mē's mouthes: y^e vnto an euell name amonge y^e people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys y^e dales, to the voyde wildernesses y^e desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the residue of the heithen: Yee euen thus saith the LORDE God: In the syre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuoyce, agaynst the residue of the Gētilles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue taken in my lode vnto the selues for a possession: which also reioysed fro their whole herte w^{ith} a despyteful stomacke, to waiste it, and to spoyle it.

Eze. 37

B Prophecytherfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto y^e mountaynes and hilles, to valleyes and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my ge- lousy and terrible wiath: for so moch as ye haue suffred reprose of the heithen, therfore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworn, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye maye be tyllled and sowne. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and y^e decayed places shal be repayed againe. I wil multiplye you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bringe frute. I wil restore y^e old to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes the- ner ye had before: wherby ye shall knowe, y^e I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. A gayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as they saie vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no more men, nether destroye thy people enymore, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from henceforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprose of the nations, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saith the LORDE God.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of ma, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne groundes, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vncleynesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherewith they had defyled them selues. I scared them also amonge the heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lodes. Accordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punyssh them.

D Now when they were gone vnto the heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe: Then spake my holy name, which y^e house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therfore tell y^e house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I donot this for y^e sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amonge the heithen, when ye came to them. Therfore, I wil halowe my greete name agayne, which amonge the Gentiles is euil spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amonge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith y^e LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne into youre owne londe. Then will I poure cleane water vpon you, & ye shall be cleane: yee shall be free from all youre vncleynesse and from all y^e Idols. I shall cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, and a new spere wil I put in to you: As for that stony herte, I will take it out of youre body, and geue you a fleshy herte. I wil geue you my spere amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaundementes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to y^e forefathers, & ye shall be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vncleynesse, I wil call for you, come, and wil increase it, and wil let you be full, and wil not hunger. I wil multiplie the frutes of the trees and y^e increase of the felde for you, so that ye shall beare no more reprose of y^e heithen. Then shall yee remember y^e owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginacions, which were not good: so that ye shall take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therfore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: whattyme as I shal clese you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repaye the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme lay waste, in the sight of all them, that walke by. Then shal it be sayde: This waste lode is become like a garden of pleasure, and the stronge, and sensed agayne. Then the residue of the heithen that lye rounde aboute you shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which paye that was broken downe, and place agayne, that was made waste. Then I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of y^e house of Israel, & do this for them: I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Jerusalem are in the hie solampne scaytes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

I The honde of the LORDE came vpon me, & caried me out in the spere of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & behelde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & mar- uelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these be- neas maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me, prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breath into you, that yee maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breath, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me. And as I was prophesyinge, there came a noyse and a greate motion, so that the be- neas came euery one to another. Now when I had looked, behelde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboute they were couered with skynne, but there was no breath in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophecy thou towarde the wynde: prophecy, and speake to the wynde: Thus saith the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayie) from the foure wyndes, & blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me: Then came the breeth vnto them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their feet, a maruelous greate sort.

Moreover, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saie: cure bones are dryed vp, our hope is gone, we are cleane cut of: Therfore prophecy thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulchres, & bringe you into the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe, y^e I am the LORDE, when I open your graues, & bringe you out of them. My spere also wil I put in you, & ye shall lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a stick, and wyte vpon it: Vnto Juda & to the children of Israel his companions. Then take another stick, and wyte vpon it: Vnto Joseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the householde of Israel his companions. And thou take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stick together. Now yf the childre of thy people saie vnto the: wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answer: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil take the stocke of Joseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim, and of the crybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Juda, & make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wytest, shal thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saie vnto them:

Thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childre of Israel from amonge the heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of the in y^e londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall nomore be two peoples from henceforth, ne- ther be denyded in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle the selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wicked- doinges. I wil helpe the out of all their dwelling places, wher in they haue synned: & will so cleanse them, that they shalbe my people, and I their God.

Dauid my seruaunt shalbe their kinge, & they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruaunt, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee cū in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childrens children dwell for euermore: and my seruaunt Dauid shal be their everlastynge prynces. Moreover, I will make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an everlastinge couenant. I wil satte the also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge the for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe wth them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y^e holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for ever more.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Unto the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towardes Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chiefe pryncce at Mesch and Tubal: prophesy agaynst him, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: O Gog thou chiefe pryncce of Mesch and Tubal: beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy chawes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horsemen, which be all weaponed of the best fashion: a greate people, that handle alcege ther speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Perses, Morryans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogoma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Therefore prepare the, set thy self in aray with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and bethou their defence. After many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lode, that hath bene destroyed with the swerde, & now is replenished agayne wth dyverse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which have lye y^e waite. Yee they be brought out of the nations, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lode, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

Moroner, thus saith the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many thinges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt magyn myschese, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they have nether barres nor doores) to spoyle them, to robbe the, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, y^e is gathered together from amonge the heithen, which have gotten cattell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchantes of Tharsis wth all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle: to take syluer and golde: to carry awaye cattell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophesy, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saith the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwell safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people wth the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable multitude. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lode. Thus shalt thou come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the heithen maye knowe me, when I get me homer vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou sonne of man, of whom I haue spoken aforetyme, by my seruantes y^e prophetes of Israel, which prophesied in those dayes & yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog cometh vp in to the lode of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignacion go forth in my wrath. For my gelousy and hore displeasure I haue desired, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the lode of Israel at that tyme. The very fyssh in the see, the foules of the ayre, the bestes of the felde, and all the men y^e are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vpon side, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the ground. I wil call for a swerde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that every man shal swerde shal be vpon another. With pestilence and bloude wil I punyssh him: stormy wynde and hale stones, fyre and brimstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greates people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the heithen: that they maye be sure, how y^e I am y^e LORDE.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

Therfore o thou sonne of man, prophesy agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I Gog: thou chiefe pryncce at Mesch and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, and carie the forth, & lede y^e from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine people, and all the people that is with the, shalt fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Thus wil I gene the vnto y^e foules and wilde bestes of the felde, to be deuoured: that thou lye vpon the felde: for enē I the LORDE

haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so careless in the lode: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, y^e I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I wil not let my holy name be euil spoken of any more: but the very heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it cometh, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in y^e cities of Israel, shal go forth, and set fyre vpon the weapons, and burne them: shyldes and speeres, bowes and arrows, bylles and clubbes: seven yeares shall they be burnyng therof, so that they shal els bunge no stiches from y^e felde, nether haue ned to hew downe eny out of the wodde: for they shal haue weapons y^e new to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith y^e LORDE God.

At the same tyme wil I gene vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, wher the thow men go from the east to the see ward: Those that trauaile therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seven monethes longe shall the house of Israel be buryenge of them, that they maye clense the lode: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them, & it shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal geve men also to be ded buriers, euē goinge thow the lode, and appoynt them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be clensed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vpon monethes lōge. Now those that go thow the londe, wher they see a mans bone, they shal set vp a token by it, till the ded buriers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamonga: Thus shall they make the londe clene.

And thou sonne of man thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and every hyde, yee and to all the wilde bestes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather your route aboute vpon my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euē a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eatte flesh, and drynke bloude. Ye shal eatte y^e flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lamber, of the goates, and of the open that be all slayne at Dasan. Eate y^e fat you: re bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be dronken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Syl you at my table, with horses & stronge bestment: with captaynes and all me of warre, saith the LORDE God.

I wil bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the heithen maye see my indgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde: which I haue layed vpon them: that y^e house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am y^e LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the heithen shal knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte: it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyde my face from them, and deliuered them in to the bondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swerde. According to their wickednesse I did in satechfull dealinges, so haue I treated them, and hyde my face from them. Therefore thus saith y^e LORDE God: Now wil I bringe agayne the captiues of Jacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confusion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them a praye. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the heithen: but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, wil I hyde my face nemoer from them, but wil poure out my spere vpon the house of Israel, saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

In the xxxv. yeare of oure captiuyte: in the begynnyng of the yeare, the xxv. daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij. yeare, after that y^e cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euē in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpon a marvelous hie mountayne, wher vpon there was a buyldinge (as it was bene of a cite) toward the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brass, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine heart, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therfore art thou brought hither. And what so euer thou seest, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde rounde aboute the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vpon the staires, & measured the postes of the dore: the postes were a meterodde thicke. The dore was a meterodde longe, & the postes were six cubites longe. The chambers were six cubites longe, & the postes of the dore within the house were a meterodde. He measured also the dore of the ynnemmer dore, which contained a meterodde. The measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eight cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xii cubites. The edge before the chambers was one cubite brode vpon both the sydes, & the chambers six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured y dore from the rygge of one chambre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courtedore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entrie of the ynnemmer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto y dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore court, where as were chambers & paved workes, made in y fore court rounde aboute: xxv chambers vpon one paved worke. Now the paved worke was a loge besyde the doies, and that was the lower paved worke. After this, he measured y bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnemmer court of the out syde, which had an hundred cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the uttermost court toward the north, measured he the length and bredth: his thre chambers on either syde, with his pilers & four entries which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xii cubites: his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore toward the east: here where viij steppes to go vp vpon, & their porche before them. Now y dore of the ynnemmer court stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was toward the north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore toward the south: whose pilers and porches he measured, the first measure, & with their postes he had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, & the bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon: he stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnemmer court stode toward the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to y ynnemmer court, thorow the dore of the south syde, which he measured, & it had the measure as he sayde. In like maner, his chambers, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, & xii cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto y uttermost court: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnemmer court vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, according to y measure as he sayde. His chambers, pilers and porches had euen the first measure, as the first had: & with his postes he had wyndowes rounde aboute. The bredth was l cubites, y bredth xxv cubites: his porches reached vnto the uttermost court: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the fore sayde measure. His chambers, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode toward the uttermost court, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose inwarde part was at the dore pilers, and there the burnt offerings were washed.

In the dore porche, there stode on either syde two tables for the slaughtinge: to slaye the burnt offerings, syme offerings and trespass offerings ther vpon. And on the outsyde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Four stables stode on either syde of the dore, that is viij tables, where vpon they slaughtered. Four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt offerings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: where vpon were layed y vessels and ornaments, which were vsed to, the burnt & slaine offerings, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes four synge brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hang fleth vpon, & vpon the tables was layed the offering fleth. On the outsyde of the ynnemmer dore were the synge chambers in the inwarde court besyde y north dore, & agaynst the south. There stode one also for the east dore north warde.

And he sayde vnto me: This chambre in the south syde belongeth to the prestes, & the speche habitacon: and this toward the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the altar: which be the sonnes of Sadock, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Levi. So he measured the fore court, which had in length an C cubites, and as much in bredth by the four corners. Now the altar stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entrie of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were syne cubites longe on either syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on either syde, was thre cubites. The length of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xi cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xli. Chapter.

After this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vii cubites thicke, according to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of y dore was x cubites, & the walles of the dore on either syde syne cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl cubites, and the bredth xx. Then went he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore itself was syne cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vii cubites. He measured the length and bredth therof, which were euery one xx cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was six cubites. The chambers y stode rounde aboute y house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpon another, wherof there were xxxiiij. And there stode postes beneath by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare the vp: but in y wall of y house they were not fastened. The syde chambers were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thre row them rounde aboute y house. Thus was it wyder above, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest & myddle chambers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambers was a meterodde (that is syne cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned syne cubites, & so small of the chambers in y house.

The chambers, was the wyde rounde aboute y house. The dore was toward the north, & the south: and the thicknesse of the dore was vi cubites rounde aboute. The dore was separated toward the west, was lxx cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rounde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C cubites longe also. The wydenesse before the house and of it y was separated toward the east, was an C cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chambers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C cubites. The ynnemmer temple, the porch of the fore court, y syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes themselves were syled ouer with bordes: & thus was it aboute the dore, vnto the ynnemmer house, and without also: For the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer w greute bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tree stode euery betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, y face of a man lookinge asyde toward the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made rounde aboute in all the house: For the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp above the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypostes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in y vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two doores, and euery doore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the doores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greatchicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpon both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The XLII. Chapter.

A Then caried he me out in to the fore courtte towarde the north, & brought me into the chambre, that stode ouer agaynst the backe buildinge northwarde, which had the length of an cubites, whose doore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned 2. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnemmer courtte, & agaynst the paved workethat was in the fore courtte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another. And before this chambre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their doores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambers were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of y buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courtte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vwarde.

B The wall without that stode by y chambers towarde the vttemost courtte vpon the fore syde of the chambers, was 2. cubites longe: for the length of y vttemost chambers in the fore courtte was 2. cubites also: but the length thereof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambers had vnder them an inraunce of the east syde, whereby a man might go into them out of the fore courtte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courtte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buildinge. Before the same buildinge vpon this syde there were chambers also which, had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inraunce, fashion and doores were all of the same maner. Yee even like as the other chamber doores were, so were these also of the south syde. And before the waye wardeth the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a doore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stode before the backe buildinge: those be holy habitacions, wherein the priestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offringes: and they must they laye the most holy offringes, synneoffringes & trespassoffringes, for it is an holy place. When the priest cometh therein, they shal not go out into the fore courtte: but (seyng they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garments, when they haue nythinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnemmer house, he brought me forth thow the east poite, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with y meter odde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meter oddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute an so much. The other two sydes also conteyned the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meter oddes. So he measured all y foure sydes wher they wente a wall rounde aboute v. C. meter oddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholy.

The XLIII. Chapter.

S He brought me to y doore, that was neth towarde the east. Beholde, thre came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight toke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar. Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east doore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me into y ynnemmer courtte: & beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: O thou sonne of man, this room is my seate, and the place of my footsteppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: neither their kinges, thorow their vngodly domes, thorow their hie places, & thorow and bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholds in maner harde vpon my thresholds, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixt me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put awaye their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. Therefore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the householde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selves an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their wykes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and description thereof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, y they maye kepe & fulfill all the fashions and customes thereof.

C This is the description of the house: Above vpon the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe y holiest of all. Beholde, that is the description and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the altar (after the true cubite, which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heych of the altar: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, & the bredth but one cubite.

The altar was foure cubites hie, & from the altar vwarde stode foure houses, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the altar was xiiij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome thereof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the east. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the altar, in the daye wher it is made, to offre burnt offringes, and to sprentle bloude ther vpon. To the priestes, to y Levites that be of the seide of Sabach, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: & take the bloude of him & sprentle his foure homes withal, & the foure corners of the altar coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: he re with shalt thou cleanse it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullocke also of the synoffringe, & burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

The nexte daye, take a goot buck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the altar withall: like as it was reconciled with y bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: Offre them before the LORDE, and let the priest cast salt ther vpon, and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burnt offringe. Euen dayes shalt thou bringe, euery daye a goot bucke. A yonge bullocke & a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cleanse the altar, & offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the priestes shal offre their burnt offringes and healt offringes vpon y altar: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORDE God.

The XLIII. Chapter.

After this, he brought me agayne to y outward doore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This doore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny man to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal comethorow it, that he maye eate bread before the LORDE. At the poiche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. Then brought he me to the doore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I looked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligence heed to all that I wil saye vnto the, concerninge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: ponde well with thine herte the comynge in of the house and the goinge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate householde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominacions, seyng that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary strangers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes & fleshs, wher thorow my Sanctuary is defiled, wher ye offre my bread, fat, & bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary:

but set keepers of my Sanctuary, enen after your owne mynde. Therefore thus saith the LORD God: Of all the straungers that dwell amonge the childre of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: Nor the Lewites that be gone backe from me, and haue disceined the people of Israel with errorres, goinge after their Idols: therefore shal they beate their owne wickednes. Shalder they be set and ordened to minstre, vnder the doores of the house of my Sanctuary: and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burnt offrynges and sacrifices for y people: to stode before them, and to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stumbe thorow wickednesse.

For the which cause I haue plucked out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORD) so that now they must beate their owne iniquyte, and not to come nyeme, to serue me with their priestheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holiest of all: that they may beate their owne shame and abominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I use them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce y is done therein? But the prestes y Leuities the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepe the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORD God.

They shal go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpon myne ordinaunces. Now when they go in at the doores of the ynnemmer courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no woll me come vpon them: whyle they do seruyce vnder the doores of y ynnemmer courte, and within. They shal haue sayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge bieches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherein they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitation of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they on halowe y people with their clothes.

They shal not shaueth their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rounde their heades only. All the prestes that go in to the ynnmost courte, shal drynke no wyne. They shal mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir husbonde: but a mayde of the seide of the house of Israel, or a wydow, that hath had a priest before.

They shal shewe my people the difference betweene the holy and unholy, betweene the cleane and vncleane. If any discorde arise, they shal discern it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. They shal come: no deed persone, to defyle themselves: cepte it be father or mother, sonne or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yet no husbonde: in soch they may be defyled.

And when he is clenfed, there shal benedyned vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bunge a synoffrynge saith the LORD God. They shal haue an heretage, yee I say: wil be their heretage: els shall ye geue the possession in Israel, for I am their possessor. The meatoffrynge, synoffrynge & trespass offrynge shal they eate, and every dedicatione in Israel, shal be theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all frewill offrynges shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the prest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prosper the resydue. But no deed canon shal the prest eate, ner soch as is deuoured of wilde bestes, foules or catell.

The XLV. Chapter.

When ye denyde the lode by the land, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORD, to be holy from other landes: namely, xxvj meter oddes longe, and xvj meter brede. This shal be holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this partte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary vnto xxvj meter oddes in all the foure corners; and I carye wyde rounde aboute to the suburbs. And from this meanste, namely of xxvj meter oddes longe, and xvj meter brede, thou shalt measure, wherein the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy ground shal be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORD, and go in before the LORD to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuities the serue in that house, there shal be genen xx habitacions, of the xxvj meter & xx meter brede: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessio of xxvj meter oddes brede, & xxvj meter longe, besyde the parte of y Sanctuary: that shal be for the xlvij tribes of Israel. Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuarys parte, & by the cite, there shal be genen vnto the prynce, what so ener lyeth out agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shal be as longe as one parte, fro y west vnto y east.

This shal be his owne lode in Israel, that my princes be no more chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shal be geuen to the house of Israel according to their trybes. Thus saith the LORD God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leane of, handle now according to the thinge, that is equall and lausfull: and thrust out my people no more, sayeth y LORD God. Ye shal haue attue weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

The Epha & the Bat shal be a like. One Bat shal cōteyne y cēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after y Homer. One Sytle maketh xx. Seers. So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xxv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the heane offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaned: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one labe from two hundred shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burnt offrynge and healthoffrynge, to recorde them, sayeth the LORD God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heane offrynge with a frewil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces partte to offre burnt offrynges, meatoffrynges and drynt offrynges vnto the LORD, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, burnt offrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recorde the house of Israel. Thus sayeth y LORD God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemyshe, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of y synoffrynge, and spientle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure comers of the alter, with the dore postes of the ynnemmer courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seventh daye of y moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng disceined) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon y xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. Seven dayes shal the feast contynue, wherein there shal no sower ner leuened bried be eate.

Vpon the same daye shal y prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seven dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemyshe, for a burnt offrynge vnto the LORD: & an he gaoze daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shal geue euer an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, & an hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon y xv. daye of the seventh moneth, he shal kepe the seven dayes holy one after another, eue as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burnt offrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The XLVI. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORD God: y dore of the ynnemmer courte toward the east, shal be shut the vij. workes dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shal be opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, & stonde still without by the dore cheke. So y prestes shal offre vpon his burnt & healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipec at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but y dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipec before the LORD, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burnt offrynge, that the prynce shal bunge vnto the LORD vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemyshe, & a ram without blemyshe, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with y ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, & an hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shal be a yōge bullocke without blemyshe, sixe lambes & a ram also without blemyshe. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: butto y lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cometh, he shal go vnder the dore porche, and euen there be parte forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORD in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipec, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at y north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shal go in and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shal be the meatoffrynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Ephraim to a ram: and to the lambs, as many as he wil, but ever an Ekin of oyle to an Ephraim. Now when the prince bringeth a burnt offering or an healt offering with a fire wile unto the LORD, the east doore shall be opened unto him, yf he maye do with his burnt & healt offerings, as he doth vpon the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the doore shall be shut after him agayne. He shall daylie bringe vnto the LORD a lambe of a yeare olde without blemish for a burnt offering: this shall he do every morninge. And for a meat offering he shall geue the sixte parte of an Ephraim, & the thirde parte of an Ekin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) every morninge. And this shall be a daylie meat offering vnto the LORD, for an everlasting ordinance: & thus shall the lambe, the meat offering and oyle be geuen every morninge, for a daylie burnt offering.

Moreover, thus sayeth the LORD God: If the prince geue a gifte vnto any of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, yf he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruantes some of his heretage, it shall be his to the fre yeare, and then to retorne agayne vnto yf prince: for his heretage shall be his sonnes only. The prince also shall take none of the peoples inheritance, ner put he from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shall he geue his possession, that my people be not scattered abroad, but that every man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the entrance at the syde of the doore to yf habitation of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to yf priestes and stode toward the north, & beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the priestes shall dighe the trespase and syn offerings, & bake yf meat offerings: that they nede not beare the in to the outwarde court, and so to vnhallowe the people. So he brought me in to the uttermost court, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in every corner of yf fore court, there was yet a litle court. And in all the foure corners of the court, there was made a litle court of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courttes were of one like measure, & there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were hartes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the Echin, where the ministers of the house shall dighe the syn offerings of the people.

The XLVII. Chapter.

After this he brought me agayne by the doore of the house: & beholde, there gusheth out waters from vnder yf postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode toward the east) that ranne downe vpon the right syde of the house, which runneth to the aulter southwarde. Then carried he me out to the north doore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the uttermost doore, yf turneth eastwarde. Beholde, there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now when the man yf had the meterodde in his hande wente out vnto the east doore, he measured a M. cubites, & then he brought me thorow yf water, vnto the aulter: so he measured yet a thousande, & brought me thorow yf water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it some ryuer, yf I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedfull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: Hast thou seen this, o thou sonne of man: and with that he brought me to the ryuer bank agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon either syde of the ryuer bank. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out toward the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, cometh into the see: and from the see it runneth out, & meeteth the waters whole. And all that live and moue, where vnto this ryuer cometh, shall recover. And where this water cometh, there shall be many fish. For all that cometh to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this riner shall the fyshers stonde from En gad di vnto En Eglaim, & there spredde out their nettes: for there shall be great heapes of fish, like as in the mayne see. As for the claye and pyttes, they shall not be whole, for why, it shall be occupide for sale.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of fruitfull trees, whose leaues shall not fall off, neither shall their fruite perish: but ever beryp at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. This fruite is good to eate, and his leafe profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORD God: Let this be the border, wherein ye shall dwelle thelon vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with their ne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which I swore vnto you fathers, that it shoulde fall to your inheritance.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zabadah: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabatani: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazer Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauran. Thus the borders fro the see forth, shall be Hazer Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shall ye measure from Hauran and Damascus, from Galead and the lande of Israel by Jordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar south to the waters of strife vnto Eades, the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greatesee from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shall ye parte amonge you, accordinge to the trybes of Israel, and dwelle there be an heretage for you, and for the strangers that dwel amonge you, and begette children.

For ye shall take them amonge the children of Israel, like as though they were of your owne household and countre, and they shall haue heretage with you amonge the children of Israel.

Let in what trybe the stranger dwelleth, in the same trybe shall ye geue him his heretage, saith the LORD God.

The XLVIII. Chapter.

These are yf names of the trybes that lye vpon the north syde, by the waye of Herlon, tyll thou comest vnto Hemath and Hazer Euan, the borders of Damascus toward the north besyde Hemath: Dan shall haue his porcion from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shall Aser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Aser fro the east parte vnto the west, shall Naphtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Naphtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shall Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shall Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shall Ruben haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shall Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shall set a syde one porcion of xxx. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west), wherein the Sanctuary shall stode.

As for the porcion, that ye shall separate out for the LORD, it shall be xxx. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shall belonge vnto these: namely to the priestes, toward the north xxx. M. & toward the west x. M. brode, toward the east x. M. brode also, & toward the south xxx. M. longe, wherein the Sanctuary of the LORD shall stonde. And this same place shall be the priestes, yf are of the children of Sabod, & haue kepte my holy ordinance: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shall be the most holy, harde vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the priestes, shall the Leuites haue xxx. M. longe and x. M. brode. This shall be on every syde xxx. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porcion they shall sell nothinge, ner make any permutation therof, lest the chiefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORD.

The other v. M. after the bredth, yf lyeth by the xxx. M. shall be comon: it shall belonge to the cite and to the suburbs for habitacions, and yf cite shall stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: toward the north parte, v. C. & iij. M.: toward the south parte, v. C. & iij. M.: toward the east parte, v. C. and iij. M.: toward the west parte, v. C. and iij. M.

The suburbs harde vpon the cite, shall haue toward the north, L. and ij. C. toward the south, L. and two C.: toward the east, L. and two C.: toward the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. toward the east and x. M. toward the west, next vnto the holy porcion, it and the increase therof shall serue for their meate, that laboure in the cite. They shall laboure for the welth of the cite, shall mainteine this also, out of what tribe so ever they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxx. M. longe and xxx. M. brode on the foure partes, yf shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, & for the possession of yf cite. The residue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the prince, before the place of yf xxx. M. vnto the east ende, & before the place of yf xxx. M. westwarde, vnto the borders

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Jamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Jamin frō the east syde vnto 3 west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. The prophet Daniel.

The first. Chapter.

In the thirde yere of 3 raigne of Joachim kynge off Juda, came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Jerusalem, 2 beseged it: and the LORDE deliuered Joachim the kynge off Juda in to his hande, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the lande of Sammar, to the house of his god: and there brynghe them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes 3 chiefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynghe him certayne of the children off Israel, that were come of the kynge's sede and of prynces, yōge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but sayn 2d wel fauored, instructe in all wisdom, comynge and vnderstōdinge: which were able to stonde in the kynge's palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kynge appoynted a certayn porcion of his owne meate and of the wyne, which he diuynke himselff, so to nourish the thre yere: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Juda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chiefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Baltasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misael: and Azarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt w himselff, that he wolde not be defyled thow the kynge's meate, ner 3 wyne which he diuynke. And this he desyred off the chiefe chamberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before 3 chiefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, 2d so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto 3 kynge.

Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chiefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias, and sayde: O pryncer but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynge's meate. And as thou seest, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, 2d prynced the 10 dayes. And after 3 ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge 2d facter, then all the yōge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynge's meate.

The ij. Chap. Ho. lxxvij.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes comynge and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstōdinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynghe in these yōge spryngaldes vnto him: the chiefe chamberlayne broughed them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Azarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstōdinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, then all the soyth sayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yere of kynge Cyrus.

The II. Chapter

In the secōde yere off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, where thow his spiete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge comaunded to call together all 3 soyth sayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, 2d my spiete was so troubled therewith, 3d I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syriane speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for ever. Shewe chy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answer, 2d sayde: It is gone from me: If ye wil not make me vnderstōde the dreame with the interpretacion theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be pryed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meynynge therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greete honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answered, sayenge: I perceaue off a treuth, that ye do but prologe 3 tyme: for so moch as yese, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye sayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to pyn off the tyme. Therfore tell me the dreame, 2d so shal I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it mea-neth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which yf kynge speaketh of: For there is nether kynge prynce ner LORDE, that ever axed soch thinges at a soothsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyeth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

C For yf which cause the kynge was wroth with greare indignaciō, and comaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and yf proclamacion were forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his companions. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynge's steward, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth already to kyll soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beynge then the kynge's debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kynge, yf he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretation: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Asarias his companions: yf they shulde beseeke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel prayesd yf God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be prayesd for ever and ever, for wysdome and strength are his owne: he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynge, he setteth vp kynge: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth yf the thyng that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him. I thanke the, and praysethe (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynge's matter vnto me.

D Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kynge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kynge, and I shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. Then Arioch broughte Daniel into the kynge in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue found be a man amonge the prisoners off Iuda: yf shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. He answered the kynge, and sayde vnto Daniel whose name was Balchazar: Art thou he, that cast shewe me yf dreame, which I haue sent the interpretation theroff? Daniel answered the kynge to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kynge maketh inquisition: it is nether the wyse, the forer, the charmer ner the deuell conturor, that can certifie the kynge off it: Only God in heauē is open secrete, and he it is, that sheweth the kynge Nabuchodonosor, what is fōrtō come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast seene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kynge, thou didest cast in thy mynde, that shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is fōrtō come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more than eny other kynge: but only that I might shew the kynge the interpretation, & that he might knowe the thoughtes off his conuerter. Thou kynge sawest, and beholdest: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his vylgrymme. The ymage heade was off fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body & loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte off earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that with out eny hondes x here was hewen off a stone which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake the to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from yf semer floores, that they can no more be fōrtō. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kynge, what it meaneth.

O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynge: For the God off heauē hath geuen the a kyngdome, ryche, strength and maiesty: & hath deliuered the all thinges, that are amonge children off men: the besties off the felde, & the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that golde heade. After yf there shal aryse another kyngdome, which shal be lesse then thyn. The thyrd kyngdome shal be lyke copper, and he shall haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth

The prophet Daniel.

shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron bryssheth and breaketh all thinges: Xee as yron beatech euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte off earth and parte off yron: that is a brydded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so much as thou hast seene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes off the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifiech: that it shal be a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxt with claye: they shal myngle them selues wth yf seide off symple people, & yet not coneyne one with another, like as yron wil not be fōrtōdered with a potsherde.

In the dayes off these kynge, shal the God off heauen set vp an enclastinge kyngdome which shal not perishe, and his kyngdome shal not be geuen ouer to another people: Xee the same shal breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shal endure fōrtō ever.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out off the mount a stone, which brake the yron, the copper & earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath yf greate God shewed the kynge, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretation off it is sure.

Then the kynge Nabuchodonosor, fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and comaunded that they shulde offre meat off rynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kynge answerde Daniel, and sayde: Xee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynge, and an opener off secretes: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kynge made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees off Babilon, and lorde off all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kynge for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the court by the kynge.

The III. Chapter.

Nabuchodonosor the kynge caused a golde ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke.

The iii. Chap. Fo. lxxviii.

Fe. This he made to be set vp in the valley off Duran in the londe off Babilon & sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites & shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: yf they might come to the dedicacon of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them together, and came vnto the dedicatynge off ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out wth all his might: O ye people, kynredes and tinges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shal be blowne, wth yf harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshippe the golden ymage, yf Nabuchodonosor the kynge hath set vp. Who so then failleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge oven. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde off Melody: the all the people, kynredes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused yf Jewes, and sayde vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor: O kynge, God saue thy lyfe for ever. Thou beynge kynge hast geuen a commaundement, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shal fall downe and bowe them selues towards the golden ymage: who so the fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote barnynge oven. Now are there certayne Jewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces off the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynge) regarde not thy commaundement, yee they wil not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, yf Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynge. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what o Sydrac Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddesses: nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp: wel, be redy herafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trumpets, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshiue the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshiue it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hore burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, y maye deliuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto y in this matter, for why: oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hore burnynge ouen (O kynge) and can right wel deliuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (O kynge) that we will not serue thy goddesses, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that y countenance of his face chaunged vps Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charged and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wont to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooſte, for to bynde Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hore burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ad cast in to the hore burnynge ouen: for the kynges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was excedyng hot. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in y hore burnynge ouen, being fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his councel and sayde: byd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kynge: Yee O kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowe in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wote Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hore burnynge ouen: he spake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruantes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counsell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in them: dies: In so moch that the very haye off the heade was not burnt, and their clothes chaunged: Yee there was no smell off speeke vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: Blessed be the God of Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, defended his seruantes, that putther trust in him: y haue altered the kynges commaundment, and ioperde their bodies ther vnto: ther then they wolde serue or worshiue any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaunde, that all people, kynnedes & tinges, which speake in blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their bones shalbe prysed: Because, there is no God y maye saue, as this. So the kynge prynced Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the kin of Babylon.

Nabuchodonosor the kynge, vnto all people, kynnedes and tinges that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amonge y. I thought it good to shewe the toles & marvelous workes, y y hye God hath wrought vpon me. O how greate are his toles, & how mightie are his wonders: his kyngdome is an everlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for ever and ever.

The iiii. Chapter.

Nabuchodonosor beyng at rest in myne house, ad flourishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made him afraied: ad the thoughtes that I had in my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wisdom at Babil shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretation of the dreame. So there came the soothsayers, charmers, Caldees and curiers of deuils: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coulde not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (o therwyse called Balthasar, accordinge to the name of my God) which hath the spire of the holy goddess in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou pryncce of saythayers: for so moch I knowe, that thou hast the spire of the holy goddess, and no secrete is byd from thee: tel me therfore, what y visio of my dreame I haue sene maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and behelde, then stode a tre vpon the ground, which was very hye, greate and mightie: y heyth reacht vnto the heane, and the budch extendt all the endes of the earth: his leaues were saye, he had very moch frute, so y every mā had ynough to eate therin.

The bestes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed off it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: & behelde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightie sayenge: Hew downe the tre, bicate off his braunches, shake off his leaues, and scatter his frute abroad: that all the bestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the ground of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the ground with other wyld beasts.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a bestes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This crande of the watcher, is a commaundment grounded and sought out in the counce off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderſtonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ad geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, y I kynge Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for y spire of the holy Goddess is in thee.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ad his thoughtes troubled him. So the kynge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretation theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my LORD, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretation to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate & mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his budch in to all the wolde: whose leaues were saye, ad the frute moch: vnder the which the bestes of the felde had their habitation, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd fy.

Euen thou (O kynge) art the tre, greate & stronge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, & reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kynge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the ground of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: he shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shalbe with the bestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (O kynge) is y interpretation, yee it is the very deuycce of him, y is hyest of all, & it toucheth my LORD the kynge.

Then shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the bestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ore. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon thee, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, & geueth them, to whom he lyst. Moreover, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be beleft still in the ground: it betokeneth, y thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto y, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power cometh from heauen. Wherefore (O kynge) be cōtēt with my counce, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with righteousnesse, ad thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kynge Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kynge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power & strength) haue made a kynges curte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fel a voyce from heane, sayenge: O kynge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from thee, thou shalt be cast out of mens compny: thy dwellinge shalbe with the bestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ore, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer thee: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vps Nabuchodonosor: for that he was cast out off mens compny, & ate grasse like an ore. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayes were as greate as Agles fethers, and his nales like bydes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor

E bonofor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderfoundinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thanks vnto the hy est. I magnified and prayfed him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth all waye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, are to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth a cordinge to his will, amonge y powers of heauen & amonge the inhabitants of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: what doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnderfoundinge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kyngdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshippe.

The dyd Nabuchodonosor, loane, magnific and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his wordes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The V. Chapter.

B Alchasar the kyng made a grea- te bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made grea- te cheare, and when he was dronken w wyne, he commaunded to brynge him y golde and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Jerusalem: that the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drinke therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was take out of the temple of the LORDS house at Jerusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubynes dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and prayfed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared syngers, as it had bene of a mans honde wytyng, right ouer agaynst the candellsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of y honde y wrote. Then chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherfore the kyng cryed mightily, that they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and conuincers of deuils. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can reder this wytyng, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, have a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men, but they coude nether rede the wytyng, nor shewe the kyng what it signified. Then the kyng sore a frayd, in so much, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were vexed. So by reason off this matter, y happened to the kyng & his lordes, that he went vp herself in to the bancket, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O my God saue thy life for euer: Let not y thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in my kyngdome, that hath the spire off the goddes within him, as it was sene in thy thers dayes. He hath vnderfoundinge of all dome like the goddes. Meet the kyng Nabuchodonosor: thy father made this man of the soothsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuil conuincers: because that such an abundance of spire, knowlege & wisdom, to open dreames, to open secretes, and to know harde dowres was founde in him: yea in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kyng. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the prisoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Jewry: I haue herde speak of the, that thou hast the spire of the goddes, experience and vnderfoundinge, and that there hath bene grea- te wisdom founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and connyng charmers, to rede this wytyng, and to shewe me the meanynge theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, y thou canst expounde darke thinges, and dedest harde dowres. Well than, yf thou canst reder this wytyng, and shewe me the meanynge theroff: thou shalt be clothed w' purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before the kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue y rych giftes to another: yea me thelesse, I wil rede the wytyng vnto the kyng, and shewe him the interpretacon therof. O kyng, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, y dignite of a kyng, & worshippe & hono: so y all people, kynges & lordes stode in awe & feare of him, by re-son off the byestate, that he had lent him. For why: he slawe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. A gayner: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wyfulnesse: he was deposed from his kyngly crone, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a bestes herte, and his dwellinge was with the wyld Asses: he was sayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyest had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knowest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self above the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, mighte dwynke wyne therout: And hast prayfed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, in whose honde consisteth thy bieth ad all thy waye, thou hast not laued him.

Therefore is the palme off this honde set hither from him, to token vp this wytyng. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mene, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacon off the thyng is this: Mene, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weighed in the balaunce, and art founde to lichte: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacon concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beinge lxxi. yere off age.

The VI. Chapter.

I pleased Darius to set ouer his kyngdome an C and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kyngdome aboute. Above these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vnderstaied.

But Daniel exceeded all these prynces & lordes, for the spire off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherfore the prynces and lordes sought, to pylke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner faulte vpon him. For why: he was so saythful, y there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarel agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the prynces and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: Kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as y prynces, dukes, senacours and iudges, are determined to put out a commandement off y kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyret any peticion, ether of any god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast into the Lyons denne. Wherfore, o kyng, confirme thou this statute, and make a wytyng: that the thyng which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wytyng, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wytyng was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall towards Jerusalem stode open. There he knelled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and prayfed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makinge his peticion, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kyng, and spake before him concernynge his commandement, sayenge: O kyng, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyret his peticion off any god or man, but only off thyself, o kyng: he shalbe cast in to the denne off the Lyons? The kyng answered, ad sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of y Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kyng: Daniel one off the prisoners of Iuda (O kyng) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his peticion thre tymes a daye. When the kyng herde these wordes, he was sore grieved, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to deliuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Somerwete downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

The prophet Daniel.

These men perceaynge the kynges myn-de, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kyng) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kyng maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kyng bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him into the Lyons denne.

The kyng also spake vnto Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kyng sealed with his owne kyng, and with y signet of his prynces:
that the kynges commaundement concernyng Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kyng wente in to his palace,
and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take enyslepe. But betymes in the mornyng at the breake off the daye, the kyng arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he camenye vnto y denne, he cried w^t a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee y tige spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruaunt off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to deliuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kyng: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer.

My God hath sent his angel, which hath shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they mighe not hurte me. For why: myne vngilty nesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kyng) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kyng excedinge glad, ad commaunded to take Daniel out off the den-
ne. So Daniel was brought out off the denne, and no manner of hurte was founde vps him.
For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the king commaunded to brynge them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mas-try of them, and brake all their bones a son-der, or euer they came at the grounde.

After this, wrote kyng Darius vnto all people, kynges and tunces, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you:
My commaundement is, in all my dominio and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

For he is the lyuynge God, which aby-deth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is everlastinge. It is he that de-lynereth, and sauech: he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth:

The vii. Chap.

he hath preserved Daniel from the power of the Lyons. This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cyrus of Persia.

The VII. Chapter.

In the first yere off Balthasar ge off Babilon, saue Daniel a vision, and a vision was in his heart vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe of the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnto
ther.

The first was as a Lyon, and yet had Agles wynges. I sawe, that his wynges were plucked from him, and he taken away from the earth: that he stode vpon his feet as a man, and that there was geuen to a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde beest was like a Lion, and stode vpon the one syde. Amonge his teeth in his mouth he had iij greates legges, and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eat much flesch.

Then I looked, and beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. The beest had foure heades, ad there was geuen to him. After this I sawe in a vision nyght, and beholde: the fourth beest was more horrible, and maruelous stronge. It had greates yon teeth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder feet. I was farre vnto the other beestes that were before it: for it had ten hornes, wherof I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge
the other like home, before whom there were the first hornes plucked away. Beholde, this home had eyes like a man, and a mouth speakinge presumptuous thinges. I looked till the seates were prepared, ad till the aged sat him downe. This clothinge was white as snowe, and the hayres of his head like the pure wolle.

This trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnynge fyre. There came forth a fire stream, and wente out from him.
A thousand tymes a thousande served him.
A thousand tymes ten thousande stode before him.
The iudgment was set, and the bookes opened.
Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which he spake.

The prophet Daniel.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, and geuen ouer to be burnt in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by nyght, and beholde: there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power and dignite regall, that all people, trybes and tunces shulde serue him. This power is an everlastinge power, which shal never be put downe: and his kyngdome endurith incorrupte. My herte was vexed, and I Daniel had a troubled sperte within me, ad
the visions off my heade made me a frayde:
till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstande the interpretaci of these thinges.

These foure greates beestes, are foure kinges which shal aryse out of the earth. The first shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more and more for a longe season. After this I requy-red diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnli-ke the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teeth were of yron, and his nailes off brasie:
which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder his feet. I desired also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hor-nes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face they fell downe there: which home had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and looked with a grimmer vi-sage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same home made bat-tall agaynst the sayntes, yee ad gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuen to the chiefe sayntes: and till the tyme, that y sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shal be the fourth kyngdome vps earth:
it shal be more then all other kyngdomes, it shal deuoure, treade downe ad destroye all other londes.

The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shal aryse out of that kyngdome, after whose shall stonde vpon another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue the kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shal destroye the sayntes of the most hyest

and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and halff a tyme.

But the iudgment shal be kepte, so that his power shal be taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, whose kyngdome is everlastinge, yee all powers shal serue and obeye him. Thus farre extende y wordes.

Where thelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance was chaunged, but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The VIII. Chapter.

In the thirde yere off the raigne off kinge Balthasar, there appeared a vision vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chiefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in y vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Blai.

Then I looked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme pushed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes mighe stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listeth, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ram-me, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcely vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very fea-ce vpon him: yee he gaue him such a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Neither had the ramme so much strengthe
as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his feet: and no man was able to deliuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed excedinge greates, and when he was at the strongest, his greates horne was broken also. Then grew there other foure such like in the steade, towards the son-

The prophet Daniel.

Dan. 7. 2 re wyndes off the heauen. See out of one of 11. 2 the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet Mac. 1. 2 another horn, which waxed maruelous greate: toward the south, toward the east, and toward the sayre pleasant londe. It grewe vnto the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

See it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary cast ten downe. And a certayne season was ge uen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (be cause of wickednesse) that it might cast dow ne the verite to the grounde, and so to prof pere in all thinges, that it went aboute.

Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes spea kyng, which saynte sayde vnto one that as ked this question:

How longe shall this vision off the day lie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominat ion endure: that the Sanctuary and the po wer shall so be troden vnder fete? And he an swered him: Vnto the euenynges & the morn ynges, euen two thousande and thre hundred dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clen sed agayne.

C Now when I Daniel had sene this visi on, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it:
beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Olai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstande the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his comyng, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marche well: for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was spea kyng vnto me, I waxed saynte, so that I sunk downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sa yinge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last tyme: for in the tyme me appoynted it shall be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kyng off the Medes and Perses: but the goatte is the kyng off Greke londe: the greate horn that stode betwixt his eyes, that is the principall kyng. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this peo ple shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

D After these kyngdomes (whyle yngod nesse is a growyng) there shall arise a kyn ge off an vnshamefast face, which shall wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shall be mightie and stronge, but not his owne strength. He shall destroye the measure, and all that he goeth aboute shall prosper: he shall slaye the stronge holy people. And thorow his craft, the falsede shall prosper in his honde, his hon shall be proude, and many one shall be to death in his welthyngesse. He shall vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shall be destroyed without honde. And the vision that is shewed vnto the, is as seen the euenyng and the mornynge. Therefore wrytethon vpon this sight, for it wyll be long or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel veryfayme, that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busi nesse, and marueled at the vision, neuer lesse no man knewe of it.

The IX. Chapter.

In the first yere off Darius the son ne off Ahasuerus, which was of the seide off the Medes, & was made ky ng ouer the realme off the Caldees: See uen in the first yere off his raigne, I Dani el desyred to knowe the yearly nombere out of the booke, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Jerusalem should waite lxx. yeres: and I turned me vnto God the LORDE, for to praye and make my intercessio, with fastyng, sack cloth and aspes.
I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowlege, sayenge:

O LORDE, thou greate & fearfull God, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaun dementes: We haue synned, we haue offen ded, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe:
yee we haue departed from all thy precep tes and indgements.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes
the prophetes, that spake in thy name to ou re kynges and prynces to oure forefathers, and to all the people off the londe. O LOR DE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertaineth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man off Iuda, and to them that dwell at Jerusa lem.

See vnto all Israel, whether they be sane or nye: thorow out all londes, wherein thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

The prophet Daniel.

See O LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kynges & prynces, to oure forefathers: euen to vs all,
that haue offended the, belongeth open sha me. But vnto the O LORDE oure God, per tainerth mercy and foregyuenesse. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not ob eyed the voyce off the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: yee all Is rael haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not hearkened vnto thy voyce.

Wherfore the curse and ooth, that is writ ten in the lawe of Moses the seruante off God (agaynst whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wor des, which he spake agaynst vs, & agaynst ou re wyddes that iudged vs to bryng vpon vs such a greate plage, as neuer was vnder hea uen, like as it is now come to passe in Jerusa lem. See all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite.
Therefore hath the LORDE made haist, to bryn ge this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, O LORDE oure God, thou that with a mightie honde hast brought thy peo ple out of Egypte, to get thy self a name, which remaineth this daye: we haue synned (O LORDE) & done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes: yet let thy wrathfull displea sure be turned awaye (I beseeke the) from thy cite Jerusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Jerusalem and thy peo ple abhoyed, of all them that are aboute vs.
Now therefore (O oure God) heare the pray er of thy seruante, and his intercession: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, endyne thine eare, and hearken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated: yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: for we do not cast oure prayers before the
in oure owne rightuousnesse, no: but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare: O for geue LORDE: O LORDE confidre, tary not ouerlonge: but for thine owne sake do it. O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakinge at my prayers,

knowlege myne owne synnes and syn nes of my people, makinge so myne interces sion before the LORDE my God, for the ho ly hills sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde, the man Ga briel (whom I had sene afore in the vision) ca me flyenge to me, and touched me aboute offeringe tyme in the euenyng. He in four med me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde
he) I am now come, to make the vnderston de it: for as soone as thou beganest to ma ke thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therfore am I come to shewe the. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloued.

Wherfore, ponde the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstande the vision.
Lxx. weekes are determed ouer thy people, & ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse ma ye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bryng in euerlastyng rightuousnesse, to fulfill the visions and the prophetes, and to anoynthe the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marche it well: that from the tyme it shall be concluded, to go and repaie Jeru salem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoyned) prynces: there shall be seven weekes. Then shall the steres & walles be buylded agayne lxx.
weekes, but with harde troublous tyme. Af ter these lxx. weekes, shall Christ be slayne, & they shall haue no pleasure in him. Then shall there come a people with the prynce, and de stroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his en de shall come as the water floude. But the de solacion shall continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with ma ny, for the space of a weke: and when the we ke is half gone, he shall put downe the slay ne and meat offeringe. And in the temple the re shall be an abhominable desolacion, till it be destroyed all. And it is concluded, & this waistinge shall continue vnto the ende.

The X. Chapter.

In the thirde yere off kyng Cyrus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Da niel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a lon ge tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and per ceaued what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre weekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for fleshy and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynthe my self, till the whole thre weekes were out.

Qoo iij

The prophet Daniel.

Upon the xxiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greates floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and looked: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnyng, whose loynes were girded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chusolite stone, his face (to lōke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and feet were like sayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like y^e voyce of a multitude.

I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greates fearfulness fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greates vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Xee I lost my coloure cleare, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Xee herde I the voyce of his wordes: 2 as soone as I herde it, sayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees 2 vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto y^e, 2 stōde right vp, for vnto y^e am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp trembling. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte vnderstonde, and didest chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou begandest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses w^o stonde me xxi. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chiefe prynces, came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, 2 am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to y^e grounde, and helde my tūge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lord, my ioynes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strength within me: How maye my lordes seruant then talke with my lord? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I cannot take my breath. Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moche like a man, 2 comforted me, sayenge: O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recovered, 2 sayde: Spea ke on my lord, for thou hast refreshed me. The sayde he: knowest thou wherefore I am come vnto y^e? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Babel shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the tūge, y^e is fast noted in the scripture of truth. And as for all yonder matters, there is som that helpeth me in them, but Michael y^ere prynce.

The XI. Chapter.

IN the first yere of Darins of Babilonia, I stode by him, to comforte him, 2 to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the tūge. Beholde, there shal stōde vpon yet the kinges in Persia, but y^e fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chiefe power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the kinge of Babel. Then shal there arise y^e mightie kinge, that shal rule with greates minion, and do what him list. And as soon as his kingdome cometh vp, it shal be destroyed, 2 deuoyed towarde y^e four winds of the heauen. They y^e come after him, shal not haue soch power 2 dominion as he: his kingdome shal be scatred, yee euen amonge other the chiefe. And the kinge of y^e south shal be mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself kinge, 2 shal rule his dominion w^o greates power.

But after certayne yeres they shal be ymde together, 2 the kinges daughter of the south shal come to the kinge of the north, for to make frendshipe, but she shal not opene the power of that arme, nether shal be able to endure thorow his might: but he 2 soch as brought her (yee 2 he y^e began to be comforted her for his tyme) shal be deuoyed vp. Out of y^e braunches of hir roote, there shal one stōde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kinges of the north, 2 handle him accordinge to his strenght. As for their Idols 2 prynces, with their costly Jewels of golde 2 siluer, he shal cary them awaye captiues into Egypte, and he shal preuaile agaynst the kinge of the north certayne yeres. And when he is come into y^e kinges realme of y^e south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherefore his formes shal be displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greates hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterflood, then shal he retorne, and go forth with vengeance and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

The kinge of y^e south shal be angry

and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: Xee he shal bringe a greates multitude of people together, and a greates heape shal be geue in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye w^o greates pryde, for so moche as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shal not preuaile. For y^e kinge of y^e north shal gather (of the new) a greates heape of people then afore, 2 come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeres) with a mightie hoost 2 exceedinge greates good.

At the same tyme there shal many stōde vpon agaynst the kinge of the south, so that y^e wretched childien of thy people also shal exalt themselves (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kinge of the north shal come to laye sege, and to take the stronge fenced cities: And the power of the of y^e south shal not be able to abyde him, 2 the best men of the people shal not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he cometh, he shal handle him as he list, 2 no man shal be so hardy as to stōde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasant countre, which thorow him shal be destroyed. He shal see his face w^o all his power to opeyne his kingdome, 2 to be like it. Xee that shal he do, 2 geue him vnto the daughter amonge women, to destroye him. But he shal sayle, nether shal he opeyne his purpose. After this, shal he set his face vnto the Ies, 2 take many of the. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confusion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stōmble, 2 fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him 2 dyd him violence, shal stōde in his place, 2 haue a pleasant kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, 2 that nether in wrath ner in batell. In his steade there shal arise a vyle person not holden worthy of a kinges dignite: this shal come in craftily, 2 opeyne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (2 destroye them,) yee 2 agaynst the prynce of the couenant.

So after y^e he hath taken truce with him, he shal hadle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, 2 ouercome him with a small flocke: 2 so with craftynesse to get him to y^e fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwys, then ether his fathers or graundfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, y^e they had robbed 2 spoyled, yee 2 all their substaunce: ymagynge thoughtes agaynst the stronge holdes, 2 that for a tyme. His power and herte shal be stirred vp w^o a greates armie agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kin ge of the south shal be moned then vnto battell, with a greates 2 mightie hoost also. Neuertheles, he shal not be able to stōde, for they shal conspyre agaynst him. Xee they y^e eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, 2 many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shal be mynded to do mysche, 2 talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme appoynted. The shal he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greates good, 2 set his herte agaynst the holy couenant, he shal be busy agaynst it, 2 then retorne home. At the tyme appoynted he shal come agayne, 2 go towarde the south: So shal it happen otherwys then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cychim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten 2 turne agayne: y^e he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenant of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Xee he shal turne him, 2 drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenant.

He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strenght, to put downe the daylie offeringe, 2 to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenant, shal he flatter with fayre wordes. But y^e people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhade and prospere. These also that haue vnderstandinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: for a longe season, they shal be persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captiuitie 2 with the takinge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shal be set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynely.

Xee some of those which haue vnderston dynges shal be persecuted also: y^e they maye be tryed, purified 2 clesed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme appoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God. Xee he shal speake marvelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherein he shal prospere, so longe till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuysed already. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shal be vpon women: Xee he shal not care for any God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshippe the mightie Idols: 2 the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasant Jewels.

This shal he do, setinge helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge gods.

The prophet Daniel.

bes. Soch as wil receaue him; and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshippe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shal come agaynst him with charrettes, horsmen z with a greate navy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entreal so in to the sayre pleasaunt londe. Many cities z countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab z the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, z the londe of Egypte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer z golde, z ouer all the precious Jewels of Egypte, Lybia and Ethiopia. Neuerthelesse the tydinges out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye z curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall be pyrch betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The XII. Chapter.

In the tyme wil come also, that the grea- te prynce Michael, which stonde- th on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble, soch as ne- uer was, sens there begāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deliuered, yee all those that be foude wri- ten in the booke. Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to e- uerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame z reprofe. The wyse (soch as haue caught o- ther) shal glister, as the shynninge of heauen: and those that haue instructed the multitude vnto godlynesse, shal be as the starres, woul- de without ende.

And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, z seale the booke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and the shal know lege increase. So I Daniel looked, and behol- de, there stode other two: one vpon this sho- re of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of the sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lymynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: how longe shall it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? Then herde I the man with the lymynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his right and left honde vnto heauen, z swaie by him which syneth for ever: that it shal tary for a tyme, two tymes z half a tyme: z when the power of the holy people is clensed, the biode, the shal all these thinges be fulfilled.

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. Then sayde I: O my lord, what shal hap- pen after that? He answered: Go thy way Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp sealed, till the last tyme: z many shal be pu- rified, clensed z tried. But the vngodly shal lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of the as they be) shal haue no vnderstandinge. As for soch as haue vnderstandinge, they shal regarde it. And from y tyme south the daylie offerynge shal be put downe z the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shall a thousand two hundred z x. dayes. And is him, that waiteth, z cometh to the hea- sande iij. C. z xxxv. dayes. So thou thy way now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byen thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

- Chap. XIII. He crieth and exorteth the people to conuerste, promysynge sweetly and longynge to receaue them.

The prophet Oseas.

This is the worde of the LOR- DE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Beeri, in the dayes of Osiat, Ioathan, Achaz z Ezechias kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Jeroboam the sonne of Joas kynge of Israel.

The first Chapter.

Ist, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childre by her: for the wode hath committed greate whor- dome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer y daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: call his name Israel, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Israel vpon the house of Jehu, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Israel.

She conceaued yet agayne, and bare a daughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Louhama (that is, not opreyninge mercy) for I wil haue no pyre vpon the hou- se of Israel, but forget them, and put them cleue out of remembraunce. Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, z wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not deliuer them thorow any bow, swerde, batel, horsen or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Louhama, she conceaued agayne, z bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Ami (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therefore will not I be yours. And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place whe- re it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be y childre of the lymynge God. Then shal the childre of Iuda and the childre of Israel be gathered together agayne, z cho- se them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greate shalbe the daye of Israel.

The II. Chapter.

All youre bretheren, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for you- re mother, ye shal chide with her, and repro- ue her: for she is not my wife, nether am I hir husbōde: vnlesse she put awaye hir whor- dome out of my sight, and hir aduoutry from hir brestes. If no, I shal strype her naked, z set her, euen as she came in to y woude: Yee I shall laye hir waiste, and make her like a wil- dernesse, and slaye her forthyrste. I shal ha- ue no pite also vpon hir children, for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to confucion. For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bried, my woll z my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not synde hir focestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: she shal seke them, but not synde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first husbōde, for at y tyme was I better at ease, then now. But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet ga- ne her come, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

Wherefore now will I go take my come z wyne agayne in their season, and set agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. And now will I discouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir lo- uers, and no man shal deliuer her out of my bondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrrh, hir holy dayes, hir newmoones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I wil destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saith: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a woude, and the wyld beestes shal eat it vp: I wil punyssh her also for the dayes of Baal, wherein she censed him, deckynge him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saith the LORDE.

Wherefore beholde, I wil call her agayne, bringe her in to a wilbernes, and speake frend- ly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyar- des agayne, yee and the valley of Achor al- so, to shewe hir hope z comfote. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, z like as in the daye when she came out of the londe of Egypte. Then (saith the LORDE) she shal saye vnto me: O my housbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names any more. Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wyld beasts, with the foules of the ayre, & with euerythinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

As for bowe, sixerde and batel, I will destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them to slepe safely. Thus wil I marye the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I marye the, in rightuousnesse, in equitye, in louynge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also wil I marye the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewemy self frendly and gracious vnto y^e heauens, saith the LORDE: & the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the come, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Iesrael. I wil sowe them vpon earth, for a seede to myne owne self, & wil haue mercy vpon her, y^e was without mercy. And to the which were not my people, I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The III. Chapter.

Then sayde y^e LORDE to me: Go yet y^e waye & wowe an aduouterous woman, who thy neighbour loneth, as y^e LORDE doth the child of Iesrael: how be it they haue respecteto straunge goddes, and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluerlinges, and for an homer and an half of barley, & sayde vnto her: Thou shalt lyde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and lette thou medle with none other man, & then wil I kepe my self for the.

Thus the child of Iesrael shal sit a greete whyle without kinge and prynces, without offeringe and auker, without priest and reuelacion. But afterwarde shal the children of Iesrael conuerter, and seke the LORDE their God, and Dauid their kinge: and in y^e latter dayes they shal worshipethe LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The IIII. Chapter.

Are y^e worde of the LORDE, o ye childien of Iesrael: For the LORDE must punyssh the, y^e dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulness, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but swearinge, lyge, manslaughter, the fe and aduoury haue gotten the ouerhande, & one bloudguynesse foloweth another. Therefore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therein, shal moue as beasts in the felde, the foules in y^e ayre, the fishes in the see shal dye. Yet is there one, that wil chaste nor reprove another: the priestes which shulde reforme other, are become like the people.

Therefore stemblest thou in y^e daye, the prophet with the in the night. I wil ge thy mother to sylence, & why? my people perish, because they haue no knowlege. So gethen that thou hast refused vnderstandinge, therefore wil I refuse y^e also: so that thou shalt be nomore be my priest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy child. The more they haue increased in multitude, the more they haue agaynst me, therefore wil I charge them in honour in to shame. They eate vp the fruit of my people, & corage them in their wickednesse. Thus the prest is become like the people. Wherefore I wil punyssh them for their wicked wayes, & rewarde them according to their owne ymaginacions: They shal not haue ynough: They haue used wisdom, therefore shal they not prosper: they haue forsaken the LORDE, & not regarded him.

Whoredome, wyne and dronkennesse, the herte awaye. My people are counsell their stockes, their staffe must tell them, for an whorish mynde hath disceaued them, for they committe fornicacion agaynst the LORDE. They make sacrifice vpon the high places, & burnetheir incense vpon the hills, amonge the oaks, groves & busshes, for they are good shadowes. Therefore y^e daughters are become harlottes, and y^e yongest have broke their wedlocke: I wil not punyssh y^e daughters for beinge defiled, & y^e yongest that became whores: seinge the fathers themselves haue medled with harlots, & offered with vnturistes: but the people shal wil not vnderstande, must be punyssh.

Though thou Iesrael art disposed to playe y^e harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Juda: thou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, nor haue gone vnto Bethaue, where haue sworne the LORDE thy God. For he is gone backe, like a water curre. Therefore shal make his seide, as y^e laboureth astraye. And where as Ephraim is my partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. The dronkenesse hath put the backe, & brought them to whoredome. Their rulers loue dronkenesse, bryngesaye they, to their owne shame. A wynde shal take holde of their seide, & they shal be confounded in their offerings.

The V. Chapter.

Are this, o ye priestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Iesrael: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punysshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spied net vnto the mount of Chadoz. They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therewith: therefore wil I punyssh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Iesrael is not hyd from me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Iesrael is defiled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so y^e they can not knowe the LORDE.

But the pryde of Iesrael wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Iesrael and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Juda with them also. They shal come with their shepe & bullockes to seke y^e LORDE, but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a month therefore shal deuoure them with their portions.

Blow with the shawmes at Gaba, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethaue vpon the yonside of Ben Jamin. In the tyme of y^e plage shal Ephraim be layed waste, therefore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Iesrael. Yet are the prynces of Juda become like them, that remouethe the lōdenardes, therefore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe y^e doctrynes of men. Therefore wil I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Juda as a caterpillar.

When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Juda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Asur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet coude not he helpe you, nor ease you of youre payme. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelp to the house of Juda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescuethem. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faine, and seke me.

The VI. Chapter.

At their aduersite they shal seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: he hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vpon agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal ease vs vpon, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & we shal ouercome oure selues to knowe the LORDE.

heshal go forth as the springe of the daye, and come vnto vs as the eueninge and morninge rayne vpon the earth.

Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Juda, how shal I intreate the. Seinge you are lone is like a morninge cloude, & like a dew y^e goeth early awaye. Therefore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them beslayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offeringe: yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloodshedders. The multitude of the priestes is like an heape of theues, murderers & bloudthirstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Iesrael, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Iesrael is defiled: but Juda shal haue an earnest for himself, when I retorne the captiuite of my people. The VII. Chapter.

When I vndertake to make Iesrael whole, then the vnglacionsnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robbing. They considre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute wth their owne ynnuencis, but I set them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the prynces, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduoury, as it were an ouen y^e the baker heateth, whē he hath leste kneadinge, till the doue be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode dronken thowow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceaueth. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouen, their slepe is all y^e night like the slepe of a baker, in the morninge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are also gether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are full: yet is there none of the y^e calleth vpon me. Therefore must Ephraim be mirte amonge y^e heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y^e no man turneth: strangers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he waxeth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: y^e pride of Iesrael is cast downe before their face, yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, nor seke him, for all this.

Sen gethen that thou hast refused vnderstandinge, therfore wil I refuse y also: so that thou shalt nomore be my prest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childre. The more they synned in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therfore wil I charge their honoure in to shame. They eate vp the synne of my people, & coraige them in their wickednesse. Thus the prest is become like the people. Wherfore I will punyssh them for their wicked wayes, & rewarde them according to their owne ymaginations: They shal eate, & not haue ynough: They haue vsed whoredome, therfore shal they not prosper: & why? they haue forsaken the LORDE, & not regarded him.

Whoredome, wyne and dronkennesse shall the herte awaye. My people are comed at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. In an whorish mynde hath disceayned them, so they comitte fornicacion agaynst thei God. They make sacrifice vpon the hie mountaynes, & burnetheir incense vpon the hilles, amonge the okes, groues & busshes, for there are good shadowes. Therfore yf daughters are become harlottes, and yonge people haue broke their wedlocke I wil not punyssh yf daughters for beinge defyled, & yf brides that became whores: seinge the fathers themselves haue medled with harlottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstande, must be punysshed.

Though thou Iesrael art disposed to playe y harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Juda: thou syndest not haue turned to Galgala, nor haue gone vnto Bethaue, nor haue sworn: the LORDE lyeth. For Iud is gone backe, like a wācon come. The LORDE therfore shal make hir fede, as y labe yf eth astraye. And where as Ephraim is ben me partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. The dronkennesse hath put the backe, & brought them to whoredome. Their rulers loue whoredes, brynge (saye they,) to their owne shame. A wynde shall take holde of their segges, & they shal be cōfounded in their offensa.

The V. Chapter.

1 Hear this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Iesrael: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punysshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spied net vnto the mount of Thabor. They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therewith: therfore wil I punyssh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Iesrael is not hyd from me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Iesrael is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so y they can not knowe the LORDE.

But the pryde of Iesrael wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Iesrael and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Juda with them also. They shal come with their shepe & bullockes to seke y LORDE, but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shal deuoure them with their porcions.

2 Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethaue vpon the yonside of Ben Iamin. In the tyme of y plage shal Ephraim be layed waite, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Iesrael. Yet are the prynces of Juda become like them, that remoue the lōde-marches, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe y doctrynes of men. Therfore wil I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Juda as a caterpillar.

When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Juda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Asur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet conde not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they wake faine, and seke me.

The VI. Chapter.

1 If their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: he hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vpon agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal raise vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & we shal cure oure selues to knowe the LORDE.

He shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mornynge rayne vpon the earth.

2 O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Juda, how shal I intreate the: seynge youre lone is like a mornynge cloude, & like a dew y goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of thenes, murtherers & bloudthirstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Iesrael, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Iesrael is defyled: but Juda shall haue an earnest for himself, when I returne the captiuite of my people.

The VII. Chapter.
1 When I undertake to make Iesrael whole, then the vngacionsnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lies. At home, they be thenes: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cōfide not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute w their owne ynuencas, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the prynces, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lies. All these burne in aduoury, as it were an ouen y the baker heateth, whē he hath leste kneadinge, till the doore be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynneto be woode dronken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with such as disceaueth. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouē, their slepe is all y night like the slepe of a baker, in the mornynge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are alto gether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are fallē: yee is there none of the y calleth vpon me. Therfore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y no man turneth: straungers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he wareth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: yf pryde of Iesrael is cast dorone before their face, yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

Ephraim is like a dove, that is begyled, and hath no herte. Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shal spiede my net ouer them, & drawe them downe as yf foules of the ayre: and accordynge as they haue bene warned, so will I punyssh them. Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsake me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. I am he that haue rebened them, and yet they dyssemble wth me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye yonginge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate & drinke, and me will they not obeye. I haue caught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschese agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, & are become as a broken bowe. Their prynces shalbe slayne wth the swearde, for the malice of their tungen, soch blasphemies haue they lerned in the londe of Egipte.

The viii. Chapter.

Set the home to thy mouth, and blowe; get the swifely (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my conenant, and transgressed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath refused the thinge that is good, therefore shall the enemye folowe vpon him. They haue ordered kinges, but not thorow me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruction.

Thy calse (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye, for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be cleansed? For the calse came from Israel, the workeman made it, therefore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal yf calse of Samaria be turned. They haue sowne wynde, therefore shal they reape a storme.

Their sede shal beare no come, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though yf rebe, yet shal straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shal perish, the Gentiles shal entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wyld ass in the deserte.

Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therefore are they scatred amoge the heithen, ther wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges & prynces. Ephraim hath made many alters to do wickednes, therefore shal the alters turne to his synne. Though I shewe the my lane neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Where as they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therein: but will remember their wickednes, and punyssh their synnes. Israel turneth agayne into Egipte, they haue forgotten him that made them, they buyde churches, and Iuda maketh many strange cities: therefore wil I sende a synne into their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The ix. Chapter.

Son thou triumphe (O Israel) te no boastinge more then the heithen, for thou hast comitted abominacy agaynst yf God: strange rewardes hast thou lored, more the all come floores. Therefore shal they nomore enioye the cornetrees and wyne presses, and their swete wyne shal fayle the. They wil not dwell in the LORDES londe, but Ephraim turneth agayne into Egipte, & eateth vncleane thinges amonge the Assirians. They poure out no wyne for a drinke offeringe vnto the LORDE, neither geue they him their slayne offeringes: but they be vnto them as mourners meates, wherein all they that eateth them, are defiled. For the bled that they haue soch lust vnto, shal not come in the house of the LORDE. What wil ye do then in the solempne dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shal get them awaye for the destruction, Egipte shal receaue them, & Toph shal burye them.

The nettles shal ouergrowe their pleasant goodes, and burres shal be in their tabernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompence are at honde. As for the prophet, he holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the spere, for a mad man: so greate is your wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet yf is become a snare to do hurte in every strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. They be gone to farre, & haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Gaba. Therefore their wickednes shal be remembered, and their synnes punysshed.

I sende Israel like grapes in the wilderness, & sweete their fathers as the first figge of yf toppe of yf sygette. But they are gone to Baal Peor, & runne a waie fro me to yf full Idoll, & are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim flieth like a byde, shal their glory also? In so moch, yf they shal neither begette, nor ceauener beare children.

And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yet wo shal come to them, when I departe from them. Ephraim (as me chynke) is planted in wilderness, like as Tyus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the man slayer.

LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shal thou geue them? geue them an vnfruitfull name and drye brestes. All their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngaciousnes of their own impietions, I wil drye them out of my land. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dryed vp, so yf they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best frute of their body. My God shal cast them awaye, for they haue not bene obedient vnto him, therefore shal they go astraye amonge the heithen.

The x. Chapter.

Irael was a goodly vyne, but he hath brought forth vnprofitable frute: yee the more frute he had, the more aukeis he made: yf more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is denyded, therefore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shal brake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their alters. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comen together, and sweare vayne othe: they be confederate together, therefore groweth their punysshment, as the wydes in the forwes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calse of Berhan: therefore shal the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welchynesse reioyced with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Iareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punysshment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginations, Samaria wth his kinge shal vanish awaye, as the scomme vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their alters. Then shal they saye to yf mountaynes: couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gaba: yf afore tyme, where they remayned: shuldest thou the bated then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, wher I punyssh them for their greete wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a cow that is used to go to plowe, therefore I lored him, and fell vpon his saye neck. I do ne Ephraim, Iuda plowed, & Jacob plowed the husbode man: that they might sowe vnto rightuousnes, and reape the frutes of wel-doynge: yf they might plowe vpon their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them rightuousnes.

But now they haue plowed them wickednesse, therefore shal they reape synne, and eate the frute of lyes. Seinge thou puttest thy confidence in thine owne wayes, and leaneest to yf multitude of thy worthies: there shal growe a sedicion amonge thy people. All yf strange cities shal be layed waiste, euen as Salmana was destroyed with his familiers, thorough him that was auenged of Baal, in the daye of batel, where yf mother perished with hir childer. Euen so shal it go with you (O Bethel) because of your malicious wickednes. Like as the mornyng goeth awaye, so shal the kinge of Israel passe.

The xi. Chapter.

When Israel was yonge, I lored him: and called my sonne out of the londe of Egipte. But yf more they were called, the more they wente backe: offeringe vnto Idols, and censynge ymages. I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendshipe, & with bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. I gaue them their fodder myself, yf they shulde not go agayne into Egipte: And now is Assur their kinge: for they wolde not turne vnto me. Therefore shal yf swearde begynne in their cities, the stoare that they haue lickened vnto, shal be destroyed and eaten vp: and that because of their owne ymaginations. My people hath no lust to turne vnto me, their prophetes laye the yocke vpon the, but they ease them not of their burthen.

What greate thinges haue I geuen the, O Ephraim: how faithfully haue I defended the, O Israel: haue I dealt with the as with Adama: or haue I intreated the like Seboim? No, my hert is otherwise mynbed. See my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to destroye Ephraim in my wrothful displeasure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddest of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they maye folowe him: See as a lyon roareth he, that they maye be a frayd, like the children of the see: that they maye be scarred awaye from Egipte, as men scarre byrdes: & frayd awaye (as dones use to be) from the Assirians londe: and that because I wolde haue them tary at home, saith the LORDE. But Ephraim goeth aboute me with lies, and the house of Israel dyssembleth. Only Juda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The XII. Chapter.

Ephraim kepeth the ayre, and foloweth after the east wynde: he is cuer increasynge lyes & destruction. They be confederate with the Assirians, their oyle is caried into Egipte. The LORDE hath a counce to holde with Juda, and wil punyssh Jacob: After their owne waies and a cordinge to their owne inuencions, shal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the heile, when he was yet in his mothers wombe: and in his strength he wrestled with God. He stroue with the Angel, and gat the victory: so that he prayde and desired him. He funde him at Bethel, & there he talked wth vs.

See the LORDE God of hostes, euen y^e LORDE him self remembred him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope still in thy God. But the marchaunt hath a false weight in his honde, he hath a pleasure to occupie extortion. Ephraim chyneth thus: Tush, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes shal not one faute be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, eue as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and set the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feast dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and shewed dyuerse visions, and declared my self by the ministracion of y^e prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue slayne oxen: and as many heapes of stones as they had in their lōde forowes, so many altars haue they made. Jacob sied into the londe of Siria, and Israel serued for a wife, and for a wife he kepeth shepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preferred the. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to displeasure thorow his abhominacions: therefore shal his bloude be poured vpon him self, and the LORDE his God shal rewarde him his blasphemies.

The xiiij. Chap.

The XIII. Chapter.

The abhominacion of Ephraim is as me also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therfore must he dye. And now they synne more and more: of their seruice, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the heithen, and yet all is nothinge but the worke of the craftsman. Tice with stōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calves, offereth to men. Therefore they shal be as the mourynge cloude, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that y^e wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of y^e chymney.

I am the LORDE thy God, which broughte the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, & that thou shuldest haue no Saviour but ony me. I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they wared pride, and forgat me. Therefore will I be to them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in y^e waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she berer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yet the wyld beasts shal teare them.

O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self. In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy thinges now, that shulde helpe the in other thynges? See and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces: well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bennde together, & his synne lieth hyd. Therefore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that traueleth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considereth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the greue, and deliuered him from death.

O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy styng. Yet can I sende comfort, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drye vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

As for Samaria, they shal be made waiffe, & why: they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perishe with the swearde, their children shal be slayne, and their women with childe shal be rypte vp.

The prophet Oseas.

The XIII. Chapter.

Turne thou now o Israel vnto y^e LORDE thy God, for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgene vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, & then wil we offere y^e bullockes of oure lypes vnto the. Assur shal be no more oure helper, neither will we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: for it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loathen them: so yf my wrath shulde cleue be turned awaye from them. See I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as y^e lylie, & his roote shulde breake out as Libanus. His braunches shulde spiede out abrode, & be as fayre as the olyue tre, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & floush as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with y^e Idols eny more. I wil graciously heare him, & lide him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene fyre, vpon me shalst thou fyndethy fruite. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstande this: & he yf is righte instructe, wil regarde it. For y^e wayes of the LORDE are righteuous, soch as he godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stumbe therein.

What Joel conteyneth.

Chap. I. He sheweth Israel, that all their glory and outwarde ceremonies, shal be put downe and cease.

Chap. II. The plagis are greate, wherfore he wolde haue them to mourne: yet yf they will amende, they maye hope for grace.

Chap. III. How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punisshed.

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Joel the sonne of Phatuel: heare o ye elders: pōdie this wel, all ye that dwell in the lō

The i. Chap. Jo. lxxxvij.

de: yf euer there happened soch a thinge in youre dayes, or in y^e dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. Loke what the caterpillar hath leste, y^e hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper leste, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath leste, that hath the blastyng consumed. Make vp ye dion: fardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. See a nightie & an innumerable people shal come up in to my londe: these haue teth like the teth of lyons, & chafte bones like the lyones. ses. They shal make my vyngarde waiffe, they shal pylle of the barckes of my sygetrees, stry per them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

Make y^e mone as a virgin doth, y^e gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde gone. For the meate & drynt offeringe shal be taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes y^e LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shal be waiffed, the londe shal be in a miserable case: for the corne shal be destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vterly desolate. The husbandmen & the wyne garbeneres shal loke pitteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the harvest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grape gatherers shal make greate mone, when the vyngarde & sygetrees be so vterly waiffed. See all the pomgarnettes, palm trees, aple trees, & the other trees of the felde shal wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men shal come to confucion.

Gyde you, & make y^e mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the altare: go youre waye in, & slepe in sack cloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meate & drynt offeringe shal be taken awaye from the house of y^e God. Proclame a fastynge, call the cōgregacion, gather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together into the house of the LORDE y^e God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why: the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and cometh as a destroyer from the Almighty. Shal not y^e meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the mynth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perishe in the ground, the garners shal lye waiffe, the floores shal be broken downe, for the corne shal be destroyed. O what a sighinge make the catell: the bullockes are very euell litynge, because they haue no pastur:

The prophet Joel.

and the shepe are fameshied awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie: for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath burnt up all the trees of the felde. Yet the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dried vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The II. Chapter.

Blowe out y trompet in Sion, z crie vpo my holy hill, y all soch as dwel in the londe, maye treble at it: for y daie of the LORDE cometh, z is harde at hande: a darcke daie, a gloomyng daie, a cloudy daie, yee z a stormy daie, like as the morninge spredeth out vpo the hilles: Namely, a great z mightie people: soch as haue not bene sens y begynnynge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consuminge fyre, z behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waiste wilderness, z there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to lye vpon like bayded hoises, z runne like hoise men. They slaype vpon y hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

B The folke shal be a frayd of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. They shal rane like gianetes, z leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Every man in his goinge shal kepe his araie, z not go out of his path. They re shal not one dryne another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, z not be hurte: They shal come into the cite, z runne vpon the walles: They shal clymme vpon the houses, z slaype in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shal be moued: the Sonne z Moone shal be darckened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greete, strengte z mightie to fulfill his commaundement. This is y greete and maruelous fearfull daie of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

C Now therefore saith the LORDE: Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fasting, wepyng and mourninge: rente youre hertes, z not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, for he is gracious z mercifull, longe sufferynge z of greete compassion: z redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne, z forgene: z after his chastenynge, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat z drynke offerynge vnto the LORDE youre God: Blowe out with the trompet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, z gather the people together: warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bunge the children z suckynge together. Let y brydegrome go forth of his chamber, z the bryde out of her closet. Let the priestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch z fawlt, wepyng z sayenge: be fauourable (O LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people: lest chine heretage be brought to soch confusion, lest the heathen be lordes therof. Wherefore shulde they saye amonge the heathen: where is now their God?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, z spare his people: yee y LORDE shal answere, z saye vnto his people: Beholde, I wil sende you come, wyne z oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them: z I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the heathen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you: z shute him out into a drye and waiste londe, his face towards the east see, and his hynder partes towards the westmost see. The stynte of him shal go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath deale so proudly. Feare not (O londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greete thinges. Denye ye a frayd nether (O ye beastes of the felde): for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees z myrtles shal geue their increase.

Be glad then (O ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of righteounes: z he it is y shal sende you dewne showers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that y garners shal be full of come, and the presses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeaeres that y gresshopper, locuste, blasfinge z caterpillar (my greete hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne: so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied: and prayse the name of the LORDE youre God, that so maruelously hath deale with you.

And my people shal neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shal nomore be brought to confusion.

After this, will I poure out my spete vpon all fleshy: z yo sonnes z yo daughters shal prophesy: yo olde me shal dreame

The prophet Joel.

and z your yongemen shal se visions: Yee in those dayes I will poure out my spete vpon seruantes and maydens: I will shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokens in the earth beneath: bloude and fyre, and the vapoure of smoke. The Sonne shal be turned into darcknesse, z y Moone in to bloude: before y greete z notable daie of the LORDE come. And the tyme shal come: y who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shal be saued. For vpon the mount Sion z at Jerusalem, there shal be a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promised: yee z amonge the ether remnant, whom the LORDE shal call.

The III. Chapter.

O take hede: In those dayes z at y same tyme, when I turne agayne the captiuite of Iuda z Jerusalem: I shal gather all people together, z bryng the in to the valley of Josaphat: and there wil I rason with the, because of my people z here rage of Israel: whiche they haue scatred aboute in the nacions, z parted my lode: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge men haue they set in the brodel house, z sold the damels for wyne, y they might haue to drinke. Thou Tirus and Sidon and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye despyse me? well: yf ye will nedes despyse me, I shal recopence you, euen vpon youre heade, z y right shortly: for ye haue taken awaye my syluer z golde, my fayre z goodly Jewels, z brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Jerusalem haue y sold vnto the Grekes, that ye might bryng the farre fro y borders of the owne countrees.

Beholde therefore: I will rayse them out of the place, where ye haue sold them, z will rewarde you euen vpon youre heade. Your sonnes z your daughters will I sell choicely the bondes of the child of Iuda, z so they shal geue them forth to sell, vnto the of Saba, a people of a farre countre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these thinges amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vpon the gianetes, let them drawe nye, let the come vpon all the lusty warryours of the. Make you swerdes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre sickles z sythes. Let y weak man saye: I am stronge. Mustre you, and come, all ye heithen rounde aboute: gather you together, the shal the LORDE laye all thy gianetes to the grounde. Let the people aryse, and get them to the valley of Josaphat: fathere wil I sit, and iudge all heithen rounde aboute.

The iij. Chap. Jo. lxxxviij.

Laye to youre sythes, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waken greate. In the valley appoynted, there shal be many, many people: for the daie of the LORDE is nye in y valley appoynted. The Sonne and Moone shal be darckened, z the starres shal withdrawe the light. The LORDE shal roare out of Sion, z crie out of Jerusalem, that the heauens z the earth shal quake withall. But the LORDE shal be a defence vnto his owne people, ad a refuge for the child of Israel. Thus shal ye knowe, y the LORDE youre God dwell vpo my holy mount of Sion. Then shal Jerusalem be holy, z there shal no strangers go thorew her eny more. Then shal the mountaynes droppe swete wyne, z the hylles shal flowe with mylke. All the ryuers of Iuda shal haue water ynough, z out of the LORDES house, there shal flowe a sprayng, to water y broke of Sittim: but Egypte shal be layed waiste, z Edon shal be desolate: because they haue deale so cruelly with the child of Iuda, and shed innocent bloude in their londe. Agayne, Iuda shal be inhabited for euermore, z Jerusalem from generacion to generaciō: for I wil not leaue their bloude vnauenged. And the LORDE shal dwell in Sion.

These are the sermons, that were shewed unto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes, at Thecua) upon Israel, in the tyme of Osiat kynge of Iuda, & in the tyme of Jeroboam sonne of Joas kynge of Israel, two yere before y^e earth quake. And he sayde: The LORDE shall reare out off Sion, & shewe his voyce fro Jerusalem: so that y^e pastures of the shepherdes shall be in a miserable case, & y^e toppe of Carmel dried vp.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the & foure wickednesses of Damascus, I will not spare her: because they haue troshed Galaad wth y^e slaes: But I wil sende a fyre in to y^e house of Hazael, the same shall consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, & rote out the inhabiter fro the felde of Auen, and him y^e holdeth the scepter, out of y^e pleasurable house: so y^e the people shall be dryuen out of sayre Siria sayeth the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE: for the & foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: because they make the prisoners yet more captyue, & haue dryuent h^{er} in to the lode of Edom. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to y^e walles of Gaza, which shall deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out the y^e dwell at Asdod & him y^e holdeth the scepter of Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnant of the philistines shall perish sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the and foure wickednesses off the cite off Tyre, I will not spare her: because they haue increased y^e captyue of the Edomites, and haue not remembred the brotherly couenaunt. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shall consume hir palaces. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the and foure wickednesses off Edom I wil not spare him, because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Thema, which shall deuoure the palaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the and foure wickednesses off the children off Ammon, I will not spare them: because they crypte vp the womē greates with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therefore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shall consume hir palaces: with a greates crye, in the daye of batell, in tem pest and in the daye off stomer: so that the kynge shall go in to captyue, he and his pecces together, sayeth the LORDE.

The ii. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the and foure wickednesses off Moab, I wil not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kynge of Edom to ashes. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shall consume y^e palaces of Cariath: so y^e Moab shall perish with a noyse, and the founte of a shawme. I wil rote out the iudge from amonge them, and slaye all his princes with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the and foure wickednesses off Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kept his commaundementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceined with the lyes, that thei fore fathers folowed. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shall consume the palaces of Jerusalem.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for the & foure wickednesses off Israel, I wil not spare him because he hath sold the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon peere mens heades in the dust of the earth, & croke the wayes off the mete. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my helyname: they lye beside any anker vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke wyne of the oppressed. Yet destroyed I the Amouee before them, that was as he asche Cedie trees, and as stronge as the oles: now withstandinge I destroyed his frute fro aue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egypte, and led you 40. yeres thorow the wyldernesse, that ye myght haue the Amouee londe in possession. I raysed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre y^egemen. Is it not so, o y^e children off Israel, sayeth the LORDE: But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke, yee ye commaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crashe you in sonder, like as a wayne crassheth, y^e is full of shewes: so that y^e swifte shall not escape, ne the stronge be able to do eny thyng: no, the giaunte shall not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off his life, & he that is as maly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to turne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The prophet Amos.

The iii. Chapter.

Heare, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you o y^e children off Israel name ly, vnto all y^e trybes, who I brought out of Egypte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generations off the earth: therefore will I visyte you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twain walke together except they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out of his denne, excepte he haue gotten semthige? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpo y^e earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vpo the grounde, afore he catche semthar? Crie they out Alarum with the trompe in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God nomaner of thinge, but he telleth his secretes before vnto his seruantes y^e prophetes. When a lyon roareth, who will not be afrayed? Seynge then that the LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophesy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egypte, and say: gather you together vpon the meadowes off Samana, so shall ye se greates murthure and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vpo robberie in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shall be troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shall be plucked from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdman taketh two legges of a pece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children off Israel (that dwell in Samaria, harynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shall be plucked awaye. Heare, and beare record in the house of Jacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hostes) that when I begynne to visyte the wickednesse off Israel, I will visyte y^e altars at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the altare shall be broken of, & fall to the ground.

As for the wynter house and summer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses off mery, yee and many other houses shall perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The ii. Chapter.

The iii. Chap. 250. lxxxix.

Heare this worde, o ye satryne, that be vpon the hill off Samaria: ye that do poore me wronge, and oppresse the nedye: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge byther, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his helynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shall be lift vp vpo speeres, and youre posterite caried awaye in sylpher pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappe one after another, and in Armon shall ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngodousnesse, and haue increased youre synne at Galgal. Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mornyng, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a tyat offeringe off leuen, ye promised frewill offeringes, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children off Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you yble teth in all youre cities, & scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

When there were but thre monethes vnto y^e harvest, I withheld the rayne from you: yee trayned vpo one cite, and not vpo another one pece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (ye thre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth y^e LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drought and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyuetrees ye had: y^e cattirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amonge you, as I dyd in Egypte: yeure yonge men haue I slayen wth swerde, and caused youre houses be taken captyue: I made the synckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrils. Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Some off you haue I ouerthrowen: as I ouerthrowe Sodome & Gomore: so that ye were as a biande plucked out off the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornyng and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpo the hye places off the earth: y^e LORDE God of hostes is his name.

The V. Chapter.

Hear this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The virgin Israel shall fall, & neuer rise vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon her owne grounde, and no man shall helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth y^e LORD God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shall be left scarce an C. therein: and where y^e dwelt an C. there shall scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sa- yeth the LORD vnto y^e house of Israel: Se- te after me, ad ye shall lyue, but se te not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awa- ye captyue, and Bethel shall come to naught. Se te the LORD, y^e ye maye lyue: lest the hou- se of Joseph be burnt with fyre and consumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

Re turne the lawe to womwood, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORD maketh the vij. starres and the Dry- ons, he turneth the night into daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth y^e waters of the see, and poureth them out v- pon the playne grounde: the LORD is his name.

Herseyeth destruccion vpon the migh- tie people, & bryngeth downe the stronge hol- de: but they owe him euell will, y^e reproueth them openly: and who so telleth the play- ne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch the as ye oppresse y^e poore, and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye have buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruels pleasaunt vnyar- des shall ye plante, but the wyne of the shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute syn- nes, I knowe them right well. Enemies are ye off the righteous, ye take rewardes, ye op- presse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must nere be sayne to holde his tuge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Se te after the thinge that is good, & not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORD God off hoostes shal be with you, according to youre owne desyre. Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: & (no doute) the LORD God off hoostes shal be mercifull vnto the remnant of Joseph.

No sayeth the LORD God, the God off hoos- tes there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye i every stret alas, alas. They shal call the house of man to lamentacio, and soch as can mourne, to mourninge. In all vnyardes there shal be benynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORD. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off y^e LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for char daye of the LORD, it shal be darke & not cleare: yee like as when a mārūneth is a lyon, and a Deer meteth with him, he he cometh into the house, and leueth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. Shall not the daye of the LORD be darke, and not cleare: shal it not be cloudy, and shyne in it?

I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, & where as ye censeme when ye cometogether I will not accept it. And though ye offer me biento offeringes and meat offeringes, ye haue I no pleasure therein: As for your shant offeringes, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se the equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, gaue ye me offeringes and sacrifices xl. yeares longe in the wyldernes: yet ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols. Yee ad the statute of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipec them. Therfore wil I cause ye be caried awaye beyonde Damasus, sayeth the LORD, whose name is the God off hostes.

The VI. Chapter.

Wo be to the proude welchym in Samaria: soch as chynke the so sure vpon y^e mount of Samaria: which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and the house of Israel, eue as they list. Come to Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greates cite, and so go downe to Math of the Philistines: be they better at se then these kyngdomes, or the border of the ir londe wyder then yours: Ye are raton for the euell daye, euen yee that sye in the stile of wysfulnesse: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre conches: yee that eate the best lambes off flocke, and the fattest calves off the house: yee that synge to the lute, and in playnge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: yee that drynke wyne out of goblettes, & anoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Josephs hurte. Therefore now shall ye be the first of them, that shal be led awaye captyue, and the lusty chere of the wysfull shal come to an ende.

The LORD God hath swome with himself (sayeth the LORD God off hoostes) I hate the pryde of Jacob, and I abhorre his palaces: and I wil geue ouer the cite, & all that is therein: so that though there were men in one house, they shal dye. So shal I synne folkes and the deed buriens shal take them, and cary awaye their bones, and saye vnto him, that is in the ynnemmer house: is there yet eny mo by y^e? And he shal answer: they are all gone, holde thy tunge (shall he saye) for they wolde not remembre the name of the LORD.

Beholde, the LORD is mynded to smyte the greates houses, so that they shal decaye: as the litle houses, that they shal cleue a sun- der. Who can runne with hoises, or plowe wth oxen vpon the harde rockes off stone? For why, ye haue turned true iudgment into byt- tennesse, and the frute of rightuousnesse in to wormwood: Yee euen ye, that reioyse in vayne thynges: yee that saye: haue not we optayned homes in oure owne strength? Well, take he- de, o ye house off Israel, sayeth the LORD God off hoostes: I will brynge a people vps vnto you, which shal trouble you, from the waye that goeth towarde Hemath, vnto the bro- ke in themet ower.

The VII. Chapter.

The LORD God shewed me soch a vision: beholde, there stode one that made gresshoppers, euen when the come was shutynge forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vn- deroke to eate vp all the grene thinges in y^e lode, I sayde: O LORD God, be mercifull, I beseeche the: who shulde els helpe vp Jacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORD was gracious therein, and the LORD sayde: well, it shal not be. Agayne, y^e LORD shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORD God called the fyre to puryshe withall, and it deuoured the greates depere: yee it consumed a parte all re- by. Then sayde I: O LORD God, holde thy reboude: for who shulde els helpe vp Jacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORD was mercifull therein, and the LORD God say- de: well, it shal not be.

Morouer, he shewed me this vision: behol- de, the LORD stode vpon a plastered wall, & a masons trowell in his hode. And the LORD sayde vnto me: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a masons trowell. Then sayde the LORD: beholde, I will laye the trowell amo- gth my people of Israel, and will nomore o- uersee them: but the hye hildapels off Isaac must be layed waist, and the churches off Israel made desolate: and as for the house of Jeroboam, I will stonde vp agaynst it with the swerde. Vpon this sent Amasias the pst to Bethel vnto Jeroboam the kinge of Israel, sayenge: Amos maketh the house off

Israel to rebell agaynst the, the londe ca not awaye with his wordes. For Amos sayeth: Jeroboam shall dye with the swerde, and Is- rael shal be led awaye captyue out of their owne londe. And Amasias sayde vnto A- mos: Get the hence (thou that cast se so well) and fle in to the londe of Iuda: get the the- rethy lyuynge, and prophecy there: and pro- phocy nomore at Bethel, for it is the kynges chapel, and the kynges court.

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, I am nether prophet, ner prophe- tes sonne: but a keeper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goyn- ge after the catell, the LORD toke me, & say- de vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vn- to my people of Israel. And therefore, heare thou now the worde off the LORD: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and spea- ke nothynge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORD: Thy wife shal be defyled in y^e cite, y^e sonnes and dought- ers shal be slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shal be measured out with the lyne: Thon thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shal be dryuen out off his owne countre.

The VIII. Chapter.

The LORD God shewed me methis vision: and beholde, there was a mass of de with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a mass- de with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORD vnto me: the ende cometh vpon my peo- ple of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORD God. Many deed bodyes shal lye in euery place, & be cast forth secretly. Heare this, O ye y^e op- presser the poore, and destroye the nedyn y^e londe, sayenge: When will the new moneth be gone, that we maye sell vytale, and y^e Sab- bath, that we maye haue scarcenesse of cor- ne: to make the busshel lesse, and the Sycke greater: We shall set vp false waighes, y^e we maye get the poore vnder vs with their money, and the nedyn also for shues: yee let vs sell the chaffe for come.

The LORD hath swome agaynst the pryde of Jacob: these woikes of theirs will I neuer forget. Shal not the londe tremble, and all they that dwell therein, mourne for this? Shal not their destruccion come vpon them like a water streame, & flowe over the, as the floude of Egypte? At the same tyme (sayeth the LORD God) I shall cause y^e son- ne to go downe at noone, and the londe to be Beholde, the tyme cometh (sayeth the LORDE God) yf I shal sende an hunger in to y earth: not the hunger of bried, ner the thyrst of water: but an hunger to heare the worde off the LORDE: for that they shal go from the one see to the other, yee from y north vnto y east, runnyng aboute to see the worde of y LORDE, and shal not fynde it. In that tyme, shal the sayre virgins and the yonge men perishe for thyrst, yee euen they that sweare in the offence off Samaria, and saye: as truly as thy God lyueth at Dan, and as truly as y God lyueth at Bersaba. The IX. Chapter.

Though they were buried in the hell, my honde shal fetch them from thence: though they clymme vp to heauen, yet shal I cast them downe: though they byde them selues vpon the coppe of Carmel, yet shal I seeke them out, and brynge them from thence: Though they crepe downe from my sight in to the depe of the sie, I shal comaunde the serpente, cuen there to bite them. Off they go awaye before their enemies i to captyuite, then shall I commaunde the swerde, there to slaye them.

The ix. Chap.

Beholde, the eyes of the LORDE are vpon the realme that symeth, to rote it downe off the earth: Vnder theles, I will not destroye the house of Jacob, sayeth the LORDE.

For lo, this I promyse: though I sift y house of Israel amonge all nacions (as they vse to sifte in a syue) yet shall not y lest granel stone fall vpon the earth: But all the wicked doers of my people, that saye: Tush, the plage is not so nye, to come so hately vpon vs: those shal perishe with the swerde. At that tyme wil I buyde agayne the tabernacle off David, that is fallen downe, and hedge vp his gappes: and let the breche be made, I shal repaire it: yee I shal buyde it agayne, as it was afore tyme, yf they maye possesse the remnant of Edom, yee all soch people as call vpon my name, sayeth the LORDE, which doeth these thynges.

Beholde, the tyme cometh (sayeth the LORDE) that the plowman shal ouertake the reaper, and y treader off grapes, him the sower shal fede. The mountaynes shall digge sweete wyne, and the hilles shall be fructfull, and I wil turne the captyuite of my people off Israel: they shal repaire the waies, and haue the in possessio: they shal plante wyndes, ad drynke the wyne ther off: they shal make gardens, and enioye the frutes off the. And I wil plante them vpon their owne ground, so that I will neuer rote them out agayne from their londe, which I haue geuen them, sayeth the LORDE thy God.

The Prophet Abdy.

What Abdy conteyneth.

Chap. i He prophesyeth agaynst the proudnes of the Edomites, that vered the Iherelites in their aduersite. He sheweth, what thynges shal come vpon them.

The first Chapter.

This is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath the LORDE God spoke vpon the. We haue herde of the LORDE, yf there is an embassage sent amonge the heithen: Up, let vs aryse, and fighte agaynst them. Beholde, I will make y small amonge the heithen, so that they shal be utterly despised. The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in y stroge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thine herte: who shal cast me downe to the grounde? But though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starnes: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thence. Yf y thues & robbers came to y by night, thou takinge thy rest: shulde they not scale, till they had ynough? yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, wolde they not leaue the some grapes? But how shall they rype Esau, and seke out his treasures?

B Yet the men that were sworne vnto the, shal bynde the out off the borders off thine owne londe. They that be now at one with the, shal disceane the, and overcome y: Eue they that eateth y bried, shal betraye the, or mar thou perceave it. Shal not I at the same tyme destroye the wyse men off Edom, ad those that haue vnderstondinge, from the mount off Esau? Thy giannes (o Theman) shal be a frayd, for thorow the slaughter they shal be all ouerthrowne vpon the moiste off Esau. Shame shal come vpon the, for y malice that thou shewedest to thy brother Jacob: yee for evermore shalt thou perishe, & that because of the tyme, when thou didest se thyself agaynst him, euen when the enemies caried awaye his hoost, and when the alleuantes came in at his portes, and cast lottes vpon Jerusalem, and thou thyself wast as one of them.

C Thou shalt nomore se the daye of thy brother, thou shalt nomore beholde the tyme of his captyuite: thou shalt nomore reioyse o the children off Juda, in the daye of their destruccion, thou shalt triumphe nomore in the tyme of their trouble. Thou shalt nomore come in at the gates off my people, in the tyme of their decaye: thou shalt not se their mysery in the daye of their fall.

Thou shalt sende out no man agaynst the hoost, in the daye of their aduersite: nether shalt thou stode waytinge enymore at y corners of the stretes, to murthure soch as are fled, or to take them presoners, that remayne in the daye of their trouble. For the daye off the LORDE is harde by vpon all heithen. Like as thou hast done, so shalt thou be dealt withall, yee thou shalt be rewarded euen vpon thine heade. For like wyse as ye haue dynden vpon myne hely hill, so shal all heithen drynke continually: yee drynke shal they, and swallowe vp, so that ye shall be, as though ye had neuer bene.

The i. Chap. Fo. xci.

But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnant escape: these shal be holy, and the house of Jacob shal possesse euenthose, that had them selues afore in possessio. Moreover, the house of Jacob shal be a fyre, the house off Joseph a flame, & the house off Esau shal be the strawe: which they shal kyndle and cosume, so that nothinge shal be left off the house off Esau, for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. They of the south shal haue the mount off Esau in possession: and loke what lieth vpon the greunde, that shal the philistynes haue: the playne felde shal Ephraim and Samaria possesse: and the mountaynes off Galaad shal Ben Jamin haue. And this hoost shal be the childre off Israels presoners: Now what so lieth from Canaan vnto Sarghad, and in Sepharad, that shal be vnder the subiection off Jerusalem: and the cities off the south shal enheret it. Thus they that escape vpon the hill off Sion, shal go vnto, punyssh the mount off Esau, and the kyngdome shal be the LORDES.

The first Chapter.

He worde of the LORDE came vnto Jonas the sonne of Amithai, sayenger Nyse, and gether to Ninue that greete cite: and preach vnto them, how y their wickednesse is come vp before me. And Jonas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence off the LORDE, and gat him downe to Joppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and wente aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE. But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in toperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were a frayde, and cried every man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast into the see, to lighten it off them. But Jonas gat him vnder y hatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

B So the master of the shippe came to him and sayde vnto him: why slombrest thou?
Up, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled. And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Jonas.

He sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for who se cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nation?
He answered them: I am an Ebue, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were y men exceedingly afrayed, & sayde vnto him:
why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde mo-uer vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye cease from troublinge vs? (for the see wroughte and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wooe, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Nevertheless, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wol-de not be, because the see wroughte so, & was so troublous agaynst them. Wherfore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LOR-DE, let vs not perishe for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (O LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

So they toke Jonas, and cast him in to the see, and the see leste ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doynge sacrifices & makinge vowes vnto the LOR-DE.

The II. Chapter.

B ut the LORDE prepared a greate fysh, to swallow vp Jonas. So was Jonas in the bely of the fysh, thre da-yes and thre nyghtes. And Jonas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayde: In my trouble I called vnto the LORDE, and he herde me: our off the bely of hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce.

Thou haddest cast me downe depe in y deest off the see, and the floude compassed me about: yee alle thy wauyes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thoughte that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I saye agayne lode towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compassed me, euen to the ry soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wades were wiapte aboute myne heade. I went downe to the botome of the hilles, & was barred in with earth for euer. But thou LORDE my God, hast broughte vp my lyfe a-gayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thoughte vpon the LOR-DE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of sayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgynge, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion cometh of the LORDE.
And y LORDE spake vnto y fysh, and cast out Jonas agayne vpon the drie londe.

The III. Chapter.

T hen came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jonas agayne, sayenge: vnto get the to Ninue: that greate cite, I preach vnto them the preachinge, which I bade the. So Jonas arose, and wente to Ni-nue at the LORDES commandement. Ni-nue was a greate cite vnto God, namely, of thre dayes iourney.

And Jonas wente to, and entred in to y cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, say-enge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ni-nue be overthrowen. And the people of Ni-nue beleued God, and proclaimed fastynge, and arayed themselves in sack cloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And their dinges came vnto y kinge of Ninue, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his appe-rell off, and put on sack cloth, and sat him downe in ashes.

And it was cried and commanded in Ninue, by the auctorite of the kinge and his lordes, sayenge: se that nether man or best, ore or shepe: taist oughte at all: and that they nether fede ner drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and best, and crye mightily vnto God: yee se that every man turne fro his euill waye, and from the wickednesse, he hath in honde.

The prophet Jonas.

Who can tell: God maye turne, and repete, and cease from his searce wiath, that we perishe not. And when God sawe their wortes, how they turned from their wicked wa-yes: he repented on the euill, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The III. Chapter.

W herfore Jonas was sore discontente, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre: therefore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lode sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shul-desteate punysshment. And now O LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseeche the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? And Jonas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde ther-of: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wylde vyne, which sprange vp ouer Jonas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to vnture him out of his payne. And Jonas was exceedinge glad of the wylde vyne.
But vpon the nexte morew agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordered a womne, which smote the wylde vyne, so that it wethered awaye. And when the Sonne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Some bete ouer the heade of Jonas, that he sayned agayne, and wysshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better forme to dye, than to lyue. And God sayd vnto Jonas: Art thou so angrie for the wylde vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde:
thou hast compassion vpon a wylde vyne, wherof thou bestowdest no labour, ner may dest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Ninue: that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, y knowe not their right hode fro the lef-te, besydes moch
catell?

The Prophet Michas.

What Michas conteyneth.

- Chap. I. He reproveth the people off Israel and Juda for their wickednesse and Idolatry: he telleth them their punysshment with mourninge.
Chap. II. He rehearseth their abominacions.
Chap. III. He reproveth the rulers and the prophetes, as cause of the peoples misery.
Chap. IIII. V. He prophesyeth of the saluacion off Gods people in Christ, of his kyngdome, and power of his gospel.
Chap. VI. Another reproue. Ourwarde offerin-ges are excluded, and here is declared what God requyeth off man.
Chap. VII. The summe off the thinges before sayde The litle flocke of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LOR-DE, that came vnto Michas the Morastite, in the dayes of Joathan, Achas and Ezechias kings of Juda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Jerusalem.

Hearc all ye people, marke this well o earth, and all that therein is: see the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen y LORDE from his holy temple. For why? be-holde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, & come downe, and treade vpon the hie thin-ges of the earth. The mountaynes shal consume vnder him, & the valleyes shal cleue asunder: like as waxe consumeth at the fyre, & as y waters runne downwarde. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Jacob, and the syn-nes of the house of Israel.

But what is the wickednesse of Jacob?
Is not Samaria? Which are the hie places of Juda: Is not Jerusalem? Therefore I shal make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley, & discover hir fou-daciō. All hir ymages shal be broke downe & all hir wynnynge shal be bient in the fyre:
yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an who-re, & in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherfore I wil mourne & make la-mentacion, bare & naked will I go: I must mourne like y dyagōs, & take sorrow as y Es-triches: for their woude is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Juda, & hath couched y ponte of my people at Jerusalem allredy. We-pe not, lest they at Geth perceave it.

E Thou at Bethphra, welter thyself in the dust and ashes. The which dwellest at Sephir, get thee hence with shame. The pride shall boote no more for very sorrowe: & why? his neighbour shall take from her what she hath. Therebellious circ hopeth, that it shall not be so euell: but for all that, the plague shall come from the LORDE, even into the porte of Jerusalem. The greates noyse off the charrettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of synne of y^e daughter of Sion, for in the came up the wickednesses of Israel. Rec he sent his confers in to the londe of Geth.

4-Re. 13. c

The houses of lies will disceane the kyn- ges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Moassa) I shall brynge a posses- sion vpon the, ad the plague of Israel shall reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and sha- ue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aele, for they shall be caried awaye captyue from the.

The II. Chapter.

A Vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuyse vngaciousnesse vpon their beddes, to persourne it in y^e cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, they robbe men off their houses.

Re. 21. a

Am. 5. b

Thus they oppresse a ma for his house, & every man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuysed a plague, wherout ye shall not plucke youre neckes: Ye shall no- more go so proudly, for it will be a perleus ty- me. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournynge shall be made ouer you on this maner: We be utterly desolate, the por- cion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath ta- ken from vs?

Num. 11. f

Nevertheless there shall be noman to de- uide the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. Tush, holde youre tange (sayeth he) I shall not fall vpon this peo- ple, we shall not come so to confucion, sa- yeth the house off Jacob. Is the spire off the LORDE so cleue awaye? or is he so myn- ded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people dorh the contrary, therefore must I take par- te agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Re haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot off their good houses, and taken awaye my ex- cellent giftes from their children. Vp, ye you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are cor- rupte, and shall miserably perish. If I were a fleshy felowe, and a preacher of lies and tolde them that they mighte syt bebbun- ge and bollynge, and be dronken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Jacob) and dryue the remnant off Israel all toge- ther. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the cattill in their stables, that they maye be disquited of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go befo- re them, and the LORDE shall be vpon the heade of them.

The III. Chapter.

Hare, o ye heades of the house of Ja- cob, and ye leders of the house of Is- rael: Shulde not ye knowe, what we re lausfull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euill: ye plucke off mens syn- nes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eat the flesh of my people, ad slay off their syn- ne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peeces as it were in to a cauldron, ad as fleshy into a pot. Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: be- cause that they row their owne ymaginacion, they haue deale so wickedly.

And as concernynge the prophetes that disceane my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shall be well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

Therefore youre vision shall be turned to night, & youre prophycyenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer these pro- phetes, & the daye shall be darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, & yf sayth sayers confounded: yee they shall be for- ne all the packe of the to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods wordes. As for me, I am full of strenght, & of y^e spere off y^e LORDE, full of iudgment & boldnesse: tell me the house of Jacob their wickednesse, & the house of Israel their synne.

O heareth this ye rulers of the house of Ja- cob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lausfull, and misist as y^e the thinge that is straight: Ye that byrde vp Sion with bloude, and Jeru- salem with doynge wronge. O ye iudges, ye geue sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophesy for money. Yet wil they be take as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LOR- DE amonge vs? Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therefore shall Sion (for you- resates) be plowed like a fælde: Jerusalem shall become an heape of stones, and the hill off y^e temple shall be turned to an hye wodde.

Mich. 5. f

Esa. 14. d

The IIII. Chapter.

In the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that the hill off the LORDES house shall be set vp hyer then eny mou- tynes or hilles: Rec the people shall preese vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shall haist them thither, saye ge: Come, let us go vp to the hill off the LORDE, & to the house off the God of Jacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

Mat. 23. c

For the lawe shall come out off Sion, ad the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the heathen, and resourmethe people off farre countrees: so that of their swordes they shall make plowshares, and sythes off their spea- res.

Eze. 24. d

One people shall not lift vp a swerde a- gainst another, yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but every man shall syt vnder his vin- yarde and vnder his syge tie, and no man to slaye him awaye: for the mouth off y^e LOR- DE of hostes hath spoken it. Therefore, whe- reas all people haue walked every man in y^e name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for ever and ever. At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vnto the lame and the outcastes, and such as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of y^e outcastes a greates peo- ple: and the LORDE himself shall be their kyn- ge vpon the mount Sion, fro this tyme forth for evermore. And vnto the (o thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the dought- er Sion) vnto the shall it come: eue the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the daughter Je- rusalem. Why the art thou now so heuy? is the renotynge in the: are thy counsellers awaye that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

And now (o thou daughter Sion) be so- ry, let it grene the as a wise laboringe with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne fælde. Rec vnto Babilis shalt thou go, there shalt thou be deliuered, and there the LORDE shall low- se the from the honde off thine enemies.

Now also are there many people gathe- red together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Si- on is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knewe not the thoughtes off the LORDE, they vnderstonde not his counsell, that shall gather them together as the shee- ues in the barne. Therefore get the vp (o thou daughter Sion) and thros the out the corner: for I wil make thy home yron, and thy cla- wes brass, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropria- te vnto the LORDE, and their substance vnto the ruler off the whole worlde.

The V. Chapter.

Ister that shalt thou be robbed thy self, o thou robbers daughter: they shall laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheeke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, art lit- le amonge the thousandes off Juda. Out off the shall come one vnto me, which shall be y^e gouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnynge, and from euerlas- tinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne then shall the rem- nant of his biethren be converted vnto y^e children off Israel. He shall stonde fast, and ge- ue fode in the strenght of the LORDE, and in the victory of the name of y^e LORDE his God: and when they be converted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

Then shall there be peace, so that the As- sirian maye come in to oure londe, and trea- de in oure houses. We shall brynge vp seven shepherdes and viij. prynces vnto them: the- se shall subdue the londe of Assur wth the swe- de, and the londe of Tyrod with their na- ked weapons. Thus shall he deliuer vs from the Assiria, when he cometh within oure lande, and setteth his fore within oure bor- ders. And the remnant of Jacob shall be a- monge the multitude of people, as the dew of the LORDE, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth of no body. Rec the residue of Jacob shall be amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes of y^e wodde, and as the lyons whelp amonge a row) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne hon-de shalbe lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

C The tyme shal come also (saith the LOR-DE) that I wil take thine horses from the, & destroie thy charettes. I will breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. All witchcraftes will I rote out of thine hande, there shall no mo soothsayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thine ymages will I destroye out of y so that thou shalt no more bowe thy self vnto the workes of thine owne handes. Thy groues will I plucke vp by the rotes, & breake downe thy cities. Thus will I be auēged also, vpon all heithen that will not heare.

The VI Chapter.

A Rken now what the LORDE saith: Up, reprimethe mountaynes, and let the hilles heare thy voyce. O heare the punishment of the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundacions of y earth:
for the LORDE wil reprimethe his people, & re-son with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherin haue I hurte the?
geneme answereth. Because I brought the fro the londe of Egypte, and deliuered the out of the house of bondage. Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the. Remembere (O my people) what Balach the kynge of Moab had ymagined agaynst the, & ad-what answereth that Balaam the sonne of Be-or gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: y ye maye knowe the lowynge kyndnesse of y LORDE.

B What acceptable thynge shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe myne to the hye God? Shall I come before him w' brent offeringes, and with calues of a yeare olde?
Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames of oyle?
Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne offences, and the frute of my body for the syn-ne of my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyeth off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in lowynge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: that thou mayest be called a cite of the LORDE, & that thy name maye be righteousnesse. Heare (O ye trybes) who wol-de els geue you soch warnynge? Shulde I not be displeased, for the vnrightheous good in the houses of the wicked, and because the measure is diminished? Or shal I iustifie the false balannes and the bagge of disanfull weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightheously gotten: wherethe syn-s deal with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceatfull runges in their mouthes.

Therefore I will take in hondes to puny-the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: ye thou shalt bringe thy self downe. Thou shalt fle, but not escape: ad those y thou wilt desist saue, wil I deliuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: thou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, & anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt make one sweets must, but shalt drinke no wyne. Re-pe the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the afflictions of the house of Achab: ye foloweth it pleasures, therfore wil I make the wast, & cause y inhabitants to be abhorred. O my people: & thus shalt thou beate thine owne she-
me.

The VII. Chapter.

W is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleeunge in the harnesse.
There are no mo grapes to eat, yet wolde I sayne (with all my herre) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpon earth, there is not one righteous amonge me.
They laboure all to shed bloude, & euery mā hunteth his brother to deatch: yet they say they do well, when they do euill. As the prince wil, so saith the iudge: y he maye be a pleasure agayne. The greates mā speaketh what his herre desyeth, & y heares alway him. The best off the is but as a thistle, and the most righteous of them is but as a hewe in the hedg. But when the daye of thy preschers commeth, y then shalt be vnto: the shal they be waisted awaye. Let no man bleue his frende, ner put his confidence in a prince. Repe the porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: for y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the daughter shal rise agaynst her mother, y daughter in lawe a-gaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shal be euen they of his owne householde.

Nevertheless I wil loke vp vnto y LOR-DE, I wil patiently abyde Ged my saluation: my God shal heare me. O thou enemye of my ne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp a-gayne: and though I ste in darcknesse, yet y LORDE is my light. I will beare the punishment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he ste in iudgment vpon my case, and se that I haue right. He wil bangme forth to the light, and I shal se his righte-nesse.

The prophet Michas.

She that is myne enemy shall loke vpon
it, & be confounded, which now saith: Where is thy LORDE God? Myne eyes shal behold her, when she shalbe troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. The tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal goe abroad: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the strege cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Now standinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the synnes of their owne ymaginacions.
Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charnel, Basan & Ga-lad as aforetyme. Marvelous thinges will I shew them, like as when they came out of Egypte. This shal the heithen se, and be ashamed for all their power: so that they shall aye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. They shal licke the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, y tremble in their holes. They shalbe afayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare y.
Where is there soch a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgiuest the offences of the remnant of thine heretage?
He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why:
his delite is to haue compassion: he shal turne agayne, & be mercysfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednesse, & cast all oure syn-nes into the becom of the see. Thou shalt re-pe thy trust with Jacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe ago.

The i. Chap. Ho. xciii.

The first Chapter.

he LORDE is a gelous God,
and a taker of vengeance: yee
a taker of vengeance is y LOR-DE, and wrothfull. The LORDE taketeth vengeance of his enemies, and reserveth displeasure for his aduer-saries. The LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greace power, & so innocent, that he leaue-th no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whe he repreueth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charnel and the pleasure of Libanus waisterh awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worl-de, and all that dwell therein. Who maye endure be fore his wrath? Or who is able to a-byde his grymme displeasure? His anger ca-tech on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Full gracious is the LORDE, and a stron-ge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth the that put their trust in him: when the floude reimeth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Cush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come no more trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dyonardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of y soch as ymagin myschese, and geue yngra-cious counsell agaynst the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Let the
be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil verethe, but not utterly destroye the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sunder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement concerninge the, that there shal come nomore sede of thy name.
The carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

The II. Chapter.

Behold, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, that bringeth good tydings, & preacheth peace. O Juda, repe thy holy dayes, perfourme thy promysses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is utterly rote out.

The prophet Naum.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Jacob, like as yf glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken chem downe, & marred the royne braunches. The shyld of his gyauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charrettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forward, his archers are wel deckt & trimmed. The charrettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenyng.

When he doth but warne his gyauntes, they fall in their aray, & haistely they clymme vpon the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shal fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captyue, and hir gentylwomen shal mourne as the dones, & grone within their herres. Ninue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to sle. Stonde, stonde, (shal they crye) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shal be a multitude of all maner costly ornaments. Thus must she be spoyled, emplied & clene striped out: that their herres maye be melted awaye, their knees creble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyons, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyonesse wente with the whelpes, and no man frayd them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyonesse: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauysshed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charrettes, that they shal smoke with all, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoilinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shal nomore be herde.

The III. Chapter.

Woe that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, & wil not leane off from rauysshinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, russhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the hoyses, & the rollinge of the charrettes. There the house men get vp with naked swordes, and glisteringe speares: Therelyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of dead bodies: There is no ende of deed coarces, yamen fall vpon their bodies: And that saith the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beautifull harlot: which is a masse of wyckcraft, yee and selleth the people to row hir whordome, and the nations to hir wyckcraft.

Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil pull thy clothes out of thy head: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dynte vpon y, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: yee all they that loke vpon the, shal stare backe, & saye: Ninue is destroyed.

Who wil haue pyte vpon the: when shal I seke one to conforthe the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexandria: that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & maled with the see? Ethiopia and Egypte were hir strength, & that exceedinge greate by measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir pers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuite: hir yonge childien were strent downe at the heade of enery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shal thou also be bounde, and hyde thy self, and seke some hope agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge citis shal be like fyge trees w' rype fyges: which when a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

Beholde, thy people with in the arebawomen: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure y barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy ströge holdes, go in to the claye, temple the moter, make stronge bucke: yet the fyre shal consume the, the swerde shal destroye the, yee as yf locusts doth, so shal it eate the vp. It shal fall heuely vpon the as the locustes, yee right heuely shal it fall vpon the, euen as the grethoppers. Thy marchauntes haue bene as then the starres of heane: but now shal they spred abroad as the locustes, and fle the waye: Thy lordes are as the grethoppers, & thy captyues as the multitude of grethoppers: which when they be colde, remaine in y hedges: but when the Sonne is vp, they fle awaye, and no mā can tell where they are come. Thy shepherdes are as slepe (of kinge of Assur) thy worthies are layed downe: people is scatted abroad vpon the mountaynes

Chap. III. A prayer of the prophet.

The first Chapter.

This is the heuy burthe, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. O LORDE, how longe shal I crye, & thou wilt not heare? How longe shal I complayne vnto the, suffryng wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyranie and violence be fore me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is come in peces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the righteous: this is the cause, yf wronge iudgment proceedeth. Beholde amonge the heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abashed: for I wil do a thinge in your tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

Soile, I wil rase vp yf Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwelling places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boyssous people is it, these shal sit in iudgment & punyssh. Their heales are swifter then the catteres of the mountayne, & bytter then yf wolues in yf enenyng. Their hounen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastily to den: as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them cometh an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shal mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh course vnto them, to go forth & to do more euill, & to ascribethe that power vnto their God.

The ij. Chap. Ho. xcv.

But thou O LORDE my God, my hely one, thou art from the begynnyng, therfore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punysshment, and set them to reproue the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euill, thou canst not beholde yf thinge that is wicked. Wherefore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better then himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the crepinge beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therfore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pleteous. Wherefore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer cease to slaye the people.

The II. Chapter.

I stode vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answer I shulde geue him yf reproue me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so cometh by, maye rede it: for yf visio is yet farre off for a tyme, but at yf last it shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not profpere: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. Like as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnfaciable as death. All heithen gathereth he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

But shal not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vpon other mens goodes: How longe wil he labe himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, yf shal byt the, & awake, that shal teare yf in peces: yee thou shalt be their pray. Seinge thou hast spoyled many heithen, therfore shal the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

Wo vnto him, that conetously gathereth enell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the power of myffortune. Thou hast deuysed yf shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully offended: so that the very stones of the wall shall crie out of it, and the tymber that lieth betwixte the ioyntes of the buyldinge shall answere. Wo vnto him, y bayleth the towne with bloude, and mayntenech y cite with vnrighteousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hoostes bringethis to passe, that the laboure of the people shal be brient with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weered them selues, shall be lost? For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honoure, like as the waters that couer the see.

Wo vnto him that getteth his neighbour drynke, to geue him rother full displeasure for his dronkenesse: that he maye se his pynters. Therfore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Drynke thou also, all thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hode shall compass the aboute, and shamefull spewinge in iicade of thy worshippe. For the wrogethar thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, and the wilde beastes shal make the afayed: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all soch as dwel therein.

Wo vnto him, that saith to a peece of wood: arise, and to a domine stone: stande vp. For what instruccio maye sech one geue? Beholde, it is layed ouer with golde and syluer, z there is no breth in it. But the LORDE in his holy temple is he, whom all the world shulde feare.

The III. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignorant.

LORDE, when I herde speake of y, I was afayed. The worke y thou hast taken in honde, shal thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme cometh, then shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God cometh from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shynne is as y sonne, z beames of lighe go out of his honde, there is his power hid. Destruction goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondeth, z meureth the earth: he loketh, z the people consume awaye, the mountaynes of y wolde fall downe to powder, and the hilles are sayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the pavilions of the Moians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were veyed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (O LORDE) in the waters: was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, when thou sattest vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou haddest promised with an ooch vnto thy enemies. Sela.

Thou didest deny the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afayed, y water streame were awaye: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vpon thine honde. The Sonne and Moone remayned still in their habitacion. Thine arrow wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest thy shewe the z eichen in thy displeasure. Thou madest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe the annoynted. Thou smorest downe the heauens in the house of the vngodly, z discourdest his foundations, en vnto y necke of the hill. Sela.

Thou curstest his septers, the captaine of his men of warre: which came as a storm wynde to scatte me abrode, z are glad when they maye eat vpon y poore secretly. Thou hast set a waye for thine horses in the see, and in the mudde of greate waters. When I herde this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at y voyce thereof, my bones corrupte. I am afayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might vpon vnto oure people, which are already prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, z the vynes shal beare no frute. The laboure of olyue shalbe but lest, and the londe shal beare no come: the shepe shalbe taken out of y fold, and there shalbe no catell in y stall. But as forme, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Saviour. The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: z he which giveth y victory, shal bringe me to my hyppes, synginge vpon my psalmes.

Chap. I. Zephorecieth of plagues for to come vpon Iuda.

Chap. II. Zephorecieth them to amede, that they maye escape the wrath of God: and sheweth the Gentiles their punishment.

Chap. III. Punishment because of the wickednesse of the Iewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the zeithen.

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedelias, the sonne of Amarias y sonne of Iezedias: in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. I wil gather vp all thinges in the londe (saith the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beast: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see: to the greate decaye of the wicked, z wil utterly destroye the men out of the londe, saith the LORDE. I wil stretch out my hande vpon Iuda, and vpon all soch as dwel at Ierusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnant of Baal from this place, and the names of the Zemyryns and prestes: yee z soch as vpon their house toppes worshippe z bowe themselves vnto the boost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE, and by their which also: which starte a backe from y LORDE, and neether seke after the LORDE, nor regarde him.

Be still at y presence of the LORDE God, in the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offerment, and called his gestes therto. And thus shal it happen in the daye of the LORDES slayne offerment: I wil vyset the prynces, the kynges children, z all soch as were straunge doctinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all these, that treade ouer the thresholde so proudly. which fyll their lordes house with robbery and falsede. At y same tyme (saith the LORDE) there shall be herbe a greate crye from the fishpoynte, and an howlinge from y ether poynte, and a greate murther from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are roted out.

At the same tyme wil I set the howl Ierusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that contynue in their dregges, and saye in their hartes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good ner enell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. They shall buylde houses, and not dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne therof. For the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, z cometh on a pace. Horrible is y tydinges of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye of trouble z heynnesse, a daye of utter destruction z misery, a darcke z glomyng daye, a cloudy z stormy daye, a daye of the noyse of crespettes and sharmes, agaynst the stronge cities and hie towres. I wil bunge y people into soch vexacion, that they shal go aboute like blind men, because they haue synned agaynst the LORDE. Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, z their bodies as the myre. Neither their syluer nor their golde shalbe able to deliuer the in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE, but the whole londe shalbe consumed thorow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make clene ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

The II. Chapter.

Come together and gather you, O ye Ifrauerde people: or y thinge go forth that is concluded, z or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES soire displeasure come vpon you. Set the LORDE all yee mete harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his indgement: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y LORDE. For Gaza shalbe destroyed, z Ascalon shalbe layed waist: They shal cast out Ashdod at the noone daye, and Accaron shalbe plucked vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y dwel vpon the see coast, ye murtherous people: the worde of y LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that ther shal no man dwel in the eny more: z as for the see coast, it shal be hyrd mens cottages z shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for soch as remayne of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y houses of Ascalon shal they rest toward night: for the LORDE their God shal vyset the, z turne awaye their captiuite. I haue herde the despite of Moab, z the blasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully intreated my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therfore as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE) of hoostes the God of Irael) Moab shalbe as Sodome, z

Ammon as Gomorra: euen driethome he-ges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them the remnant of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, because they haue deales shamefully with the LORDE of hoostes people, and magnified them selues aboue them.
The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them,
and destroye all the goddes in the londe.
And all the Ies of the heithen shal worshipe him, every man in his place.

C Re Moia is also shal perish with my swerde: yee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Nine, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist.
The flockes and all the bestes of the people shall lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper pestes of it: foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal syt vpon the balckes, for the bor-des of Cedie shalbe ryue downe. This is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y the bestes lyetherin.
Who so goeth by, mecketh her, and poynteth at her with his synger.

The iij. Chapter.

W O to the abominable, fylthie and cruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, neether wil she holde herto hir God.
Hir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons:
hir iudges are as wolues in the euenynge, which leane nothinge behynde them till the morow. Hir prophetes are lichte personnes and vnfaichfull men: hir prestes vnhalowe the Sanctuary, and do wronge vnder the pretence of the lawe. But the iust LORDE that doeth no vnrighthe, was amonge them, every moynynge shewinge them his lawe clearly, and ceassed not. But the vngedly wil not lerne to be ashamed. Therefore wil I ro-te out this people; and destroye their tow-res: yee and make their stretes so voyde, that no man shall goetherin. Their cities shall be broke downe, so that no body shalbe left, ner dwelthere enymore.

B I sayde vnto them: O feare me, and be co-tent to be reformed. That their dwellinge shulde not be destroyed, and that there shul-de happen vnto them none of these thinges, wherewith I shal vysethe. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore ye shal waite vpon me (saith the LORDE) vntill the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am deter-med, to gather the people and to bringe kingdomes together, that I maye punit myne anger, yee all my wroch shal dyssemyned vpon them. For all the wroch shalbe med with the fyre of my gelousy. And the wil I clense the lippes of the people, that they: yee everychone call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with me-

der. So as I haue subdued, and my ad-uersaries whom I haue scattered abroad, shal brynge me presentes beyonde the water of Ethiopia.

In that tyme shalt thou nomore be founded, because of all thy ymaginacions wherewith thou haddest offended me.
I wil take awaye the proude booke of thy honoure from the, so that thou shalt more tryumphe because of my holy name.
The also wil I leane a smal poore symple ple, which shal trust in the name of the LORDE. The remnant of Israel shal do no rednes, ner speake lyes: neether shal they disceatful tongue be founde in their mouth.
For they shal be fed, and take their rest:
no man shal make them a frayd. Get theres o daughter Sion, be ioyful o Israel: for ce be glad from thy whole herte, o daughter Jerusalem, for the LORDE hath awaye thy punishment, and turned thyne enemies. The kinge of Israel, the LORDE himself is with the: that he dest nomore to feare eny myghty fort.

In that tyme it shall be sayed to Jerusalem: feare not, and to Sion: let not thine des be slacke, for the LORDE thy God is with the, it is he that hath power to save: he a special pleasure in the, and a marvellous rewarder the: yee he reioysseth in thy gladnesse. Sech as haue bene in bewich wil I gather together, and take out of the congregation: as for the shame and reproch that hath bene layed vpon the, it shal be re from the. And lo, in y tyme wil I all these that were the: I wil helpe the and gather vp the cast awaye: yee I wil them honoure and prayse in all londes, when they haue bene put to shame. At y tyme me wil I brynge you in, and at the same wil I gather you. I wil get you a a good repaire, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe your captiuitie before you re eyes, saith the LORDE.

The first Chapter.

In the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, in the vi. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) vnto Zo-robabel the sonne of Salathiel y prynce of Juda, and to Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LOR-DE of hoostes, and saith: This people both saye: The tyme is not yet come to buylde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus 2 sayed: Ye ye saye can synde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Considre now your owne wayes in youre herres (saith y LORDE of hoostes) ye sawe much, but ye brin-ge litle in: yee ate, but ye haue not ynough:
ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre flues, but ye are not warme: ye y earneth my wage, puttech it in a broken purse.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Cesse your owne wayes in youre herres, get ye vnto the mountayne, fetch wood, 2 buyl-de vp the house: that it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honour, saith the LORDE. Ye looked for much, and lo it is come to litle: 2 though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why saith the LORDE of hoostes? Euen because that my house lyeth so waist, and yee renne every man vnto his owne house. Wherfore the heauen is forbydden to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you eny croffe. I haue called for a drought, both vps the londe 2 vpon the mountaynes, vpon cor-ne, vpon wyne 2 vpon oyle, vpon every thing that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon man and vpon cattell, yee and vpon all handy labour.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, 2 Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest with the remnant of the people, her-de the voyce of the LORDE their God, 2 the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE. Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: I am with you, saith the LORDE. So the LORDE waied vp the spere of Zorobabel the prynce of Juda, and the spere of Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, and the spere of the remnant of all the people: they came 2 laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

The ii. Chapter.

In the xiiij. daye of the firste mo-neth, in the secnde yeare of kynge Darius, the xiiij. daye of the firste mo-neth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zoro-babel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Juda, and to Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, and to the residue of y people, 2 saye:
Who is left amonge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, euen as though it were nothinge? Nevertheless be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE) be of good consoirte, o Jesua thou sonne of Jose-dec, hye prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saith the LOR-DE of hoostes, and do acordyng to the worde (for I am with you, saith the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: 2 my spie-te shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes:
Yee once more will I shake heauē and earth, the sie and the drye lode: yee I will moue all heithen, 2 the comforte of all heithen shal come, 2 so wil I fylle this house with honoure, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, 2 the golde is myne, saith the LOR-DE of hoostes. Thus y glory of the last house shalbe greater then the first, saith the LOR-DE of hoostes: 2 in this place wil I geue peace, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The xiiij. daye of the ii. moneth in the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saith y LORDE God of hoostes: Aftre the prestes concernyng the lawe, 2 saye: If one beare holy flesch in his cote lap-pe, 2 with his lappe do touch the bried, porage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shal he be holy also? The prestes answered, 2 saide: No.
Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beynge defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of the se: shal it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answere 2 sayed: yee, it shal be vnclene. The Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people 2 this nacion before me, saith y LOR-

DE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpon another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bushels, there were scarceten: and that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. portes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blastinge & hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of their moneth, vnto the daye that the foundation of the LORDES temple was layed: Mark it well, Is not the seide yet in the barne: haue not the vines, the figgetrees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet in fruitefull: but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospeere.

Morouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the pryncce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee & destroye the mightie kingdome of the heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charrettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, enery man thorow his neighbours swerde. And as for the, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE of hoostes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruant: I wil keete the (saith the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a scale: for I haue chosē the, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The first Chapter.

In the eight moneth of the secōde yere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, sayenge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. Turne you vnto me (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Be not yll to youre forefathers, vnto whom the prophetes cried afore tyme, sayēge: Thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Turne you from youre euill wayes, & from youre wicked imaginations. But they wolde not heare, ne to gardeme, saith the LORDE. What is now become of youre forefathers and the prophetes: are they yet still alyue? But yd not my wordes & statutes (which I cōmānded by my seruantes & prophetes) touch yō forefathers? Vpon this, they gaue answer & sayde: like as yf LORDE of hoostes deuysed to do vnto vs, accordinge to oūre wayes & imaginations, euen so hath he deale with vs.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the xi. moneth (which is the moneth Sebat) in the secōde yere of Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo the prophete, sayenge: I sawe by night, and lo, there sat one vpon a reade horse, and stode still amonge the Myrtrees, that were beneth vpon the grounde: and behynde him were there reade, spaddes and whyte horses.

The prophet Zachary.

Then sayde I: O my LORDE, what are these? And the angel that talked with me, sayde vnto me: I will shewe the what these be. And the man that stode amonge the Myrtrees, answered & sayde: These are they, whom the LORDE hath sent to go thorow the worlde. And they answered the angel of the LORDE, that stode amonge the Myrtrees, and sayde: We haue gone thorow the worlde: and beholde, all the worlde dwelle at ease, and are carelesse.

Then the LORDES angel gaue answer and sayde: O LORDE of hoostes, how long wilt thou be vnmmercifull to Ierusalem and to the cities of Iuda, with whom thou hast bene displeased now these lxx. yeres? So the LORDE gaue a lowngye and a comfortable answer, vnto the angel that talked with me. And the angel that commoned with me, sayde vnto me: Crie thou, and speake, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I am excreadynge gelous ouer Ierusalem and Sion, and so am displeased at the carelesse heithen: for where as I was but a litle angrie, they dyd their best that I might destroye them. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: I wil turne me agayne in mercy towarde Ierusalem, so that my house shalbe buyded in it, saith the LORDE of hoostes: yee and the plommet shalbe layed abrode in Ierusalem, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Cne also, and speake: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: My cities shall be in good prosperite agayne, the LORDE shall yet conforre Sion, and chose Ierusalem. Then lift I vp myne eyes and sawe, and beholde, fourte homes. And I sayde vnto the angel, that talked with me: what be these? he answered me: These are yf homes, which haue scattered Iuda, Istracl and Ierusalem abrode. And yf LORDE shewed me iiii. carpenters. Then sayde I: what wil these do? he answered, & sayde: These are the homes, which haue so strowed Iuda abrode, that no man durst lift vp his heade: But these are come to fraye them awaye, and to cast out yf homes of the Gentiles, which lift vp their home ouer the londe of Iuda, to scatter it abrode.

The II. Chapter.

Lift vp myne eyes agayne, & loke: and beholde, a man with a measure lye in his honde. Then saide I: whe the goest thou? And he sayde vnto me: To measure Ierusalem, that I maye se how longe and how brode it is. And beholde, the angel that talked w me, wente his waye forth. Then were there out another angel to mete him, & sayde vnto him: Runne, speake to this yongeman, & saye: Ierusalem shal be inhabited without eny wal, for yf very multitude of people & catell, yf shal bertherin. See I myself (saith the LORDE) wil be vnto her a wall of fyre rounde aboute, & wil be honoured in her.

O get you forth, O fle from the londe of yf north (saith the LORDE) ye, whom I haue scattered in to the foure wyndes vnder heauē, saith the LORDE. Save thy self, o Sion: thou that dwellest with yf daughter of Babilon, for thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: With a glorious power hath he sent me out to the heithē, which spoyled you: for who so toucheth you, shal touche the aple of his owne eye. Beholde, I will lift vp myne honde ouer them: so that they shal be spoyled of thofe, which afore serued them: & ye shal knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me.

Be glad, & reioyce, o daughter of Sion: for lo, I am come to dwell in the myddest of the, saith the LORDE. At the same tyme the re shal many heithen cleue to the LORDE, & shal be my people. Thus wil I dwell in the myddest of the, & thou shalt knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto the. The LORDE shall haue Iuda in possession for his parte in the holy grounde, & shal chose Ierusalem yet agayne. Let all flesh be still before the LORDE, for he is rysen out of his holy place.

The III. Chapter.

And he shewed me Iesus yf hye prest, stondinge before the angel of the LORDE, and Satan stode at his right honde to resiste him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Satan: The LORDE reprove the (thou Satan) yee the LORDE that hath chosen Ierusalem, reprove the. Is not this a biande take out of the fyre? Now Iesus was clothed in vnclene rayment, and stode before the angel: which answered & sayde vnto those, yf stode before him: take awaye yf soule clothes from him. And vnto him he sayde: Beholde, I haue callē awaye thy synne from the, & wil decke the with chaunge of rayment. he sayde morouer: set a sayre myter vpon his heade. So they set a sayre myter vpon his heade, & put on clothes vpon him, and the angel of yf LORDE stode there. Then the angel of the LORDE testified vnto Iesus, & spake, thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: If thou wilt walke in my wayes, & kepe my watch: thou shalt rule my house, & kepe my courtes, & I wil gene the place amonge these that stonde here. Heare o Iesus thou hye prest, thou & thy frendes that dwell before the, for they are woderous people. Beholde, I will bringe forth the braunch of myseruant: for lo, the stone that I haue layed before Iesus: vpon one stone shalbe viij. eyes. Beholde, I will hewe him out (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and take awaye the synne of that londe in one daye.

Then shall every man call for his neighbe-re, vnder the vyne & vnder y sygetre, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The III. Chap.

And y angel that talked with me, came agayne, & waked me vp (as a man that is rayed out of his slepe) & sayde vnto me: What seist thou? And I sayde: I haue loked, and beholde: a candellsticke all of golde, with a boll vpon it & his viij. lampes therin, & vpon every lampe viij. stalkes: And
ij. olyue trees therby, one vpon the right sy-de of the boll, & the other vpon the left syde.
So I answered, & spake to the angel y talked with me, sayenge: O my lord what are these? The angel that talked with me, answered & sayde vnto me: knowest thou not what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. He answered, & sayde vnto me: This is the worde of the LORDE vnto Zorobabel, sayenge: Nether thorow an hoost of men, ner thorow strength, but thorow my spire, saith y LOR-DE of hoostes. What art thou, thou greate mountayne) before Zorobabel: thou must be made eauen. And he shal bringe vp the first stone, so that men shall cry vnto him: good lucke, good lucke.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: The bondes of Zorobabel haue layed y foundation of this house, his bondes also shal fynishe it: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. For he that hath benedis-pyed a litle season, shal reioyce, whē he seyth the tyme weight in Zorobabels honde. The viij. eyes are the LORDES, which go thorow the hole woulde. Then answered I, & sayde vnto him: What are these two olyue trees vpon the right and left syde of the candellstic-ke? I spake morouer, & sayde vnto him: what be these ij. olyue braunches which thorow y two golden pipes) emptye themselves into the golde? He answered me, & sayde: knowest thou not, what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. Then sayde he: These are the two olyue braunches, that stonde before the ruler of the whole earth.

The V. Chapter.

So I turned me lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked, & beholde, a flyenge bo-
te. And he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge bote of fy.

cubites longe & x. cubites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theys shal be iudged after this bote, & all swearers shal be iudged accordinge to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) so y it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsely sweareth by myne me: & shal remayne in his house, & consume with the tymbre & stones therof. The angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is.
I answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they y dwell vpon the whole earth, so loked vpon. And be-holde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & thence y lempe of leade vp in to an hoke.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & loked: & be-holde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a stork) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, y talked w me: whyther wil these beare the measure?
And he sayde vnto me: in to the londe of Sy-near, to buyde them an house: which when is prepared, the measure shal beset them in his place.

The VI. Chapter.

Morouer I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, that came iij. charrettes out fro betwixt two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: In the first charret were reade hoise, In the sek-de charret were blacke hoise, In y thirde cha-ret were whyte hoise, In y fourth charret were hoises of dyverse coloure, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lord, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: These are the
iij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stode before the ruler of all y earth.
That with the blacke hoise wente into the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed it, and the spickled hoises wente south towards the south. These hoises were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take that journey ouer the whole earth. And he sayd get you hence, and go thorow the woulde.
So they wite thorow out the woulde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, say-ge: Beholde, these that go toward y north shal still my wrath in the north countre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Take of the presoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Zebai, Tobiaas and Jdaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Josias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heads of Iesus the sonne of Josedec, the hie priest, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, the man who se name is the brannch: & he that shal spin-ge vp after him, shal buyde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shal buyde vp the temple of the LORDE. He shal beare the pray-se, he shal sit vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

A priest shal be also vpon his trone, &
a peaceable counsell shal be betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembraunce vnto he him; Tobias, Jdaia and Zebai the sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre off, shal come and buyde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil hearken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God.

The VII. Chapter.

It happened also in the fourth yeaere of tynge Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Caslew: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the priestes, which were in the house of the LOR-DE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: Shul-de I wepe in the systre moneth, and absteine, as I haue done now certayne yeaeres?
Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoo-stes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the priestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned in the v. & viij. moneth (now this lxx. yeaeres) byd ye fast vnto me: When ye ate also and dronke, byd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues?
Are not these the wordes, which the LOR-DE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Irusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt me, both toward the south and in the playne countrees?

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto
Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith y LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louynge kyndnesse, every man to his brother: Do the wyddewe, the fatherles-se, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ymagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. Nevertheless they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare.

yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe & wor-des, which the LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy spire by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherfore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but sca-tered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knew: not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, yf there traueled no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasant londe was vtterly layed waiste.

The VIII. Chapter.

So the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myd-dest of Ierusalem: so that Ierusalem shal be called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and soch as go with stanes in their bondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shal be full of yonge boyes and damselles, playnge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: yf the residus of this people thynke it to be impossible in these dayes, shulde it therfore be impossible in my sight, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Thus saith the LORDE of hoo-stes: Beholde, I wil deliuer my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil buy-ge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Jerusalem. They shal be my people, and I will be their God, in trench and rightynousnesse.
Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let you-re bondes be stronge, yf that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buyded. For why?
before these dayes nether men ner catel cou-

be wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let every man go agaynst his neighbour.

Nevertheless I wil now intreate the residue of this people no more, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hostes) but they shal be a seide of peace. The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the grounde shal geue hir increase, and the heavens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnant of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the heithen (O ye house of Juda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deliuer you, that ye shal be a blessing: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hostes: like as I deuysed to punyssh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (saith the LORDE of hostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Juda and Jerusalem, therefore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: Speake every man the treuth vnto his neighbour, execute indgment truly and peaceably within youre portes, none of you ymagyne uell in his hert agaynst his neighbour, and loue no false ooches: for all these are the thinges that I hate, saith the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus saith the LORDE of hostes: The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, & prosperous hye feastes vnto the house of Juda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: They shall yet come, people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: I p, leg vs go, and praye before the LORDE, & vs seke the LORDE of hostes, I wil go with you. See moche people and mightie heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hostes at Jerusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Jewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The IX. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shal be receaued at Adiab, & Damascus shal be his offerynge: for the eyes of all me and of the trybes of Israel shal lōke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hamath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also & Sidon, for they are very wise. Tyrus shal make herself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sōnde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power to the see, and she shal be consumed with fire. This shal Ascalon se, and be a frayd. Gaza shal be very soiry, so shal Accaron also, because hir hope is come to confusion. For the kinge of Gaza shall perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwell.

Strangers shall dwell at Asdod, & as for y pryde of y Philistynes, I shal rote out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominaciōs from amonge their teeth. Thus they shal be left for an vnto God, yee they shal be as a prynces in Juda, & Accaron like as Jebusi. And so will I compass my house rounde aboute with myne of warre, goinge to and fro: that no opposoure come vpon them eny more. For thus haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion be glad, o daughter Jerusalem. For lo, thy kinge cometh vnto the, euen the righte and Sauoure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpon the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charrettes fro Ephraim, & the horse from Jerusalem, the battel bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctrine of peace vnto the heithen, and his dominion shal be from the one see to the other, & from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thourow the bloude of thy remnant: shalt let thy prisoners out of the pytte, wherein is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, yet that be in prison, & lo: gesore to be deliuered: And this daye I wil ge the worde, that I wil rewarde the double agayne. For Juda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Sion) wil I rayse vp agaynst the Gentes, and make the as a giantes: and the LORDE God shal be sene aboute the, and his dartes shal go forth as the lightninge. The LORDE God shal blowe the trumpet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

The LORDE of hostes shall despoyle the, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with synge stones. They shal brynge rage, as it were thourow wyne. They shal be fylled like y basens, & as y homes of y aubayn. The LORDE their God shal deliuer them.

The XI. Chapter.

aye, as the flock off his people: for the stone off his Sanctuary shal be set vp in his laide. O how prosperous and goodly a chynge shall that be. The come shall make the yongemen chearefull, and the new wyne the maydens.

The X. Chapter.

Raye the LORDE then by tymes to geue you the latter rayne, so shall the LORDE make cloude, and geue you rayne ynough for all the increace off the felde: for rayne is the answer of Idols. The soothsayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreame: the comfort that they geue, is nothyng groweth. Therefore go they astraye like a flock of shepe, ad are troubled, because they haue no shepherde. My wrochfull displeasure is moued at the shepherdes, and I will vysethe goates. For the LORDE of hostes wil graciously vyset his flocke (the house of Juda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. Out of Juda shal come the helme, the nak, the batel bowe, and all the prynces together. They shal be as the giantes, which in the batell create downe the myre vpon y stretes. They shal fight, for y LORDE shal be with them, so that the horsmen shal be confounded.

I wil comforte the house of Juda, and pierce the house of Joseph. I wil turne them also, for I pyttie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shal be as a giant, and their hate shal be cherefull as thourow wyne: their children shal se it, and be glad, and their hate shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them & gather them together, for I wil rederme them. They shall increase, as they increased afore. I wil sowe the amonge the people, y they maye thinke vpon me in farre countrees: they shal lyue w their childre, and turne agayne. I wil brynge them agayne also from the londe of Egypce, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them into y londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal warte nochyng. He shall go vpon the fete of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so y alle the depe floudes shal be dried vp. The proude boostinge of Assur shal be cast downe, and the scepter off Egypce shal be taken awaye. I wil comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

Penthydoes (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye fyre trees, for the Cedre is falle, yee all y proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye of trees of Baasan) for y mightie stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Men maye heare the Lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Iordan is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Sebe the shepe of y slaughter, which shal be slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they y sell chē, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: See their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I no more spare those that dwell in the londe (saith the LORDE) but lo, I wil deliuer the people, every man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kynge: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their bondes wil not I deliuer them.

I myselfe fedde y slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) ad rote vnto me two stanes: the one I called louyngemelesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. These shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye w them, nether had they eny delyre in me. Then sayde I: I wil fede you no more, the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe, & let the remnant eate, every one the flesh of his neighbour. I rote also my louyngemelesse staff, ad brake it, that I might disannul the conuenant, which I made with all people. And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yff yethynke it good, brynge hither my pryccys no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, y value that I was pryced at. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it into the pottre (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I rote the xxx. syluers pens, and cast them to the pottre in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might loose the brotherheade betwixte Juda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I wil rayse vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for such as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shall not nourish the thing that is whole: but he shall eat the flesh off such as be fat, and reare their claws in peeces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaue the flocke. The sword shall come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye: his arme shall be clenched vp, and his right eye shall be sore blinded.

The XII. Chapter.

The heavy burthen which y^e LORDE hath deuysed for I^srael.

Thus saith the LORDE, which spred the heauens abroad, layde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man, y^e breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfeit, vnto all the people y^e are rounde aboute her: yee Iuda himself also shall be in the seige agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shall be coarue and reue, and all the people of the earth shall be gathered together agaynst it.

In that daye (saith y^e LORDE) I will make all houses abasshed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, and smyte all the houses of the people with blindness. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hartes: The inhabiteers off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hostes their God. In that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hore burnynge ouen with woodd, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawes: so that they shall consume all the people rounde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusalem also shall be inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stonde.

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Ierusalem, shall be but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the cytesyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shall be as Dauid: and the house of Dauid shall be like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them.

At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as come agaynst Ierusalem. Moreover, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the cytesyns off Ierusalem, will I

pour out the spere of grace and paynt: that they shall loke vpon me, whom they haue feared: and they shall beweepe me, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne. Yee and be fery for him, as men are fery for their first childe.

Then shall there be a greates mourninge at Ierusalem, like as the lamentacion at Ieremnon in the felde off Maggadon. And the londe shall bewaile, euery tyme by the selues: The tynred off the house of Dauid them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The tynred off the house of Leui them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The tynred off the house of Simeon them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: In like maner, all the other gentes, euerychone by them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues.

The XIII. Chapter.

In that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the cytesyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, to wash off synne and vnclemesse. And then (saith the LORDE off hostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: so that they shall no more be put in remembraunce.

As for the false prophetes also and the vncleane spere, I shall take them out off the londe: So that yf eny off them prophesy eny more, his owne father and mother shall begat him, shall saye vnto him: Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophesyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his owne when he prophesieth: nether shall they weare sacke clothes eny more, to disceame with all. But he shall be sayne to saye: I am a prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. And yf it be sayde vnto him: How came thou weandes then in thine hondes? he shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

Arise (o thou swearde) vpon my shepheard, and vpon the prynce of my people, saith the LORDE off hostes: Smyte the shepheard and the shepe shall be scatred abroad, and I will Ierne myne honde to the litle ones. And it shall come to passe (saith the LORDE) that in all the londe two partes shall be cut, but the thirde parte shall remayne therein. And the same thirde parte wil I brynge thorow the fyre, and will clense them, as the syluer is clensed: yee and trye them, like as golde is tryed.

Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shall saye: LORDE, my God.

The XIII. Chapter.

Beholde, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the heathen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shall be wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shall go awaye into captiuite, and the residue of the people shall not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynst those heathen, as men vse to fight in the daye of battell. The shall his feete stide vpon the mount oliuere, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalem. And yf mount oliuere shall cleue in two, eastwarde, & westwarde so yf there shall be a greates valley: & the halff mount shall remoue towarde the north, and the other halff towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hill, for the valley off the hylls shall reach vnto Asal. Yee shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off O. Iudas tynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God shall come, and all sanctes with him. In that daye shall it not be light, but colde and frost. This shall be that specyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it shall be light. In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the halff parte of them towarde the east see, and the other halff towarde the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. And the LORDE himself shall be tynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shall there be one LORDE only, and his name shall be but one. Men shall go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibeon to Remmon, and from y^e south to Ierusalem. She shall be set vp, and inhabited in hir place: from Ben Jamins porte, vnto the place of the first porte, and vnto y^e corner porte: and from the tower of Zanoel, vnto the tynge wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shall be no more cursinge, but Ierusalem shall be safely inhabited.

This shall be the plage, wherewith y^e LORDE wil smyte all people, that haue sought agaynst Ierusalem: namely, their flesh shall consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their feete: their eyes shall corrupte in their holes, and their tange shall consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greates sedicion amonge them, so that one man shall take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neyghboure. Iuda shall fight also agaynst Ierusalem, and the goodes of all the heathen shall be gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greates multitude off clothes. And so shall this plage go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooft, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remayneth then of all y^e people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shall go vp yearly, to worshippe the tynge (euery y^e LORDE off hostes) and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worshippe the tynge (euery the LORDE off hostes) vpon the same shall come no rayne. Yf the tynred off Egipte go not vp & come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shall be the plage wherewith y^e LORDE wil smyte all heathen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: yee this shall be the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shall the rydinge geer of y^e horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the fetters in the LORDES house shall be like the basens before the altier: yee all the fetters in Ierusalem and Iuda, shall be holy vnto the LORDE off hostes: and all they that slaye offerunges, shall come and take of them, and bight them therein. And at that tyme there shall be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORDE.

What Malachy conceynerh.

Chap. I. The benefites of God, shewed special- ly vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punysshment of the vnthankfulnesse, vnfaith- fulnesse and couetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II. He threatneth punysshment and con- fusion vnto the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III. Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Of the abrogacion of the olde, leuiticall prest- heade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearful daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LOR- DE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I haue loued you, sayeth y LOR- DE: ad yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE: yet haue I loued Ja- cob, and hated Esau: Yee I haue ma- de his hillcs waist, and his heretage a wyl- dernesse for diaggos. And though Edem say- de: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth y LORDE of hoostes) what they buyl- ded, that brake I downe: so that it was cal- led a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie, withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, ad ye youre selues must confesse, that y LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shul- de not a sonne honoure his father, and a ser- uant his master? If I be now a father, whe- re is myne honoure? yf I be the LORDE, whe- re am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoos- tes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my na- me. And yf ye saye: wherin haue we despi- sed thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene- bled vpon myne altier. And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the altier of the LORDE is not to be regarded. If ye offre yf blynde, is not yf euell? And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cōtent with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

The ij. Chap.

And now make youre prayer before the, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for ha- thinges haue ye done. Shal he regar- re personnes (chynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut yf doore, or to m- dle yf fyre vpon myne altier for naughte? Ie- ue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: and as for the meat offeringe, I wil not accepte it at youre honde. For from the- rynging vpon yf some vnto yf goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the Gentiles: Yee in every place shal there sac- fice be done, and a cleane meat offeringe offe- up vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the heithen, sayeth the LORDE of hoos- tes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye sa- ye, the altier of yf LORDE is not to be regar- ded, and the thinge that is set ther vpon, is worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but labour and tra- uayle, and thus haue ye thoughte some atk, (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) offeringe robbery, yee the lame and the sick. I haue brought me in a meat offeringe, shal I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LOR- DE: Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kynge (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearful amonge the heithen.

The II. Chapter.

And now (o ye prestes) this com- mendment teacheth you: yf ye wil heare it; ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) I wil sende a curse vpon you, and curse youre blessinges: yee curse them all yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal r- uppe youre sede, and cast downe in your- ces: euen the donge of youre solemne festes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shal knowe, that I haue sent this commande- ment vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Levi, might stonde, sayeth yf LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace w- him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, ad had my name in reuerence. The lawe of truth was in his mouth, and there was no mys- nesse founde in his lippes. He walked w- me in peace ad equitye, and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. In the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that man maye like the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hoostes. But as for you, ye are gone cleane out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be of- fended at the lawe: ye haue broken the coue- naunt of Levi, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all yf peo- ple: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

Haue we not all one father? hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despise his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Juda offended: yee the abhominacion is do- ne in Israel and in Ierusalem, for Juda hath defiled the Sanctuary of the LORDE, which he loved, and hath kepte the daughter of a strange God. But the LORDE shal destroye the which doth this (yee both the master & the scholar) out off the tabernacle of Jacob, with him that offereth vpon meat offeringe vnto the LORDE of hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the altier of the LORDE is covered with teares wepyng and mournyng: so that I wil no- more regarde the meat offeringe, nether wil I receaue or accepte eny thinge at youre ho- des.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte yf and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despised her: yet is she thyne owne co- panyon and married wife.

So dyd not the one, & yet had he an ex- allent spire. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore let well to youre spire, & let no man despise yf wife of his youth. If thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel and geue her a clothinge for the scome, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Let well then to youre spire, and despise her not. Ye grene the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye sa- yether withall haue ye greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or do where is the God that punyssheth?

The III. Chapter.

Beholde, I wil sende my messaunger, which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal soone come to his temple, yee euen the messaunger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for.

Beholde, he commeth, sayeth the LORDE

The iij. Chap. Ho. cii.

of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his commynge? Who shalbe able to endu- re, when he appeareth? For he is like a gold- smythes fyre, ad like wast heres sope. He shal- lyt him downe to trye and to clense yf syluer, he shal pouge the children of Levi, and pu- rifye them like as golde and syluer: that they maye bryng meat offeringes vnto the LOR- DE in rightuousnes. Then shal the offeringes of Juda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge & in the yeres afore tyme. I wil come & pu- nysh you, & I myself wil be a swift roynes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduoute- rers, agaynst false swearers: yee ad agaynst those, that wydgeously kepe backe the hye- lynges dewey: which were the wyddowes & the fatherlesse, & oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. For I am the LORDE yf chaunge not, & ye (o children of Jacob) wil not leaue of: ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinauces, & sene yf tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kep- te them.

Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offeringes. Therefore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Bryng euen Tythe in to my barne, yf there maye be meat in myne house: and pro- uen me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessinge with plenteousnesse. Yee I shal reprove the consu- mer for youre sakes, so that he shal not eate vpon the fute of youre grounde, nether shal yf vynyarde be baren in the selde, sayeth yf LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shal be a pleasant lode, sayeth the LORDE off hoos- tes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sa- yeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sa- yed: It is but lost labour, to serue God: What profit haue we for keepyng his com- mandmentes, and for walkyng humbly before the LORDE off hoostes? Ther- fore maye we saye, that the proude are hap- pie, and that they which deale with yngod- lynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth. Yee it is before him a memoriall booke written for such as feare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I will make (saith y^e LORDE of hostes) they shal be myne owne possession: and I will fauoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne sonne, that doth him seruyce. Turne you therfore, and conside what difference is betwixte the righteous and vngodly: betwixte him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not.

D For marke, the daye cometh that shall burne as an ouen: and all the proude, yee and all such as do wickednesse, shal be straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne the vp (saith the LORDE of hostes) so that it shal leane them nether roote ner bryanch. But vnto you that feare my name, shall the Remembre the lawe of Moses mynauant, which I committed vnto Moyses for all Israel, with the statutes and manances. Beholde, I will sende vnto you the prophet: before the comynge off the sonne the great and fearfull LORDE, he shall turne the hertes of the fathers to their children, and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and smyte the earth with cursynge.

The translatoure vnto the reader.

These booke (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged among the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayst perceiue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chiefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnant vnto the open and manifest truth in the other booke of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle set by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstance in all thynges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntuly & perversly aledged. Truth it is: A mas face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether can it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a still water. These & many other dark places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myrre with blynde and curvions opynions of men, which haue cast such a myst afore the eyes of y simple, that as longe as they be not conferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as curvionsnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readeest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for such daumes, visions and dark sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the spere of God (which is the author therof) shall lede the in all truth.

As for the prayer of Salomo (which thou findest not herin) & prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde booke of the kynge, so that it appereth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge any of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodorios translatioun. Neuertheles, both because of those y be weake and simple soules, and for their sakes also that loue such swete songes of thankes geuynge: I haue not left them out to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to geue thankes vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The iij. booke of Esdras.

The first Chapter.

Ald Josias helde the feast of Easter in Jerusalem vnto the LORDE, and slewe y Passeouer the iiii. daye of the first moneth. He set y prestes also in ordie (acordinge to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmetes in the temple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holymynisters of Israel, that they shulde haue lowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arte of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomo the sonne of Dauid had buylde and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon y shoulders. Now serue yod LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre villagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke y ye all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordunge and distribucion of the pryncipall men which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childre of Israel. Byll y Passeouer, & prepare offeringes for y brethren, and do acordinge to the commaundment of y LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto y people y was soude, Josias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thousande oxen. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, acordinge as he had promysed: & to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe & an hundred oxen. Moreover Jechonias & Semeias and Elathanael brethren, & Zebadiah, Jehiel and Josabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundred bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Levites stode goodly in their ordie, and had the vncleanned breth thow out y trybes. And after the ordunge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offered vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, acordinge as it is wrytten in the booke of Moses, & so they rested the Easter-lambe as acordinge was. As for the thre offeringes & the other, they dyght the in ketels & porters, & sett them before the people to good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offered the fatt, vntill the tyme was expyred, but the Levites prepared for them selues & for their brethren the childre of Aaron. The syngers also & children of Asaph, stode in their ordie, acordinge as Dauid had deuysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary & Jeditha, which were appoynted by the kynge. Moreover the porters & doorekeepers stode by the doores & diligently, so y none wente out of his stondinge & seruyce: for their brethren (the Levites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offeringe of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, & offered thre offeringes besyde y sacrifice of y LORDE, acordinge to y comaundment of kynge Josias.

So the childre of Israel which were the present helde an honorable Passeouer, & the feast of swete bred vij. dayes longe. Yee such a Passeouer was not kepte in Israel, from y tyme of the prophet Sammel. And all the kynge of Israel helde not such an Easter, as this which kynge Josias helde, & y prestes, y levites, y Jewes & all Israel, of all the y were at Jerusalem. In y xviij. yere of y raigne of Josias was this Passeouer kepte. And whan a perfecte hert dyd kynge Josias ordie all his workes (before y LORDE) & y thinges y were wrytten of hi in tymes past, concernynge those y synned & were vngodly agaynst y LORDE before all people, & y sought not the worde of y LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kynge Josias, pharao & kynge of Egypte were vp, & came towarde Carcamis by Euphrates, & Josias were to meete hi. Then sent the kynge of Egypte vnto Josias, sayenge: what haue I to do with y, o kynge of Juda? I am not sent of y LORDE to fight agaynst y, for my warre is vpo Euphrates, go thou y waye home agayne in all y haist. And Josias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but undertoke to fight agaynst him, & herte ned not vnto þe worde of þe prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battail agaynst him in þe felde of Mageddo. And the prynces pleased to kynge Josias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruantes: Carry me awaye out of the battayll, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruantes toke him awaye out of the fronte of the battayll. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Ierusalem, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Jewry they mourned for Josias, yee the rulers also & their wyues made lamentacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

D These thinges are written in the boke of of the stories of þe kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes & wordes of kynge Josias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his understandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wyrtē in the boke of the kynges of Israel & Iuda. And þe people toke Jechonias the sonne of Josias, & made him kynge in þe steade of Josias his father, whan he was xxxij. yere olde. And he reigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kynge of Egypte put him downe, & he shulde not raigne in Ierusalem, & rayssed vp a carynge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one taler of golde. The kynge of Egypte also made Joachim his brother kynge of Iuda & Ierusalem. As for the of the kynges counsell & the kynge himself and Saracles his brother, he toke the, & caried the awaye prisoners into Egypte. Yve & twentie yere olde was Joachim, whan he was made kynge in the londe of Iuda and Ierusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. After this, Nabuchodonosor þe kynge of Babilō came vp, bounde him w̄ bandes of yron, & caried him vnto Babilō. Nabuchodonosor also toke all þe vessell þe were halowed in the temple of the LORDE, & all þe Jewels, & caried the vnto Babilon, & brought the in to his owne temple at Babilon. Of his vndermes & vngodlynes, it is wyrtē in þe boke of the actes of þe kynges. And Joachim his sonne reigned in his steade: he was made kynge beinge xviij. yere olde, & reigned but thre monethes & x. dayes in Ierusalem, & dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yere, Nabuchodonosor sent & caused him be brought vnto Babilon w̄ þe holy vessels of þe LORDE, & made Sedechias his brother kynge of Iuda and Ierusalem, whan he was xxi. yere olde: and he reigned xi. yere.

And he dyd euell also in þe sight of þe LORDE, & cared not for þe wordes þe were spokē to hi by þe prophet Jeremy at þe mouth of the LORDE. And wher as he had made on oth vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he manforn himself, & fell fro him harynge a stiff necke, & trasgressed all þe statutes & ordinances of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also & heades of þe people of the LORDE dyd moche euell, & became vngodly, more the the heithen, beinge defyled in all maner of abominacions: yee & defyled þe holy temple of the LORDE at Ierusalem. And the God of the fathers sent his messaungers vnto the, to comen them backe & to call the agayne fro their synnes: for he wolde sayne haue spared the for his holy tabernacles sake. Nevertheless, they had his messaungers in derision: & let what God spake vnto the by his prophets, they made but a spoote of it. This drew on longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth w̄ his people for their vngodlynes, & tyll he caused the kynges of þe Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men w̄ the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy temple, & spared nobody, neyther yonge ner olde, neyther mayden ner yonge man: but they were all deluyered into the power of the kynges of þe Caldees, & all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, & caried them vnto Babilon. As for the house of the LORDE, they barte, & brake downe the walles of Ierusalem, & fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayned w̄ the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they þe prisoners & bondes of þe kynge of Babilon, tyll they were deluyred & raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest: namely, all the tyme þe it laye wayest, had it rest & quyetnes lxxvij. yeres.

The ii. Chapter.

Now whā kynge Cyrus reigned ouer the Persians, & whā the LORDE wolde performe the worde þe he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy, the LORDE rayssed vp the sperte of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persians, so þe he caused this kyng to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of the Persians: The LORDE of Israel that þe LORDE hath made me kynge of the lode, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Jewry. If there be any now your people, & LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute þe place, shal helpe the, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought w̄ a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem.

D Then the principall me out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben-Jamin stode vp, so dyd the prestes also & the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. And they that were aboute them, helped them w̄ all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vpon the. Kynge Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornaments, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon had caried awaye from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deluyered them to Mithradatus his treasurer, and by him they were deluyered to Salmanasar þe debyce in Jewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerxes the kynge of Persia, these men: Balamus and Mithradatus, Sabellius, Rachimus, Balthemus, Semelius & scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria & in other places vnder y dominion therof, wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerxes, wherein they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Jewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made a fter this maner:

Syn, thy seruantes Rachimus the story wyter, Sabellius the scribe, & other iudges of thy court in Celosynia and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to þe lord the kyn that the Jewes which are come vp fro you vnto vs into the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the temple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be set vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue tributes and carynges, but also rebell vnto agaynst the kynge. And for so much as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thoughte it reason, to thynke no scome of it, but to shewe it vnto þe lord the kynge, & to certifie him therof: to the intent yf it plea se the kynge, he maye cause it be sought in the boke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warninge wyrtē, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Jewes which dwell ther in, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherfore now we certifie oure lord the kynge, that yf this cite be buylde and occupied agayne, & the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosynia and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rachimus the story wyter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius & scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are disobedient, and haue caused moche warre, & that mightie kynges haue raygned in Ierusalem, which also haue rayssed vp carynges of Syria and Phenices. Wherfore, I haue commaunded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so much as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rachimus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the writinge of kynge Artaxerxes, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moche people offore, and forbade them to buylde. And so they left off from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the secōde yere of kynge Darius.

The iii. Chapter.

Kynge Darius made a greate feast vnto his seruantes, vnto all his court, & to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes & rulers that were vnter him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundred & xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dynten beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commaunded amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let every one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kynge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coveringes: he shall make him a costly charette & a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde & principall nexte vnto kynge Darius, & that because of his wysdomme, and shalbe called yf kynge's kynsman.

B So every one wrote his meaninge, sealed it and layed it vnder the kynges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kynge aryseth, we will geue him oure wryttinges: and loke whose worde the kynge and his chiefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secōde wrote: The kynge is stronger. The thirde wrote: women haue yet more strength, but aboute all thinges yf trueh teacheth awaye the victory. Now whan the kynge was rysen vp, they toke their wryttinges and deliuered them vnto him, and so herd them. Then sent he forth to call all his chiefe lordes, all the debytes & rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the counsell, the wryttinges were red before thm. And he commaunded to call for yf yonge mē, yf they might declare their meanynges theselues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, yf kynge sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) & sayde: O ye men, wyne is marvelous stronge, and ouercōmeth them yf drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, & bryngeth both the poore man & yf kynge to dorage and vanite. Thus doth it also to the bondman and with the fre, with the poore & ryche: it taketh awaye their vnderstandinge, and maketh them carles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny henynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that yf thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kynge, nor yf he is in an cōtrey, & yf he ought not to do soch thinges. Moreover, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness & loue: but as soone as they are droncke, they drawe out the swerde & wil fight: & whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, & so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Judge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tounge.

The III. Chapeer.

D Then the secōde (which had sayde, yf the kynge was stronger) beganne to speake, sayenge: O ye men, are not they the strongest & most excellent, yf cōquer the lōde & the see, & all yf is in yf see & in the land? Now is the kynge lōde of all these thinges, & hath dominion of the all: & loke what he cōmaūdet, it is done. If he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hillis, wallis & towres. They are slayne, & slayen her men & hem selues, & ouer passe not yf kynge's worde. If they get the victory, they brynge the kynge all the spoyle. Likewyse, whether yf medle not w warres & fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge ttrybutte vnto yf kynge. And yf yf kynge also ne do but cōmaūde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaūde to forgiue, they forgiue: yf he cōmaūde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd drynke waye, they dryue awaye: yf he cōmaūdet buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūdet breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaūdet to plante, they plante. The cōmen people & rulers are obedient vnto him. And yf kynge in the meane season syteth hī downe, eateth and drynket, & taketh his rest: the kypeth watch rounde aboute yf kynge, & none of the darre gett him out of yf waye, so do his oūer busynes, but must be obediēt vnto yf kynge at a worde. Judge ye now o ye men, how shal he not be go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tounge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of women & of yf trueh) beganne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not yf greates kynge, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine yf excellē. Who is it thē, yf hath yf lordshipe ouer the? Haue not women beine the kynge, & all yf people yf rule these thinges? Haue not women beine thē, & broughet hē vp, yf plantet the vine, wherout yf wyne cōmeth? They make gametes for all mē, they geue hond vnto all man, & without women can not men lyue. If they gether golde & syluer & all precious thinges, & if a sayre & wel fauoured womā, they leane all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, & gape vpon her, & haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer & golde, at any maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueh his father yf brought him vp, he leaueh his owne naturall cōtrey, and cleuet h vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, nether, nether countrey. By this then ye must knowe, yf women haue yf domynion ouer yf.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde & goeth his waye to sleale, to kyll, to murder, to sayle vpon the see, & seyth a lyon, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath kollen, disceaued & robbed, he bringeth it vnto his lōne. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes & become bondmen for their wyues sake: many one also haue perished, & haue bene slayne, & haue synned because of women.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greates in his power, & all lōdes sōde in awe of him, & no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, yf Apame (yf daughter of the greates kynge Darius) the kynge's cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpon the nyght hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Moreover the kynge loket vpon her w open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, & to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not women then stronger? Create is the earth, and he is the heauen: that doth these thinges. Then the kynge & the pryces loket one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueh: O ye men, are not women stronger? Create is the earth, he is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rounde aboute, and fetcheth his course agayne to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greates is the trueh, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth callet vpon the trueh, the heauen prayseth it, all woites shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, women are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their woites are vnrighteous, and there is no trueh in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. As for yf trueh, it endureth, and is all waye stronger: it lyueth, and cōquereth for evermore without ende.

D The trueh accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte ryche or poore, betwixte yf mightie or symple, but doth righte vnto every mā, whether they be euil or good, & all men are lowyngly dealt withall in the woites of it. In the iudgement of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kyngdome & power and maiesty for evermore. Blessed be the God of trueh.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all yf peeples cried & sayde: Create is the trueh, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Are what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt syt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and premysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vpon Jerusalem, and to sende agayne all the vessels and Jewels, that were taken awaye out of Jerusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne. And thy mynde was to buylde vpon the temple, which the Edomites brete, whan Jerusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely O kynge is the thinge that I requyre, this is yf maiesty, which, I desyre & are of the: that thou performe the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kysed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all yf lordes and nobles, yf they shulde conueye him forth, & all them yf wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all yf shreues yf were in Celosyria & Phenyces, & vnto Libanus, yf they shulde harie cedre trees from Libanus vnto Jerusalem, to buylde yf cite withall. Moreover he wrote vnto all yf Jewes that were gone out of his realme in to Jewry because of the fre dome, yf no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their deces: and that all their lōdes which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomites shulde geue ouer the cities and vyllages of the Jewes, which they had taken in: yee & that they shulde yearly geue xx. talentes to yf buylde of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brentofferings (as it is commaūded) ten talentes yearly also: And yf all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they & their children, and all the prestes.

He wrote the greatnesse also, & commaūded that the holy garment shulde be geuen thē, wherin they ministred: and wrote that commaūdementes shulde be geuen to the Levites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Jerusalem buylde vp: and cōmaūded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell & Cyrus had separated from Babilon: & all & Cyrus had geue in comaunderment, & same charged he also, & it shulde be done, & sent vnto Jerusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face toward Jerusalem, & prayed & kinge of heauē, & sayde: Of y cometh victory, of the cometh wysdome & cleannesse, & I am thy seruante. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wysdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of our fathers.

And so he toke the letters, & wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethē & were at Babilon, & they prayed & God of their fathers, & he had geue them refreshinge & lyberte to go vp, & to buylde Jerusalem & the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes & gladnesse, seven dayes longe.

The V. Chapter.

After this, were the princiall mē of all & villagies chosen in the trybes & kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wyues and children, with their seruantes and maydens, with all their catell & substance. And Darius the kynge sent with them a thousande hoysmen, to conuey them safely vnto Jerusalem: and their brethē were glad, playenge vpon instrumentes, and synge.

These also are they of Jewry, which came vp and turned Agayne vnto Jerusalem, out of the captiuyte that Nabuchodonosor & kynge of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. All these mynistered in the Sanctuary, & were seruantes of Salomonen iij. C. and lxxij.

D These folowinge are they, & wrote vp fro Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Camela & Careth) & might not shewe forth their cities & kynreddes, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus, & sonnes of Eub, & sonnes of Ezechodaius. Of & prestes & executed & office of & presthode, & were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, & sonnes of Achifos, the sonnes of Abbin, which man one of & daughters of Phargelen, & was named, after him. The writinge of & same kynred was sought in & register of their generation, but it was not founde: & therefore were they forbydde to execute & office of & presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Aspharas, & they shulde haue no porcion in & Sanctuary, yll there rose vp an hie prest, & were well instructe in the playne clearnes & truth. Of all Israel (besyde seruantes & maydens) there were xliij. M. iij. C. & xl. Now were there of seruantes & maydens, viij. M. iij. C. & xxxij. Of syngeing mē & syngeing wmen there were ij. C. & lxx. Some hundred & xxx. Camels. Seven thousande & xxxij. horses. Two hundred thousande & xlv. Mules. Syne thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, whan they came to Jerusalem, & wol be buylde & sett vp y temple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the temple, to & treasure & to & seruyce of the Sanctuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, & an hundred prestes garments. And so dwelt the prestes & the Levites, & the people & wente out to Jerusalem & in the countre there aboute, the syngeers also & the porters, every one of Israel in his owne lande.

So whan the seventh moneth came, and whan the childē of Israel were every man at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the courte, which was before & east doore. And there stode Jesus the sonne of Josedece and his brethien & prestes, & Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethien, settinge vp an altier, to offere brient sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in & lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other countre es, and the heichen out of all londes set vp the altier in his place, and offred sacrifices & brient offeringes vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe. And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. And all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of & seventh moneth to offere vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylde. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpenters, money, meate & drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue carres, & they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to be leastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the haven of Joppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeined, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians.

And in the seconde yere they came in to the temple of God at Jerusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, and Jesus the sonne of Josedece, and their brethien the prestes and Levites, and all they that were come vnto Jerusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, & layed the foundation of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yere & they were come in to Jewry and Jerusalem. And they appoynted the Levites (that were aboute xx. yere olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Jesus and his sonnes and his brethien all the Levites stode together, and perfourmed the lawe & ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

The iij. boke of Esdras.

And the prestes stode and had their garments & trompettes, & the Levites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng chantes, and prayes vnto the LORDE, accordinge as Dauid the kynge of Israel had ordeyned. And the songe that they dyd synge vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O synge vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for ever. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and sunge with loude voyce, pray synge the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came also from amonge the prestes and Levites the rulers and elders, accordinge to the trybes and kynreds (such as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so much, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpon the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Juda and Ben Jamim, to knowe what that troppetyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued yf it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, & wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Jesua and to the rulers of the villages, & sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde w you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE, & we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Asbazarath the kynge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Jesua and the rulers of the villages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God w vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus the kynge of the Persians hath commaunded vs.

But the heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Jewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpon them piously, stopped such as brought any thinge to them, forbade them to buylde, & hyndered those that made the passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished: & this continued so longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: & so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yere, vntill yf raigne of kynge Darius.

the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Jesua the sonne of Josedec stode vp, and began to buylde the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE had pedy them.

At the same tyme came Syssenes the vnder shene in Syria and Phenices, with the landloides and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden & commaunded you to buylde the house? to make therof and all other thinges agayne? And who are the worke men, that buylde them? Therfor the elders of the Jewes had sene the grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not let (though they were prouoked thereto) be buylded on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaued from him. The letter that the men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

Syssenes the vnder shene in Syria and Phenices, and the landloides with them panids, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their saluacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lord the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Jewry, & wente to Jerusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate house of God and the temple, with greate costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the wallas: yee they made greate haist with the worke, & helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence & worship is it made. Then ased we the elders, who had commaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, so yf it be that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those yf rulers of the worke. So they gave vs this answer: we are the seruantes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: & as for this house, it hath bene buylded and set vp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But when oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, & synned agaynst the God of Israel, he gaue the ouer in to the hand of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe the house and brent it, and caried awaye the people prisoners vnto Babilon.

Nevertheless, in the first yere that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon, Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp the house agayne: and all the ornaments that Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jerusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriat his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and deliuered them to Zorobabel & to Salmanasar the vnder shene, commaunding them, yf they shulde buynge those same ornaments agayne to Jerusalem in to yf temple, & to begynne from thence forth, to buylde the temple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of yf LORDES house at Jerusalem, and ever sence haue they buylded, & yet is it not ended. And therfor (O kynge) yf thou thynkest it good, let it be soughte in the Lybaries & rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde there, that it is done w the counsell and cosent of kynge Cyrus, and yf our laide yf kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

Then commaunded kynge Darius, to seeke in the Lybaries: and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde such a wrytinge: In the first yere of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus commaunded, yf the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem shulde be buylded agayne (so odours to be made there continually vnto the LORDE) whose berth shalbe ten cubites, yf bredth ix. cubites & iij. square w thre hewen stones, w a losse of cymbre of the same countre, yee w a new losse, & the expenses therof to be geuen of yf house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornaments of golde & syluer, yf Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Jerusalem, where they were afore. Syssenes also the vnder shene in Syria and Phenices, yf prynces and their companyons, and the other yf be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle nor haue eny thinge to do with that place.

Cyrus haue commaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole vp: & haue ordeyned them, to helpe those yf be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: & out of the trybute and taryng that is yearly raysed vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be deliuered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lammes, & coine, salt, wyne and oyle, and that continually every yere: after the expences which the prestes that be at Jerusalem, shew to be made daylye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hyest God, for the kynge and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let yf be proclaimed also on euery syde, that who

o euer breaketh or despyseth this comaundment of yf kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a gallow (made of his owne good) & all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto yf kynge. The LORDE therfore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all yf kynges and people, that vnder take by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncurteously w the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem. I Darius the kynge haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The VII. Chapter.

Then Syssenes yf vnder shene in Celosynia and Phenices, and the other landloides with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordered, were diligent in the holy workes, & were felow helpers with the olde rulers of the Jewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, when Aggens and Zachary prophesied. And they performed all thinges thorow the comaundment of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxiij. daye of the moneth Adar in yf vi. yere of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes & the Levites, & the other that were come out of captiuyte, & such as were ioyned vnto them, dyd accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedicacon of the temple they offred an hundred oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lammes, & xij. goates for the symies of all the people of Israel, after yf nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also & the Levites stode arayed in the prestly garments, after yf trybes, ouer all yf workes of the LORDE God of Israel, accordinge to yf boke of Moses, and the pointers by all the doores.

And the children of Israel (w those yf we re come out of captiuyte) helde the Passouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, when the prestes and the Levites were sanctified,

They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Levites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kyled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes & for them selues. And the childre of Israel & came out of captiuyte, & escaped fro all & abhominacions of the heithen, sought the LORD, and kept the feast of unleavened bred viij. daies longe, eatinge & drynkyng & were mery before the LORD: & the LORD had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, & comforted their handes to the workes of & LORD God of Israel.

The viii. Chapter.

After him, whan Artaxerxes the kynge of & Persia raigned, there wote unto him Esdras the sonne of Sarras, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, & sonne of Sallu, the sonne of Sadoc, & sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amarias, & sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Bocoas, & sonne of Abisu, & sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, & sonne of Aaron & first prest. This Esdras wote up from Babilon: for he had good understandinge in & lawe of Moyses, & was geue of the LORD God of Israel, to be taught & done in dede. And & kynge fauoured him, & dyd him greate worshippe and honoure, after all his desyes. There wente up with him also certayne of & children of Israel, of the prestes, of & Levites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of & temple at Jerusalem.

In the viij. yere of the raigne of kynge Artaxerxes, in the v. moneth, & is in the viij. yere of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, & came the hye waye to Jerusalem after his commandement, like as the LORD had prospered their iourney. For in these Esdras gat greate instruccion, & he shulde leaue none of & thinges behynde, which were in & lawe & commandementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes & indgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerxes, & deliuered & wrytinges (& were come fro Artaxerxes the kynge) to Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of the LORD: And this is & cōpye of & letter: Kynge Artaxerxes sendeth his gretinge unto Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of & LORD: Of frendshipe & good will I have ordeyned and charged, yf there be any of the Jewes, of & prestes & Levites in my realme, which desyret & is contēt to go w the unto Jerusalem, & he maye do it. Therefore yf any be mynded to beare the cōpany, let the come together, go w the like as I am contēt & mynister des my cōcellers: so se what they do at Jerusalem & in Jewry, & kepe & thinges as thou hast in & lawe of the LORD: to bringe the giftes unto God the LORD of Israel, & I & my frendes have power to Jerusalem, & all the syluer & golde & is in countre of Babilon, unto & LORD in Jerusalem, w the thinge & is geue for the people in the LORD temple at Jerusalem: so that the same syluer & golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe & goates, & ocher that beloge to these thinges: and they maye offer sacrifices unto the LORD, upon the altar of the LORD, which is at Jerusalem.

And what so euer thou & thy brethre do w the syluer & golde, & do after & mynister after the cōmandement of the LORD: God: & like wyse w all the holy vessels, & geue the for the seruyce of the house of the LORD: thy God: & ocher thinges whiche ner is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, & shalbe geue the of the kynge measure: & loke what thou with thy brethre do w the golde and syluer, that do after wil of the LORD. And & kynge Artaxerxes haue commaunded the keepers of treasure in Syria and Phemices, that whiche ner Esdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORD doth wyte, it shalbe geue him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lykemaner: Of come also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdrith vessels of wyne, & ocher plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of & hyest God, that the wrath of God arise in the realme of the kynge and of his lordes. I commaunde you also, that yf any ne no tarynge ner tribute of the prestes, Levites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to meble any thinge agaynst them. As for the (& Esdras) set thou iudges & arbitrers in the whole lande of Syria & Phemices, after the wysdome of God: & let me all soch as are ignorant in the lawe of God thy LORD, and let all them that fend agaynst the lawe, be punished: whether it be with death, with payne, or to be banished.

Then sayde Esdras & wryter: Blessed & God of oure fathers, that hath geue good a mynde and wyll in to the hart of the kynge, to magnifie his house & is at Jerusalem, and hath made me to be accepted in the fight of & kynge, of his counsell, of his frendes and of his nobles. And so I was steadfast in my mynde, acordinge as the LORD my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go up with me. And these are the heades (after their kynreds & houses of their fathers) that wente up with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerxes: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of & sonnes of Siamarich, Amenus. Of the sonnes of David, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moabylon, Zorai, and with him ij. C. and lxx. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Jechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and lxx. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gortholias, and lxx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxx. Of the sonnes of Job, Abdias Jeheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Barna, Salimoth the sonne of Josaphia, and with him an C. and lxx. men. Of the sonnes of Bar, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. men. Of the sonnes of Esad, Johannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Abdonica those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam & sonne of Gebel and Semeias, & with him lxx. men. All these called I together by the water Chia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

As for the sonnes of the prestes and Levites, I founde none there. Then sent I unto Eleazar, & Eccelem, and Masman, & Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Joribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū (these were the leders and men of experice) & I sent them worde, that they shulde come unto Loddens, which was by the place of the treasury, & commaunded them that they shulde speake unto Loddens and to his brethre, & to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORD oure God. And w the mightie hāde of oure LORD God, they brought unto vs mē of good experice, from amonge the sonnes of Moab, the sonne of Levi, & some of Israel, Sebeiam & the sonnes & his brethre Asbin & Anin, of whom there were xviij. From amonge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, & their sonnes were xx. men. And of them & served in the temple, whom David had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministered for the worke unto the Levites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened up in wrytinge.

Then commaunded I a fastynge unto & yenge men before the LORD, & I mighte desyre of him a prosperous iourney & a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: & I durst not requyre of the kynge men of hoise & of fore, to conueye vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde unto the kynge, that & power of the LORD oure God shulde be with them, that sette him w theire whole hert. And therfore we besought God oure LORD earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull unto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge & rulers of the people, & from & prestes of & temple xij. men, & Sebeia & Mania, & ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied the golde & the syluer & all & prestes ly ornāmentes of the house of & God, which the kynge & his counsell, & his prynces & whole Israel had geue. And whan I had weied it, I gaue the an C. talentes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, & of golde vessell seue tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, & saide unto the: ye also are holy unto the LORD, & the vessels are holy, & the golde & the syluer is promised unto the LORD the God of & fathers. Be diligent now & kepe it, untill the tyme & ye deliuer it to the rulers of the people, to & prestes, to the Levites & to & pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Jerusalem, & in the chanibre of the house of oure God.

So & prestes & the Levites which receiued of me the golde, the syluer & the vessell, brought it to Jerusalem in to the temple of the LORD. And from Chia we brake up the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Jerusalem. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weied golde & syluer was deliuered in & house of the LORD the fourth daye, unto Marimoth the sonne of Jor the prest, & w him was Eleazar & sonne of Phineas, and with the were Josabbus & sonne of Jesnet, Medias & the sonne of Bannas, & certayne of the Levites to the nombre & to the waigher: & the waight of them was writte up the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offered sacrifice unto the LORD the God of Israel: enē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thankofferinge, all to the sacrifice of the LORD. And & kynge's cōmission deliuered they unto & steward

Then spake Atharathes vnto Esdras the hye prest & reder, & to the Leuites & taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: & all they & had herde the lawe, wepte. So Esdras sayde: Departe yo^r waye then, & eate the best, & drynke the sweetest, & sende giftes vnto them & haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye soory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, & sent rewardes vnto the & had nothinge, & they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Jerusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the cōuenant of y^e LORDE God of Israel.

The seconde boke of y^e prophete Esdras: y^e sonne of Saraias, y^e sonne of Azarias, y^e sonne of Zelchia, y^e sonne of Sallu, the sonne of Sados, the sonne of Achirob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarabias, the sonne of Vsi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui which was prisoner in the lande of the Medes, in the tyme of Artaxerxes kynge of Persia.

And the woide of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: So thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their chuldren the wickednesse, which they haue done agaynst me, that they maye tell their chuldren the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto strange goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egypte, from the house of bondage? But they haue provoked me to wiath, & despyed my counsels, pulled out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & noutoure. How longe shal I forbear them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sake: Pharaos & his seruantes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne: All y^e nations haue I destroyed and rote out before them, and in y^e east haue I brought twoluedes and people to naughte, euen Tyre & Sidon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speke thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I led you thowr the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes since the begynnynge. I gaue you Moses to be your capayne, and Aaron to be the prest: I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greates widenes haue I done amonge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiij. boke of Esdras

Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gaue you quales to eate, and rentes for your recourse: Nevertheless ye murmured, and asybed not y^e victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yet this same daie do ye yet murmour. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the wilderness, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wilderness, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue starued y^e Egipcians, then to dye in this wilderness. The had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I shew y^e hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with y^e leaues of the trees. A good pleasure farr londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pherecites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: Whan ye were in the wilderness, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for your blasphemies, but cast a tre in to y^e water, and made ther yner sacre. What shal I do vnto the, O Jacob? Thou Juda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsake me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. Whan ye call vnto me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue despyled your hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytte manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a noisse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my chuldren, and I shulde be youre owne father? I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chickens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. Whan ye offere vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for youre solampne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes, whom ye haue taken and slayne, and cometh their bobbies in peces, whose bloude I wil requyre of youre handes, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chap. Ho. ix.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: I your house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y^e strawe: youre chuldren shal not be frute full, for they haue despyed my cōmaundement, and done y^e thinge y^e is euell before me. Your houses wil I geue vnto a people & shal come, and they y^e neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: & they vnto whō I neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge y^e I cōmaunde the. They haue sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their synnes to remembrance, and knowlege the. I reporte me vnto the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose chuldren reioyse in gladnes: & though they haue not sene me with bodely eyes, yet in sperte they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greates worshippe, and se y^e people that cometh from the east, vnto whom I wyll geue the dukedome of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Michas, of Joel, Abdy, Jonas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messenger) of the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue the my cōmaundementes by my seruantes & prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despyed my counsels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye chuldren, for I am a wyddow & forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heuynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE y^e God, and done y^e thinge that is euell before him. But what shal I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsaken: go youre waye (o my chuldren) and are mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these chuldren, which wolde not kepe my cōuenant: & thou brynge them to cōfucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abroad amonge the heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorn of my cōuenant.

Wo be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vniighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remember what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and asphes. Euen so also wyl I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, & I wil geue them the kyngdome of Jerusalem, which I wolbe haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellyng oymment: they shal nether labour ne be weery. So ye your waye, & ye shall receaue it. Praye for yo^r selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therein. Now is the Kingdome prepared for you, therefore warch. Take heaue and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y^e LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

C And those that be deed wyl I raise vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y^e graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruantes Esay and Jeremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified & prepared for the, xij. trees with dyverse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylk and hony, & seven mountaynes, wher vpon there grewe roses and lilies, wherein I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y^e poore: defende the co^r forelesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sicke: laugh not a lame man to scorne: desfer: be the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y^e sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde & yonge within thy walles: where so euer thou fyndest the deed, take them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurrection. Holde styll (O my people) and take y^e rest, for thy quietnes is come. Geue thy children O thou good noisse, stablish their fete: As for the seruantes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke the from thy nombre, were not thy self.

So when the daye of trouble and heynenes cometh, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be merry and plenteous. The heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothyng agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre everlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childre, for I wyl deliuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childre, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Almighty.

Embrace thy childre, vntyll I come, and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles are ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I receaue a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Iud. But when I came vnto the, they set me a naught, and despyed the commaundment of y^e LORDE. And therefore I saye vnto you O ye heithen, that heare and vnderstande: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you everlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Demerdy to the rewarde of the Kingdome, for the everlastinge light shal shyne vpon you for euermore. See the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulness of youre glory. Iustifie my sauoure openly: O receaue the gift y^e is geuen you, and be glad, geuynge thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heuently Kingdome. Arise vp, and stonde fast beholde the nombre of those that be saved in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmetes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shew vnto thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longedest for, is fulfilled: bestir the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnyng, maye be halowed.

Esdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greates people, whom I coude not nombre, & they all prayed the LORDE with songs of thankesgeuynge. And in the myddest of the there was a yonge ma of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon the one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed y^e angell, & he sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothyngs and put on the immortall, and haue testified & knowen the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what wyl ge perfonne is it, that crowneth them, & putteth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is y^e sonne of God, whom they haue knowen in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commend them, that stode so fast for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what manner of thynges and how greates wondres of the LORDE thy God, thou hast seen.

The III. Chapter.

In the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon & laye troubled vpon my bed, & my thoughtes came vpon my hart: for I sawe y^e desolacion of Sion, & the plenteous wealth of them y^e dwelt at Babilon: & my spere was sore moued, so that I beganne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hyest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnyng, when thou plantedst y^e earth (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundment vnto y^e people, and a body vnto Adam, which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breath of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradise, which garde of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundment to lue y^e waye, which he transgressed, & immediately thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nations, trybes, people & kynnedes out of number. And euerly people walked after their own wil, and dyd nyce thynges before the: and as for thy commaundmentes, they despyed them.

But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou ledest: namely, Noe with his household, of whom come all righteous men. And it happened that, when they y^e dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greates people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now when they all lyued so wickedly before the, thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abiam. In whom thou lovedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an everlastinge couenaunt with him, promysinge him, that thou wouldest neuer forsake his seide. And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greates multitude.

And it happened that when thou leddest his seide out of Egypt, thou broughtest the vp to the mount Sion, bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, moouynge the grounde, makinge the depthes to shake, and troublinge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the seide of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generacions of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from the that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was ouercome, and so be all they y^e are borne of him. Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. Then didest thou raise the vp a seruaunt: called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buyde a cite vnto thy name, and to offere vpon incense and sacrifice vnto the therein. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabiteurs of the cite forsoke the, and in all thynges dyd euill as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite euer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, y^e they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For when I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greates wickednesse, that it coude not be nombred: yee when my soule sawe so many euell doers (in y^e xxx. yeare) my hert sayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in such vngodlynes, and sparest y^e wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserved thine enemies, & this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceaue how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there any other people, y^e knoweth the, sayynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued y^e couenaunt, as Jacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their laboure hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the heithen, & I see, y^e they be rych & wealthy, & they kepe not vpon y^e commaundmentes. Wyl they therefore ouercome wickednesse now in y^e balauce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be nowhere founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, y^e hath not sinned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundmentes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and heithen.

The III. Chapter.

And the angell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Uriel) gave me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch vpon it in this woulde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the hysst. Then sayde I: yee my lord. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desirest to se, and I shal shewe the from whence the wicked hert cometh. And I sayde: tell on my LORD. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: If I shulde are the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon y firmamēt? Or how greates water springes are in the begynnyng of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peradventure thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to y depe ner hell, nether dyd I ever clyme vp in to heauen. Nevertheless now haue I ared the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thou hast trauelyd, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answer of them.

B He sayde moreover vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and soch as are growne vp with y, canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to comprehend the waye of the hysst, and now outwardly in the corrupte woulde, to vnderstande the counpion y is enyde in my sight? The sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, the that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wete in a wode, and the trees toke soch a deuice and sayde: Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddies.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuice, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wode, that we maye make oure londe the wyder. The thought and deuice of the wode was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wode: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewise to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stoped them.

If thou were iudge now betwixt the two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue denyed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wode, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me, and sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgement, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For as the grounde is geuen vnto the wode, and the see to his floudes: even so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstande nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstande the thinges, that are aboue the heauens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseeche the LORD let me haue vnderstandinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy thinges, but of soch as we dayly meddle with: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the heathen, and for what cause the people (whom thou ener hast loved) is gauer, to be punished of vngodly nacyons: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wyrtten cōuenantes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the woulde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges haue I ared question.

Then answered he me and sayde: Therewith thou searchest the more thou shalt maraile, for the woulde hasteth fast to passe away, and can not comprehend the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, for this woulde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou arest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruction thereof is not yet come. If the euell now that is sowne, be not mowed vpsyde downe, and yf the place wher the euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then canst thou not the thinge come y is sowne with y good. For the come of euell seide hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnyng, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme: and how moch shal he yet bringe forth, vntill he come in to the barne?

Pondre now by thy self, whā y come of euell seide is cutt downe, how greates a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are y yeares fewe and euell? And he answered me, sayenge: Hast not thou to moch vpon the hysst, for thy haistynes to be aboue is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not y soules also of the righteous are question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan cometh the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpo this Jeremiel the archangel gaue them answer, and sayde: Eue whan the nombre of the seides is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the woulde in the balance: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntill the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORD, LORD, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peradventure it is not, that the barne of the righteous shal not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell vpon earth.

I So he answered me, and sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and are her, when she hath fulfilled hir tyme, monethes, yf hir childe be borne maye kepe y byrth eny longer within her. The sayde I: To LORD, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secreet places of soules are like y prieny chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauelyth, maketh haist, whan the tyme is nēcessite of the byrth is at hande: Eue so doth she haist to deliuer it that is commytted vnto her. Like what thou desirest to se, it shal be shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: If I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mette therfore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come the is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

And he saide vnto me: Stande vp vpo y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, and beholde, an whore burnynge oue wente ouer before me: and it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this the whore wente ouer before me a watery cloude, and from downe moch rayne to a storme: and whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remained still. Then sayde he vnto me: Like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, even so y measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: Maye I lyue (chynkest thou) vntill that tyme? Or what shal happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokens wherof thou arest me, I maye tell the of the in a parte: but as touchynge y life, I maye not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

The v. Chapter.

Wherthelesse, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greates nombre, and the waye of the trouth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the lōde that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waiste. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thre de trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone this tymes in the daye, and bloude shal droppe out of wode, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the soules shal flye, and the Sodomitish see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce thereof.

There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be of sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, and man strons women shal beare monsters, and sale waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyrt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secreet places, and shalbe lōghe of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpper hande vpon earth. One lande also shal be another, and saye: Is righteousness gone thow wete? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal laboure, but their trayes shal not prosper.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue lene, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, and wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fear fulnes wente thow all my body, and my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

And in the seconde night it happened, y Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene? and why is thy countenance so heny? And now dost thou not, y Israel is commytted vnto the, in the lōde of their captynyte? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueh his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: So thy waye frome, and come not nyeme: & he herde it, and as I sayde, so wate he his waye frome. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Oriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that I thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, & my soule receaued yf sperte of vnderstandynge, & I begane to talke w the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wode of y earth & of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen y one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole woulde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the grounde thou hast chosen the one lyllie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all y foules that are created, thou hast named the one dove: and of all the catell y are made, thou hast prouyded y one shepe: & amonge all y multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou loudest, thou gauest a lawe, y is proued of all.

D And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? & vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scattered y one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde y promyses, & neuer beleued y conuauces? And though thou werest enemye vnto y people, yet shuldest thou punysh the w thine owne handes. Now wha I had spokẽ these wordes, the angell y came to me y night afore, was set vnto me, & sayde vnto me: Heare me, & hertẽ to y thinge y I saye, & I shal tell y more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art fore vexed & troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou y people better, then him y made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grete & compassion haue I spokẽ. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to sette out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not. And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childebed then my grane? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Jacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

E And he sayde vnto me: Tobie me y thinges, y are not yet come: gather me together y droppes, that are scattered abroad: make me y floures grene agayne. y are wythered: ope me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Show me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who maye knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellinge w me? As for me, I am an wyse: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou artest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of the se thinges y I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the lone that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde O LORDE, y are thou nye vnto them that haue no eye: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyllyden my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered & sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature maye not haist about the maker, ne the maye the woulde holder the at once, that shal be created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde this vnto thy seruauit, that thou luyngemate hast made the creature luyngemate at once, & the creature bare it? eue so might it now also be rethym that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Are the childebed of a woma, and saye vnto her: If thou bringest forth child, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therfore, to bringe forth ten children at once. And I sayde: She can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childebed vnto the earth, for that she be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not bringe forth the thinges that belonge to the age, euen so haue I ordered the woulde which I made.

And I aied and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geue me a waye, I wyl speake before y: for oure mother of whõ thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Are a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye thou to her: wherfore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but lesse of stature? And she shal answer the: They y be borne in the yere of strenght, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the childebedd sayleth) are other wyse. Considre now thyself, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strenght of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseeke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauit, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The VI. Chapter.

I And he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the woulde stode, or euer y wyndes blew, before it thondred and lighened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layd, before the sayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were stablished, before y innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer y highneses of y ayre were lifed vp, afore y measures of the firmament were named, or euer y chimneys in Sion were hote, and or the present yeres were sought out, and or euer the iudgements of thym y now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that new gather saith for a treasure: then dyd I considre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shal be the partynge asunder of the tymes? Or whan shal be the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abraham vnto Isaac, wha Jacob & Esau were borne of him, Jacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this woulde, and Jacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) are thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseeke the, shewe thy seruauit the ende of thy tokens, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stode vp vpon thy fete, and beare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greete mocion, but y place wher thou stodest shal not be mdued. And therfore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not affrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of y earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quauleth, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that wha I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and hertened: and beholde, there was a voyce y spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, y dayes come, & I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpon earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisicion of them, what they be y haue hurie equitye w vntighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shal be fulfilled: and whan the woulde, that shal vanishe awaye, shal be ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The booke shal be opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, & the children of a yere olde shal speake w their voyces: the womẽ with childe shal bringe forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shal lyue, and be rayfed vp: & sobely shal the sowne places appeare as the vnsowne, the full store houses shal suddenly be founde emptye, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which wha enery man heareth, they shal be haistely affrayed. At that tyme shal frendes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare wth them.

The springes of the welles shal stonde still, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so enere mayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre woulde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not tasted deatch fro theire byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shal be chaunged, and turned in to another meanyng: for euell shal be put out, and disceate shal be quenched. As for saith, it shal flourish, corrupcion shal be overcome: and the tructh, which hath bene so longe without fructe, shal be declared.

And it happened whan he talked w me, that I lokẽd demurely vpon him, before wha I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe y, the tyme of y night for to come.

If thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seuen dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the hyest: for why? the Nightie hath senethy righteous dealinge, he hath sene al so thy chastite, which thou hast had euer since thy youth: and therfore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comfote, and feare not, and haist not wth y tymes that are pasted chynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, I wepte agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my heart vored within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the hyest: for my spire was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (even the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the spire, and the darcknesse were yet on euery syde, and silence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

Upon the seconde daye thou maydest the spire of the sumament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuysion betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne above, and the other beneth. Upon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, I the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent I men might sowe and occupie husbandrie therein. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greates innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of compeacion, flowres of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Upon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and I Moone his light: the starres didst thou sette in ordie, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man, that was for to be made. Vpon the fith daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde brynge forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the donne water and without soule, brought forth lvyng beastes at the commaundment of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didst thou preserve two foules, I one thou caldest Enoch and the other Lemiatan, and didst separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherein are a thousande hilles. But vnto Lemiatan thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the wyle, and whan.

Upon the sixte daye thou gauest commaundment vnto the earth, that before the shalde brynge forth beastes, catell and all I (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou madest lord of all thy creatures: O thou our we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this I sayde now and spoken before the, the night shewe, how that the worde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people, they are nothings, but be like a speckle, and hastened the abundaunce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rose of the heau.

And now (O LORDE) the heauyng we euer bene reputed as nothings, have bene to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuour us with thy people (whom thou hast called I borne, thy only begotten, and thy seruicer) are geuen in to their handes and power. If the worlde now be made for oure sake, why haue we not the inheritance in possession with the worlde? How longe shal we endure?

After it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had ben to me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: Speake, O LORDE my God. The sayde he vnto me: Thy see is sett in a wyde place, I it might be hope and greates: but the intrance is narrow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? If he were not thorow the narrow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and set vpon a brode felde, and is full of all good: the intrance is narrow and sodane, like as if there were a fyre at the right hande, and a pe water at the left, and as it were on chynstrate path betwixte the both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

If this cite now were geuen to an heu, he neuer wente thorow this parious way: how wolde he receaue his inheritance? I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: vnto us is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & when Adam trasgressed my statutes, then was the chynge indged that was done. Then was the intrances of the worlde made narrow, full of sorrow and tranayle: They are but few & well, full of paretis and labour. For the intrances of the fore worlde were wyde and free, and brought immortall frute.

If they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and vayne thinges, moche lesse maye they comprehend and vnderstande the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible man? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hart the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

The sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordered in thy lawe, that the righteous shalde inherite these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Nevertheless the righteous shal suffice straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue luyed vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not see the wyde.

And he sayde vnto me: There is no indge above God, and none that hath vnderstandinge above the hyest. For there be many I perishe, because they despyse I lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundment to such as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde luye: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Nevertheless they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined vayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and sayde mainer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despyed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinances haue they not bene faithfull & steadfast, and haue not perfourmed his workes.

And therefore Esdras, vnto the full plenty, and to the empye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, I these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shal appeare: & the earth I now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & who so euer is deluyered from I foresayde euels, shal see my workes. For my sonne Jesus shal be openly declared, wchost I be wchost: & they I remayne, shal be mery in foure hundred yeares.

After these same yeares shal my sonne Chast dye, and all men that haue lifed: and I wolde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seven dayes, like as in the fore indgements, so that no man shal remayne. And after seven dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shal the dust those that dwell in silence, and the secrete places shal deluyere those that be committed vnto them. And I most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and loge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, I truer shal remayne, and faith shal waxe stronge, the worke shal folowe, and the reward shal be shewed, the righteousnesse shal watch, and the vnrighteousnesse shal beare no rule.

Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites, & Moses for the fathers I synned in the wyldernes, & he I came a fter him for Israel, in I tyme of Ahas and Samuel: and David for I destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, & Helias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might luye: and Ezechias for I people in the tyme of Sennacherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Thus so now, seynge I corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfor shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not I ende, there remayneth moche honoure in it, therfore haue they prayed for the weakes. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and I begynnyng of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowed, all mysebeleue taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verice spronge vp. Then shal no man be able to sane him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him I hath gotte I victory. I answered the, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: I it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geue him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to luye in heuynes, & after death to loke for punyishment? O thou Ada, what hast thou done? For though it was thou I synned, thou art not fall alone, but we all I come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle wch deadly workes: & that there is promysed vs an everlasting hope, where as we of selues are euell & vayne: & I there are layed vp for vs dwellynges of health & fredome, where as we haue luyed euell: and that the worshippe of I hyest is kepte to defende them, which have led a pacient life, where as we have walked in y most wicked wayes of all: and that there shalbe shewed a paradys, whose frute endureth for ever, wherein is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in: for we have walked in vnpleasaunt places: And that the faces of them which have absteyned, shal shyne aboue the starres, as here as oure faces shalbe black and darcke: For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death.

S The answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion z thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shal suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shal receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life, that thou mayest lyue. Nevertheless they beleued him not, nether the prophetes aser him. No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that they shulde not reach vnto them to their destruction, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be ensoummed in saluacion.

I answered then z sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the hyest is mercifull, in y he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the woilde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe: and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towards those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberrall to geue where as it requyeth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his lowynge kyndnesses towards those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the woilde shal not be made luyngge, with those that dwell therein: he geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made luyngge. And yf the iudge forgaue not those y he healed with his woide, and yf he wolde destroye y multitude that stryareth, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The VIII. Chapter.

And he answered me, sayenge: The most hyest made this woilde for many, but the woilde to come for few. I wyl tell the a synnynge, Esdras: As when thou apest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it y golde cōmeth of.

Enen so is it with the worke of this woilde. There be many created, but few shal be preferred. Then answered I z sayde: Thou shalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and desire the vnderstandinge, for thou art agued to herten and to geue eare, and wyllyngest prophetic: for thou hast no longer space given the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruante leue, y we may praye before the, and that thou mayest geue vnto oure hert, and buryde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that enery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, may lyue?

For then art alone, and we all are weikmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childebedd, and then geueth the members, and thy creature is preferred in fire and water: z if, monethes both thy wylte suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preferreth and it is preferred, shal both be kepte together when tyme is, the childebedd deliuereth f thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

For thou hast commaunded the baste to geuenyrl vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposeth and ordiest it with thy mercy, bryngest it up with thy righteousnes, nurest it in thy lawe, and resourmeth it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it luyngge as thy woike. Sainge thou that thou destroyest him, which w so grette labours is created and fashioned thow thy commaundement, thou couldest lyghly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preferred.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am soiry: and of thy inhabitants, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and of Jacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore I grynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, even of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue had the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstand my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

This is the begynnyng of the woilde of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euertlastingnes, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose se is exceddinge hye, whose glory and mai-

ty maye not be comprehended, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with trembling, whose kepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose woide is true, whose callynge is steadfast, whose commaundement is strong, whose ordynance is fearfull, whose lordryeth vp the depthes, whose wrych maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, z whose strength beareth wytnes: O heare y prayer of thy seruante, and march with thine ear to the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wyl speake: and so lo geas I haue vnderstandinge, I wyl answer. O loke not vpo the synnes of thy people, which serue y in the truerth. haue no respect vnto the wicked studies of the heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepeth thy testimones with sorowes. Think not vpon those that haue walked saynedly before the, but vpon them, which wyl haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyl to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in y righteousnes and glory: for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

S For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for y righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue reward. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towards him?

For of a truerth there is no man amonge them that be boine, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done a mysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousnes z thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not ryche in good workes.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and accordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wyl not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgement, before destruccion: but I wyl reioyse o the worke and thowght of y righteous. I wyl remembre also the pilgramege, the hope, and the reward. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the husband man soweth moch sēde vpon the ground, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or planted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Enen so is it of them that are sowne in the woilde, they shal not all be preferred.

I answered then z sayde: If I haue sowne be grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbande mans sēde perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Enen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is li te vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and lickened him vnto the husbande mans sēde. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritance: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for soch as be to come. For thou wast yet moch, seyng thou mayest loue my creature aboue me: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art marvelous before the hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, y thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate trechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in y woilde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstande thou for thy self, and sette out glory for soch as be like the: for vnto you is paradys opened, the tre of life is planted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wysdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moeth is hyd from you, z in to hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulness. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortallite. And therefore are thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despyed the hyest, thought some of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Moreover, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Enen so is thy rest and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wyl that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therefore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to such as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORD, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and when, thou hast not shewed me.

The IX. Chapter.

Answered me then and saide: Measure thou the tyme diligently in it self, when thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde y before: so shalt thou vnderstande, that it is the very same tyme, wherein the 3yest wil be gynnne to vssie the woulde, which he made. And when there shalbe sene earthquake and vproute of the people in the woulde, then shalt thou well vnderstande, that the most 3yest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the woulde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tymes also of the 3yest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And every one that shall esaued, and shall be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserved from the saide perils, and shall see my sauoure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the woulde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytfully, shall dwell in paynes.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yett freidome, and when they had yett open roome of amendement and conuersion, & vnderstande not, but despyse it: y same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, & how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the woulde is, and for whom the woulde, and when it is. Then answered I and sayde: I haue talked before & now I speake, and wyl speake also hereafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the dropes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the seide: as the floure is, so are the colours also: such as the woulde is, such is also y worke: and as the husbandman is himself, so is his husbandrye also. For it was the tyme of the woulde. And when I prepared for them that are now, ouer the woulde was made, when in they shulde dwell, then was there no man that withstode me. Now when every one was, and the multitude also in the woulde which is now preparat, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maner were corrupte. So I considered the worke, and beholde, there was parell, because of y thoughtes that were come in to it. And I saue, and spared the greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plant from amonge many generacions. & the multitude perishe the, which are growne up in wayne, and let my grape & wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with great labour haue I made it vp.

Then theles yf thou wilt take vpon the, yett seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast w them) go thy waye then in eo y felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate only of the floures of the felde, caist not flesch, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. vnto the 3yest continually, so wyl I come, and talke with the.

So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Arbath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge y floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and y meate of the same satisfied me. After seuen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, & my hart was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the 3yest, and saide: O LORD, thou y shewest thy self vnto vs, thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wilderness, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, when they came out of Egypte, and thou spakest, sayenge: heare me O Israel, and make my wordes thou seide of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and I shal brynge frute in you, & ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, & the frute of y lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why: it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, because they kepte not y thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome when the grounde receiuerth seide, or the see a shipp, or a vessell man and drynke, that, when it perissheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe & are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we y haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and ouer her also which receaued the lawe: not withstandinge the lawe perissheth not, but remaineth in his labour.

And when I considered these thinges in my hart after this maner, I looked aboute me with myne eyes, and vpon the right syde I saue a woman, which mourned sore, made greete lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, & she had asphes vpon hir heade.

I The let I my thoughtes go, & I was in, & turned me vnto her, & sayde: wherefore wepest thou? why art thou so sory & discomforred? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewaile myself & eate yett more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, & brought very lowe. And I saide vnto her: what ayleth y? Or who hath done eny thinge to y? tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and barren, and haue had an husband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to y 3yest. After thirtie yeares God haue me thy handmayden, looked vpon my misery, considered my trouble, and gaue me a sonne, and I was glad of him, so was my husband also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greete honoure vnto y Mightie. And I noursed him with greete trauayle. So when he grewe vp, & came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The X. Chapter.

And it happened that when my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: the ouerhiew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to comforte me. The toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: & when they had all rested, & they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remaine here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heuynes and mournyng, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion & mother is all wo full and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heuynes, & make oure mone (for we be all sorowfull.) As for the heuynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnynge all men are borne of her, & other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all into destruccion, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournyng, then she, that hath lost so greete a multitude: and northon, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournyng is not like the mournyng of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heuynes: as for the earth, a corvinge to the ordynance of y earth onely, so that many are gone awaye in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle & sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnynge geueth hir frute vnto man, for him y make her. And therefore withholde thy sorowe and heuynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto y, beare it strōgly. For yf thou iudgest the marck & ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counceill in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbande.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyl I not do, I wyl not go in to the cite, but heare wyl I dye. So I commoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be comforted, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure altier broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankes geuynge put to sylence, & mynth is vanisshed awaye, the light of oure candelsick is quenched, y Arke of the couenaunt is take from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Lewites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues ranshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childe destroyed, oure yongemen are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weak: and Sion (which scale is y greatest of all) is low sed vp from hir worshiipe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therefore shake of y greete heuynes, & and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Nightie maye be mercysfull vnto the, and that the Daye maye geue the rest from y^e labour and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkyng with her, hir face dyd shyne & glyster, so that I was a fraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greete voyce, very fearfull, so that y^e earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I lokted, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundation.

Then was I afrayed, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vniel the angell, which cameto me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many considerations and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakyng these wordes, he came vnto me, and lokted vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge veyed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sorry? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done a cōdyng vnto thy wordes, I wente into the felde, and there haue I sene chinges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stōde vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake on to me my LORD, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. O! shall my vnderstandyng be disceaued, and my mynde? But now I be seke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauent of this wōder. He answered me the and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afrayed, for the Daye hath opened many secrete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is righe, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greete lamentacion for Sion: and therfore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mourninge, and thou hast comforted her: Neuer theles now seist thou the licnes of the woman nomore, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer:

The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion, and where as she tolde the, that she hath in thirtie yeares vnfructefull and barren, these are the xxx. yeares, wherin there was offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeares Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the barren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she nourished him with labour, that was the walling of Jerusalem. But where as she tolde the, that she dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Jerusalem. And thou sawest hir licnesse, for she mourned for hir sonne: and what she happened vnto her, I haue shewed y^e. And now God seyth, that thou art sorry in thy mynde, and suffrest from y^e hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir cleynesse, and the faynes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I bad the remayne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knewe y^e the Daye wolde shew this vnto the, that I commanded the to go into the felde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. In the place where the Daye wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and see the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how great it is, and how greete thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shal thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehend. For thou art blessed aboue many othe, and art called with the Daye, as y^e few. And tomorrow at night thou shalt remayne bar, and so shal y^e Daye shewe the visions of his chinges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y^e last dayes. So I slepe the same night like as he cōmānded me.

The XI. Chapter.

Then sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y^e see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and chereades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I beholde, and out of his fethers there grew othe lye contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the othe, & rested it with the residue.

Moroner I sawe, that the Aegle flew wth his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, & couered all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y^e all chinges vnder heauen were subiect vnto him, and no man spake against him, no nor one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gane a sounde wth his fethers, & a voyce sayde ge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe every mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preferued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, y^e the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cōtrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I lokted, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, y^e whan it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared nomore. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, & raigned, & had a greete tyme: & it happened, y^e whan it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & sayde: heare thou y^e hast kepte in the earth so longe, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after y^e attayne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, & raigned as the othe afore, & appeared nomore also. So wrote it with all the residue one after another, so y^e every one raigned, & the appeared nomore. The I lokted, & beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers y^e folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, y^e they might rule also: and some of the ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of the were set vp, but ruled not. After this I lokted, & beholde, y^e xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, & six fethers. Then sawe I also, y^e the six fethers were parted in two, & remayned vnder the heades, y^e was vpon the right syde, for the foure cōtinued in their place. So I lokted, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I beholde, and lo, the two thought also by the selues to raigne: & whā they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heades were turned with them y^e were by him, & ate vp y^e two vnder wynges, y^e wolde haue raigned.

But this head put y^e whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those y^e dwelt vpon earth with moch labour, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the foules, that haue bene. After this I lokted, and beholde, the head that was in the myddest, suddenly appeared nomore, like as y^e wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer these that dwelt therein. And I beholde, & lo, the head vpon the right syde, deuoured it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: loke before the, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng haistely out of y^e wood, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: heare thou, I wyl talke with the, and the Daye shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that y^e ende of their times might come thorow the?

And the fourth came, and overwonne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greete fearfulness, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth wth the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, & the earth hath thou iudged not with truerth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loured lyers, and destroyed the dwelllynges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as byd the no harme. Therfore is thy wrongeous dealinge and blasphemy come vp vnto the Daye, and thy pryde vnto the Nightie. The Daye also hath lokted vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therfore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngacions heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, whan she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for y^e iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The XII. Chapter.

And it happened whā y^e Aegle spake the se wordes vnto y^e Aegle, y^e head y^e afore he had y^e upper hāde, appeared nomore: neither dyd y^e foure wynges appeare any more, y^e came to hī, & were set vp to raigne, & their l'ygndome was small & full of vprour.

And I sawe, & beholde, they appeared nomore, & y^e whole body of y^e Aegle was bitt, & the earth was in greete feare. Then waked I out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greete feare, and sayde vnto my spere: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in y^e thou seardest out the wayes of the Daye: lo, yet am I weery in my mynde, and very weak in my spere.

and litle strength is there in me, for the greates feare that I receaved this night. Therefore wil I now beseeche the hysst, & he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, & I sayde: LORDE LORDE yf I have founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with y before many other, & yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, comforte me then, and shewe me thy seruante the interpretation & playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly comforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shewe me y last of tymes.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretation of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kyngdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother Daniel, but it was not expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpon earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes y were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the seccode shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme the other, & this do y xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from y body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greates tryuynge, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, but shal be set in to his begynnyng. And y eight vnderwynges which thou sawest haue vnto y wynges of hi, betokene, y in hi there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shal be but small, & their yeares swift, & two of them shal beare. But whan the myddest tyme cometh, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto y ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades resting, this is the interpretation: In his last shal the hysst rayse vp thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to the, & they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therein, with moch laboure aboue all those y were before the. Therefore are they called y heades of the Aegle: for it is they y shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, & y shal perswade & synnise his last. And where as thou sawest, that y greates heade appeared nomore, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpon his bed, & yet with payne, for the two that remaine, shal be slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde de himself.

And where as thou sawest two wynges vpon the heade that is on the right, it signifieth, that it is they, who the hysst hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, & full of trouble. The y wynges thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wold, and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukinge him for his vnrightheousnes, is the wynde, which the hysst hath kepte in them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them sunder before them. For he shal sette them bynges before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal be lyuer with trouble, those y be perswaded by myne endes: and he shal make them iust vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnyng. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretation. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secretes of the hysst.

Therefore wyte all these thinges y haue sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach the wyse in the people, whose heart thou knowest maye comprehend and kepe the secretes. But wyte thou here y I saye from dayes moore, that it maye be shewed the, whan so euer it pleaseth the hysst to declare the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaved, that seven dayes were past, & I not come agayne in to y cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, & came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, y thou forsakest vs, & syttest here in this place: for of all people thou only art left vs, as a part of the vyne, and as a candell in a dark place, and as an haven & shippe preserued from y trespess. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not thus for vs, that we had bene brennt with Sennacherib? For we are no better, then they y dyed than and they wepte w loude voyce. Then answered I the & sayde: Be of good comfort O y rael, & be not heuy thou house of Jacob: for y hysst hath you in remembrance, & y might hath not forgotte you in extirpaciō. As for me, I haue not forsake you, neither am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of y misery of y rael, that I might see mercy for y lowe estate of y Sennacherib. And now go yd waye home euery man, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wente their waye in to the cite.

as I commaunded them: but I remaine and fall in the selde seven dayes, as y angell bid me, and I ace onely of the floures of the selde, and had my meate of the herbes in the selde dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

And it happened after the sene dayes, y I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the se, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to coside, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brennt that herde him, like as the earth whan it selethe the fyre.

After these I sawe, & beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of men out of vnto the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst y man, that came out from y se. And I loked, & beholde, he graued him self a greates moūntayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, & I coude not.

I sawe after these, y all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afayed, and ydurst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearnesse and violence of the people, he nether lifte vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner any weapon: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes y wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparres and stonnes, and they were all myrte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flamme, and y greates stonne, & fell with a rushe vpon y people, which was prepared to fight: but the ydurst every one: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust & smoke. Whan I sawe this, I was afayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sorry, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sicke thorow greates feare, and I amased, and sayde: thou hast shewed y seruante all y widders fro y begynnyng, & hast counted me worthy, y thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretation of this dreame. For thus I coside in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, & moch more wo vnto the

that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstande I y thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therefore are they come in to greates perills, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, y he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the woulde, and now to se y thinges y shal happen in y last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shal I shewe the, and I wil open vnto the, the thinges y thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are such as haue workes & saith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deyd.

This is the meanynge of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, y same is he whom God the hysst hath kepte a greates season, which by his owne self shal deliuer his creature, & he shal ordeine the that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, y out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre & stonne, & how y he lifte vp nether swerde ner weapon, but y the russhinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, y came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyl deliuer the y are vpon earth, & in a trauance of mynde shal he come vpon the, y dwell in the earth. And one shal vnder take to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, & one realme agaynst another. Whan this cometh to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my sonne be declared, whos thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And whan all y people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, y they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shal be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stonde vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shal come, & shal be shewed, beyng prepared & buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without any handes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people y are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punysshed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and with out eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is copared vnto the fyre.

E And where as thou sawest, that he gatherd another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye prisoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom Salmanasar the kynge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer y water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gaue them this counsell, y they shulde leaue the multitude of the heithen, and go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer man ynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for the, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greete waye, namely of a yere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, y they shal holde styll the springes of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now when he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal defende his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greete wonders.

S Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man comynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cast nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maigest thou not se my sonne, or childe that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretation of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the y treasure of the hysse. After this dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yet heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to y felde, geuyng prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and he is in tyme, and there I satte this daye.

The XIII. Chapter.

Opon the thirde daye I satte vnto the oke tre, then came there a voyce me out of the bush, and sayde: Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. The spirit then to me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto the, and talke to him, wha my people sene in Egypte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egypte, and brought him vp to Sion, where I helde him by me a long son, and tolde him my wonders as thou, and shewed him y secrettes of the tyme, and the ende, and commaunded him, saye: These wordes shalt thou declare, and not hyde. And now I saye vnto the, that thou lay in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretations which I shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of al, thou shalt be turned and remayne in my cell, and with such as be like the, vntil tyme be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe old. For the tyme is denyded in to twelue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth that, which is after y half of y tenth parte.

Therfore prepare and orde thy house, and resourme thy people: comforte such as be in trouble: and tell now of the defuccion: let go from the mortall thought, and awaye the burthens of man: put of the melle nature: laye vp in some place y thought that agreest heuy vnto the, and haist thy flyt from these tymes: for such euell y melle nesse as thou hast now sene happed, shal do yet moch worse. For the more thou wouldest and the tyme is, the more shal thy wickednesse increase, in thine hert dwelt in earth. For the truth is fled farre awaye: synge is hard at hande. For now hast thou visio to come, that thou hast sene.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded, and resourme the people which are perished. But they y shal be borne afterwarde, and wyl exhorte or rebuke the: Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they y dwell therein without light: for thy lawe is tyndled, because no man kene with the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. If thou wilt de grace before the, sende the holy ghost to me, and I shal wyte all that hath bene done in the worlde sence the begynning which was wyrtten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, maye lyue.

And he answered me, sayenge: Go y waye, gather thy people together, and saye vnto the, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many bore trees, and take with the Sarcia, Dabua, Selemia, Echanus and Alial, the best fyue, which are ready to wyte wisely, and come hit her, and I shal lichte a candle of vnderstandinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be performed which thou shalt begynne to wyte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto y wise. To morrow this houre shalt thou begynne to wyte.

Then wrote I forth (as he commaunded me) and gathered all y people together, and sayde: heare these wordes of Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnyng were straunges in Egypte, from whence they were deliuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amonge you by the lot to possesse. But y fathers and ye y selues also haue done vngodlynes, and haue not kepte the wayes which the hysse commaunded you. And for so much as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that had geuen you. And now are ye here and y brethren amonge you. Therfore yf so be that ye wil subdue ybome vnderstandinge, and resourme youre hert, ye shal be kepe alive, and after deatch shal ye opeyne mercy. For after deatch shal the iudgment come, when we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and y names of the vngodly with their woikes shalbe declared. Let no man therfore come now vnto me, nor are eny question at these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded me) and we wente in to the felde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayenge: Esdras. Open thy mouth, and drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, and beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the cold of it was lile fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And wha I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstandinge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my hert was kepte in remembrance, and my mouth was opened and shut nomore. The hysse gaue vnderstandinge vnto the fyue men, y they wote y hye thinges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the nyght they are bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wote two hundred y foure boikes.

And it happened wha the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the hysse spake sayenge: The first that thou hast wyrtte, speake openly, y the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe y lxx. last, y thou mayest shew it onely to such as be wise amonge thy people. For in them is the springe of vnderstandinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The XV. Chapter.

Behold, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyl put in y mouth, saith the LORDE: and cause them to be wyrtten in a letter, for it is the truth. Feare not the ymaginacions against y, let not y vnfaithfulness of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulness. Beholde saith the LORDE, I wil brynge plagues vpon the worlde: y swerde, hunger, deatch and destruction, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all y earth, and their shamefull woikes are fulfilled.

Therfore saith the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffer them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore saith the LORDE, I wil surely avenge, and receaue vnto me all the innocent bloude from amonge them.

Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egypte, but wyl brynge them eue with a nightie hande and a stretched out arme, and synne it with plagues as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egypte shal mourne, and the foundations of it shalbe syncten with the plage and punysshment, y God shal brynge vpon it.

They that tyll y ground, shal mourne, for their sides shal be destroyed thorow the blasinge and hale, and an horrible starre. No worth y woulde and them that dwell therein, for y swerde y their destruccions draweth nyer, and one people shal stode vp to fight agaynst another, and swerdes in their handes. For me shal be vnstedfast, and I me shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and habelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, and shal not be able. For he cause of their pryde & cities shalbe brought in feare, & houses shal shake, and men shalbe astrayed. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neighbour, but one shal prouoke another vnto battaylle, so spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bled, and because of the greate trouble.

D Beholde, I gather & call together all the kynges of the earth which are from the vpry synge, from the south, from the east and Libya to turne vnto them, and restore the thynges that they haue geue them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense the in their bosome. Thus sayeth the LORD God: My right hande shal not spare synners, and my swerde shal not cease ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath consumed the foundations of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saith the LORD. I wil not spare them. So youre waye ye children from violence, desyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORD knoweth all the that synne agaynst him, and therfore deliuereth he them vnto death and destrucciō: for now are the plagies come vpon the wilde, & ye shal remayne in the. For God shal not deliuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

E Beholde, an horrible visiō cometh frō the east, where generaciōs of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charrettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpon earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afrayed: and as the wynde bores out of the wood, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with the, and shal waiste the porciō of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembryng their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearyng together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afrayed, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal sle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal beseege the, and consume one of the, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

S Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at the greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the hely, and the smoke of the fire vnto the Camels lytter: And there shal be the fearfulness and tremblinge vpon earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afrayed, and tremblinge shal come vpon them.

And then shal there come greate warre from the south and from the north, and from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal smyte them vpon agayne, & the cloude which berayseth vpon earth, and the starre to cause feare cometh to the west wynde, shalbe destroyed, & the cloude shalbe lyste vp, and the mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that maye make all the earth afrayed, shal dwell therein, and that they maye pour out all places an horrible starre, synners and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, & the shal breake downe the cities & walles, mountaynes & hylles, all trees, wood, and the fesse of the meadowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and sege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vpon the heauen, and all they that be aboue shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia & thou thyself also vpon the hope of Babilon, and a woishipe of hir persone: Wo be unto thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, & hast deceyved & daughed the dome, that they mighte tryumphe and playe thy lowers, which haue allwaye desyred myrrer whordome to the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir wicked conuencions.

Therfore sayeth God: I wil sende plagis vpon the, wyddowhede, pouerte, hōgrynes, and pestilence, to waiste thy houses and destrucciō and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dryed vp as a floure, whan I heate arsyeth & is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sicke as a poore wif that is plagued & full of women: so the mightie and lower shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I shal the saith the LORD: If thou haddest allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the felle of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death whan thou wast driought: set forth the bawne of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy who: bene shalbe compensated the in thy bosome, therfore shal thou receaue rewarde.

S Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORD) even so shal God do vnto the, and shal deliuer the in to the plage. Thy childre shal dye of hunger, & thou shalt fall thorow the swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, & all thine shal perish in the swerde in the felde. They & be in the moitaynes shal dye of hunger, & eate their owne flesh, & drinke their owne bloude for very hōgry of bled & thirst of water. Thou unhappie shalt come thorow the see, & receaue plagies agayne.

In the passage they shal cast downe the slayne cite, & shal rote out one parte of the londe, & consume the porciō of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stubble, & they shal be thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wood & thy frute full trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy childre shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and mar the beaute of thy face.

The XVI. Chapter.

W O vnto the Babilon & Asia, wo vnto the of Egypte & Syria: gyde ye selnes to clothes of sack & haye, and mourne for youre childre, be sory, for ye destrucciō is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, & who wil turne it back: A fyre is kyndled amonge you, & who wil quench it: plagies are sent vnto you, & what is he that wil drye them awaye: Maye eny man drye awaye an hōgrye lyon in the wood: Or maye eny man quench the fyre in the stubble, whan it hath begonne to burne: Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, & is shot of a stronge archer: The mightie LORD sendeth the plagies, & what is he that wil drye them awaye: The fyre is kyndled & gone forth in his wrath, & what is he that wil quench it: He shal cast lightenynges, & who shal not feare: He shal thunder, and who shal not be afrayed: The LORD shal threaten, & who shal not utter lybe beaten to poulder at his presence: The earth quaketh, & the foundations therof: & for arsyeth vp waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are vnquyete, & the fishes therof also before the LORD, & before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arrowes that he shureth, are sharpe, & shal not mysse, whan they begynne to be shot in to the felde of the wilde.

S Beholde, & plagies are sent, & shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, & shal not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arrowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, even so & plagies & shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wil deliuer me in those dayes: The begynnyng of sorowes & greate mourninge: the begynnyng of derth & greate death: the begynnyng of warres, & the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnyng of euels, & they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thynges, whan the plagies come: Beholde, hōgry and plage, trouble & anguyshe are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thynges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye mynde full of scourges.

E Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, & they shal thinke themselves to be in good case: and even then shal my chese growe vpon earth, warres, derth & greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpon earth shal perish of hōgry, & the other that escape the hunger, shal the swerde destroye: & the deed shalbe cast out as donge, & there shalbe no man to cōforce them. For the earth shalbe waisted, & the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll the earth & to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, & who shal plucke the of & gather them: The grapes shal be ripe, & who shal treade the: For all places shalbe desolate of me, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, & twos in the felde, which shal hyde themselves in the thicke bushes, & in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remayne thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligently soughed thorow the vynyarde.

D Even so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for the & search their houses in the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, & the felde therof shal waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal traunyle there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no bydegromes: the women shal make lamentaciō, hauinge no husbādes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their bydegrome. In the warres shal they be destroyed, & their husbādes shal perish of hunger. O ye seruantes of the LORD, heare these thynges, & marke the. Beholde, the worde of the LORD, & receaue it: beholde, the plagies drawe nye, & are not slack in tarienge. Like as a traunylinge woman, which after the moneth bringeth forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre a fox that the paynes come vpo hir body. 2 whan the childe cometh to the byrth, they cary not the twyncklynge of an eye: For so shall not y plages be slack to come vpon earth, 2 the wolde shal mearne, 2 sorowes shal come vpo it on euery syde.

E O my people, heare my woide, make you redy to the battayll: 2 in all euell be euen as pylgryms vpon earth. He y seller, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: 2 he y byeth, as one that wil lese. Who so occupieth marchandies, as he that wynteth not: 2 he that buydeth, as he that shall not dwell therein: he that soweth, as one y shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shal get no children: 2 they y marry not, as the wyddowes: 2 therfore they y laboure, labo in vayne. For straungers shal reape their frutes, 2 spoyle their goodes, euer thoweth their houses, 2 take their childre captiue, for in captiuite 2 hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchandies w robbery, how longe dede they their cities, their houses, their possessions 2 personnes: the more wil I punyssh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an where entyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decteth hir self, and shal accuse her to hir face, whan he cometh that defendeth, which shal make inqysiciō for all synne vpo earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

S Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith befoie the LORDE God 2 his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all y workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes 2 their herres. For he spake but the woide: let the earth be made, 2 it was made: let the heauē be made, 2 it was made. In his woide were y starres made, 2 he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, 2 the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, 2 what it conteyneth. He hath shunt the see in the myddest of the waters, and w his woide hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a voute, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpo the toppe of the mountaynes, y the floudes might poure downe from y stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his bet in the myddest of y body, and gaue him breath, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the spere of y Allmyghtie God, which made all thynges, and hath searched the grounde of all the secretes of the earth.

He knoweth youre ymaginacions 2 desires, and what ye thynke, whan ye synne, 2 wolde hyde youre synnes. Therfore hath y LORDE searched and sought out all y workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan y synnes are brought forth, ye shal be ashamed befoie men, and youre owne synnes shal be youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? O how wil ye hyde youre synnes befoie God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from your synnes, and forget youre vnrightheousnes, and medle nemoire with them: so shal God be you forth, and deliuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greaue multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the yclew Tjoles: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, 2 trodden vnder soie.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greaue insurrection vpon those that feare y LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shal spare no man: they shal spoyle and waiste soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shal they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shal it be knowne who are my chōse, 2 they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saith the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at hande, but I wil deliuer you from the same. Dene ye a fraied, dispayre not, for God is your captaigne.

Who so kepeth my cōmandementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, 2 let not your vnrightheousnes be lift vp. Wo be vnto they that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednes: like as a felde is hedged in with busshes, and the pach therof covered with thornes, y no man maye trauayle thowand so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and bent.

The first Chapter.

Tobias was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile above Naason the waye to warde the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken prisoner in the dayes of Salmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beyng in captiuite, he forgotte not y waye of trneth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dai liewith his fellow prisoners 2 brethien, that were of his kyned. And though he were yonger the all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself chuldesly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to y golde calnes, which Jeroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Jerusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped y LORDE God of Israel, saith fully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuerres. These and soch like thynges dyd he accordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge.

But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kyned was come in captiuite vnto Ninue, what tyme as they all are of the meates of the heithē, he kepte his sonne, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so moch as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his herte, God gaue him fauoure in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in prison, and comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Nages a cite of the Medes, hauynge ten talentes of syluer (of y thynges wherewith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greaue company of people of his kyned, one Gabelas (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwrytinge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thowout all his kyned, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of they, as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Jewry (what tyme as God punysshed him for his blasphemie) 2 in his wrath slew many of the children of Is Nevertheless Tobias with his sonne & with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The II. Chapter.

After these thinges vpon a selemprne daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, & sayde vnto his sonne: Go y waye & brynge hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, lest the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarfe, toke him & bare him preuely in to his house, & whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarfe, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembryng y wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: yonre hye fiastes shalbe turned to sorrowe and heuynes.

But whan y Sonne was downe, he wente his waye & buried h. m. Then all his neghbours reprobued him, sayenge: It is not lēge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and buriedest thou the deed againe. Nevertheless Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, & buried them at mydnight.

Tobias d.

C It happened vpo a daye, that he had buried y deed, & was weery, came home, & layed him downe by the wall & slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpo his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so y he was blynde. This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Job. For in so much as he ever feared God from his youth vp, & kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy agaynst God, that the plage of blyndnes chaūsed vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

D For like as blessed Job. was had in derision of kynge, even so was he laughed to scoone of his elders & kynssolkes, which sayde vnto him: where is thy hope, for y which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuted the, & spake: Say me so, for we are the children of holymen, & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the mourning worke, & loke what luyng she coude get w the labo of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened y she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir husband herd it crye, he sayde: loke y it be not stolen, restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not lawfull for vs to eate or to touch eny chynge of thest. This was his wife angrie, and sayde: How y thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & soch like wordes dyd she cast him in the teeth.

The III. Chapter.

Then Tobias toke it hendy, & wres beganne to make his prayer, sayenge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgements are true, yee all y wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgment. And now O LORDE be mynde full of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my mysdedes ner y mysdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto y commaundementes, therfore are we spoyled, brought in captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amonge whō thou hast iudged vs. And now O LORDE, y iudgements are greates, for we haue not done a cōdigeit y commaundementes, nether haue we walked in nocēty before y. And now O LORDE, be le with me a cōdigeit to thy wil, & cōmande my sperte to be recreated in peace, for we are erpediēt were it for me to dye, the to lyue.

At the sametyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of y Medes was slaundered of one of her fathers hand maydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seven husbādes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto her, were slayne of the deuill called Asmodeus. Therfore whan she reprobued the mayden for her faulte, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy husbādes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne my men? At this voyce wēt Sara into an bychamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drate, but continued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde deliuer her from the rebute.

C Upon the thirde daye it chanced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayd the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of o fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgiest the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp my eyes. I beseeke y O LORDE, lōse me out of the bondes of this rebute, or els take me vnto awaye fro of y earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vncleyn lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in spoite, nether haue I made my self partaker with them, that walke in lighte behauiour. Nevertheless an husbāde haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

D Now peradventure either I haue bene unworthy of chem, or els were they vnnuere for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to ano ther husbāde. For why: thy counsell is not in y power of man. But who so ever loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and pioned, it stādeth in thy reynge: and yf he endure in paciēce, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal deliuer him: and yf his life be in chaste mynge, that he shal haue lene to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnation: & why: a fter a stōme thou makest y nether saye and still: after wepinge and baynes thou geuest greates ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayd for ever. At the same tyme were boch their prayers herde in the sight of the magesty of the hyest God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was sent to helpe the both, whose prayers came together before God.

The III. Chapter.

So whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye the in thine hert as a fundacion. Whan God taketh awaye my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mouth in honoure all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greates pards she suffred for y in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of her life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & beware, lest at eny tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundementes of the LORDE oure God.

Bene allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned awaye from the. Be mercifull after y power. Yf thou hast much, geue plentifully: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For allmes deliuereth y fro death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darcknes. A greates comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

The V. Chapter.

Then answered Tobias his father, & sayde: father, all that thou hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I cannot tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediately he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, and get the some faithfull man to go with y for an hye, that thou mayest receaue y money, whyle I am yet lyuyng.

B Then wente Tobias out, and vpon the strete he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: Knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of y Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwelleth in Rages a cite of y Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egabthanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tarry for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wote Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At y which his father marueled, and prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

C Now whan the angell came in, he saluted him, and sayde: Ioye be with the for evermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that sitt here in darcknes, and se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonneto Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comest agayne, I shal paye the thy hye. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Arrest thou after the kynred of an hyeling, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye y, be not displeased, that I desired to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

B Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waye, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beate yea company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, y they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias had his father and his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. If we had bene content w of pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe our sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto his wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, and thine eyes shall see him. For I trust, that y good angell of God shal beare him company, and ordie well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to us agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of fro wepyng, and helde hir tongue.

The VI. Chapter.

S Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and y first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was affrayd, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORD, he cometh vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the chetle be, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpo the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

The sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for manye. Tobias dyd so, and rested the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: there residue they salted, as much as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias asked the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye y brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: If thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all manner of euell spertes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth y same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte or to strake y eyes with all, wher as there is any blemish in them, shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: wher is then that wermayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, called Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, and hath nether sonne nor daughter but her. All his good belongeth vnto the, and thou must marry his daughter: and therfor desire her at her father, and he shal geat her to wife. Then answered Tobias and sayde: As I vnderstande, she hath bene married vnto seven husbundes, and they all are dead: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slaw them. I am affrayed therfore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge the in their age w sorrow to their granes.

D Then sayde y angell Raphael vnto him: Feare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashion, that they shut God out from the and from their hert, and geue them selues to their owne lust, even as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon sech hath y deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, withold thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shal be dryue awaye. The seconde night shalst thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalst thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shal be borne of y. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desire of children, then for any fleschly lust: that in the side of Abraham thou mayest opteyne the blessinge in children.

The VII. Chapter.

When wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel looked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good burghum? They saide: Of the trybe of Ephraim, out of the captivitye of Babilone. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: Knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moche good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou art, is this yonge mans father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kissed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now wha they had talked together, Raguel had kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And wha he prayed the to sitt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate nor drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my petition, and promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seven men, that wote in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belongeth thy daughter to wife, therfore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be married in hir owne kynred, accordinge to the lawe of Moses. And now doute thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hande of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob be with you, ioyne you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wytyng of the mariage. And then made they mery, and playsted God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of good cheare my daughter, the LORD of heauen geueth the ioye, for the benynesse that thou hast suffred.

The VIII. Chapter.

Now after y they had supped, they brought the yonge man in to her. The thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hye Egypte. The spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Up Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, to morrow, and ouer-morrow: for these thre nightes wil we reuoyce oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shal ioyne together in y deuote of mariage. For we are the children of holymen, and we maye not come together as the heithen, & knowe not God.

B Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, & he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of fathers, prayse be thou of heauē & earth of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam of the mould of the earth, & gauest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for ever. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruantes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peradventure, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydes, to lōke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whā she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydings. Then Raguel and Anna his wife praysed f LORDE, and sayde: praysed be thou O LORDE God of Israel, for it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealt mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, & thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruantes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meat, to such as wente by waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remaine with him two weekes. As for all the good & he had, he gaue Tobias yf one half of it, and made this wrytinge, that the half which remainyng, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death. The IX. Chapter.

Then Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes. If I shulde geue myselfe to be y seruant, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Wherefore I beseeke the, that thou wylt take the busshes and the seruantes, and go vnto Gabelus in Ragas the cite of the Medes, and deliuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my marriage. For thou knowest thyselfe, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruantes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Ragas the cite of the Medes: and whā he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytinge, & receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thinges had happened, & caused him to come with him to y marriage. Now whā he came in to the house of Raguel, he founde Tobias sittinge at y table: & he leape vp, & they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepe, and praysed God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel hanethon, for thou art the sonne of a right vertuous & iust man, & of one y feareth God, & geueth greete almes. And blessinge haue y wife, and yd elders, that y maye f y children, and y eure childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that y our seede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth woulde without ende. And whā they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the marriage.

The X. Chapter.

Now whyle yōge Tobias made kye & variēge by reason of y marriage, his father was full of care and heynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonnetarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peradventure Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begane he to be very soryfull, he & Anna his wife with him, & beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appointed. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge countre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staffe of oure age, thou comfort of oure life, thou hope of oure generaciō.

ginge all y thinges that we haue are one ly in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye: from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: bether thy conge, and be not discomfited, our sonne is whole and sounde: the man y we see him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuer theles he might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, loked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come agayne: that (yf it were possible) he might se him cōmyng a farre of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: Tary here, and I shall sende a messenger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him y thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother comē euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whā Raguel prayed Tobias w many wordes, & he wolde in no wyse heare him, he deliuered Sara vnto him, & the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydes, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in your iourney, and bryng you forth safe & sounde, that y maye fynde all thinges in good cōfort with y eure elders, and that myne eyes maye se y eure children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exhortinge her to honour her father and mother in lawe, to loue her husbāde, to rule well her hussholde, to kepe her house in good ordre, and to shew her selfe sancte.

The XI. Chapter.

Now as they were goinge homeward agayne, vpon y xi. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye toward Etniue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyl go before, and let the hussholde with thy wife and y catell come so fast & saye: y after vs. And whā Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon y toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

And whyle she was waytinge there for her cōmyng, she loked a farre of, and anon

she perceaued her sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde her husbāde, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne cometh. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worshippe the LORDE thy God, and geue thankes vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, & strake his eyes over w the gall of y fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene roich than in their iourney, ranne before, and came as a messenger, and wagged with his taile for gladnesse.

So y blinde father arose, and beganne to erre, and stembled with his fete, and gaue a seruant his hande, ranne to meete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whā they had worshipped & thanked God, they satte downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and caried half an houre, and then beganne the blemish to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte stynne of an egge which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

D Then they praysed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thankes, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I see my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara, his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all y honsholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Tabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, & reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so, for y space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerychone.

The XII. Chapter.

Then Tobias called his sonne vnto him & sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he drew the enell spere from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to his father and mother: he deliuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish; he hath made the to see the light of heauen, yet we all haue receaued greete good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil vouchsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him, to be him asyde, and beganneto praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them: Prayse ye God of heauen, and geue thankes vnto him before all men lyuynge, for he hath shewed his mercy vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Rynges secretes, but to shew and to prayse ye workes of God; it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fastinge, and to geue almes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. For almes deliuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euertlasting life. But they that do synne and vnrighteousnes, are ye enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherfore I tell you the truth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and ledest thy dynner, and hydest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offered thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the, and to deliuer Sara ye somes wife from the enell spere. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seven that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afraied, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the ground. Then sayde the angell: Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene wth you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thankes vnto him.

E You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therfore is ye tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his wonderful workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes, he was taken awaye out of their sight, so ye they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wonderful workes.

Then XIII. Chapter.

Then olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde: Greate art thou O LORDE for clemencie, and thy kyngdome wolde without ende, for thou scourgest and healest, thou leadest to hell, and bringest out agayne, and there is none ye maye escape thy hande. O geue thankes vnto ye LORDE ye children of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the heathen. For amonge the heathen which knowe him not, he hath scattered you, to the ende that ye shoulde shew forth his maruelous workes: and teach them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmightie but he. He hath chastised vs for oure mysdedes, and for his owne mercys sake shal be saue vs.

Considre then, how he hath dealt wth vs, prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euertlastinge kyngdome in ye workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the lande of my captiuitie, for he hath shewed his mayesty to a synfull people. Turne you therfore O symmers, and do righteousness before God, and be ye sure, that he wil shew his mercy vpon you. As for me & my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his docten, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto hym. O Jerusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, & geue thankes to the euertlastinge God, that he maye build vp his tabernacle agayne in ye, that he maye call agayne vnto the, all such as be in captiuitie, and that thou mayest haue ioye for evermore. With a sayre lichte shalt thou shyne, & all ye endes of ye worlde shal honour the. The people shal come vnto the from farr, they shal bunge giftes, and worshippe ye LORDE in the, and thy lande shal they haue for Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the grette name in the.

Cursed shal they be that despise the, & all they that blasphemethe, shal be condempned, but blessed shal they be, ye brylde the vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in ye childen, for they all shal be blessed, and gathered together to the LORDE. Blessed are they all ye lowly, and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE O my soule, for the LORDE Ome Ome hath deliuered his cite Jerusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte myself happy, if my seditarye to se ye cleannes of Jerusalem.

The gates of Jerusalem shal be buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the house of hir walles with precious stones. All her stretes shal be paved wth whyte Marblestone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be synge. Prayse be ye LORDE, which hath gaured her, & his kyngdome maye be vpon her for evermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkyng.

The XIII. Chapter.

After that Tobias had gotten his sight agayne, he luyed two and xl. yeres, & sawe his childers childen. Now whan he was an hundred and two yere olde, he dyed, & was buried honorably in Ninive. For whan he was sixe and fiftie yeres of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, & departed in peace.

But in ye houre of his death he called vnto hym his sonne Tobias, & seven yonge spryngalbes his sonnes childen, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Ninive is at hande, for the worde of the LORDE can not faile, and oure biethien that are scattered out of the lande of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole lande of it that hath bene wast, shal be fylled: and the house of God that was burnt in it, shal be buylded agayne, & all such as feare God shal retorne thither: the heithen also shal forsake their Idols, & come to Jerusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shal be glad of her, and worshippe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therfore my childen, heare youre father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness, seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre childen & they do right, geue almes, be myndefull of God, and ever to be thankfull vnto him in eueryth and with all their power. Heare me therfore my childen, and abyde not here: but in what tyme so ever ye haue buried youre mother be hyside me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal bringe it to destruccion and ende.

After ye death of his mother, Tobias departed awaye from Ninive, with his wife and childen, and with his childers childen, & came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of the. And he closed their eyes, and was heye vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fiftieth generacion and childers childen. And whan he was xxiij. yeres re of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynnsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued & accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the lande.

The first Chapter.

Arphaxat the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble strōge cite, which he called Egbachanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuētie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundred cubites hye. But vpon the foure comers every syde was twētie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in & twolfe yeare of his raighe it hapened, that Nabuchodonosor & kynge of the Assyrians (which raigned in the greates cite of Ninue) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouercame hi in & greateselde called Ragan, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Jadason in the felde of Eloth the kynge of the Elites.

B Mac. i. a Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Zethen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greateselde of Esdriel, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Jordane vnto Jerusalem and the whole londe of Jesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all the se dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of & Assyrians sende messaungers. But they all w one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptye, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciō at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The II. Chapter.

In the xiiij. yeare of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xiiij. daye of & first moneth, it was deuysed in the court of Nabuchodonosor & kynge of the Assyrians, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all & elders, all his captaimes and men of warre, and shewed them his secret counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his dominion. Now whan they were all comen with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kynge called Golofernes the chiefe captaime of his warres and saide vnto him: So thy waye forch agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despised my commaundement. Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Golofernes called together all the captaimes & rulers of all the power in Assyria, and mustred the souldyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundred and twēty thousand fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousand archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well payded for with oren, and small catell, and without nombe. He caused cometo be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Much golde and syluer also toke he out of the kyngs house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers of whom there were so many, that they covered the grounde of the lande, like the grasshoppers.

And whan he was gone past the bodan of the Assyrians, he came towarde the greates mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in all their castels, and wanne every strōge holde. As for & welthy cite of Melochus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childre of the sye and the Ismaelites, which laye toward the wysdernes and vpon the south syde of & londe of Chelon. He wente ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there from the broke of Mambryll a man cometo the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Japhet toward the south. He caried awaye all the Madiamites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so met withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of harvest, and cutt up all the come and all the trees, and caused the vines to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in & earth.

The III. Chapter.

So the kynges & prynces of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely, they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal & Lybia & Celicia, which came to Golofernes, & sayde: Let thy wiath cesse towarde vs: It is better for vs to serue the greates kynge Nabuchodonosor with ouerlynes, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessiōs, all mountaynes and hilles, all feldes, greates and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and householdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it all together. We oure selues also and oure childre wylbe thyne owne, come vnto vs a peccable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

B Then came Golofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemen & greates power, and conquered all stronge fenced cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, & soch as were mete for & warre, to helpe him. There came soch a shere also vpon those countrees, that the in dwelers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers & the people together, were forth to meete whan as he came, & receaued him honorably with garlandes & torches, with daunces, tabrettes and pipes.

C Nevertheless though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomack: but he destroyed their cities, & hewed downe their woddes. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulderate out all the goddes of the londe: to & iurme that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Golofernes with his power broughe vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Ioumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Serepoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The IIII. Chapter.

Whan the children of Israel & dwelt in Jewry herde this, they were sore afrayed of him. There came soch tramblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Jerusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities & their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rode a' out vnto Jericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared come for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also & prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towarde Esdrielon (which lyeth ouer agaynst & greateselde by Dotha Im) & vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, & herby they might be eny waye and passage to Jerusalem, & & they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixte & mountaynes. And the childre of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the auter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one accord cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their childre shulde not be geuen in to a pray, and their wyues in to a spoyle, & their cities shulde not be layed waiste, & their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the heithen.

E Then Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE wente rounde aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, & the LORDE wil heare youre petitions, yf ye cōcynue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in & sight of the LORDE. Remember Moses the seruante of the LORDE, which ouerthrew & Amalechites (that trusted in their might & power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes & horsmen) not with weapons, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer befoie the LORDE: In so moch that they which offered bren: sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offered the offringes vnto & LORDE, theynge arrayed in hayrie clothes, and had ashes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, & he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The V. Chapter.

Now came to Golofernes the prynces of the warres of the Assyrians, & the childre of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance. & how they had stepped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he exceedingly wroth, & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaimes of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, & kepeth in the mountaynes: What manner of cities are they? What is their power? What manner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why do they despise vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to meete vs, & they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Sye, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truely before the concerninge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe y goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsake they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commanded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a verch in to y whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwelt foure hundred years, in y which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressed them, and subdued the in buyldinge of his cities with masonrye of claye & brick, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punished the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

Now whan the kynge of Egipte let the go their waye, & the plague ceased, & then followed after the, to take the, & to bringe the agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened y see, so y the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod, In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egiptians followed vpon them, they were so curwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell the that came after, how it happened.

So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wilderness of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. There were y bytter waters made sweete for the, that they might drynke, & y years had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe & arrowe, without bulker or swerde) their God fought for the, & caused the to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, & they departed unfaichfully from y worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped any other besyde their God, he gaue them to be spoiled, to be slayne, & to be put to confusion. Neuertheles as oft as they were for departyng from the worshippe of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strenght to withstode their enemies.

Moreover they slew the kynge of the Cananites, Jebusites, Pherezites, & Ammonites, & all y mightie in the land, & toke their lodes & cities in possession: so longe as they synned not in y sight of their God, it wente well with them, for their God hated vnrightheousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of y waye, which God had geuen them, & they shulde walke in, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye prisoners into a straunge countrey. Now lately they haue turned the selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne out of the countrees where they were scattered abroad: and thus haue they conquered these mountaynes & dwelt therein: as for Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it agayne in possession.

And therefore my lord, make diligēcie in this, yf this people haue done wickedshe in the sight of their God, then let vs go agaynst them, for doubtles their God shal deliuer them in to thy handes, & subdew them vnto y power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende the, & so shal we be a shame to all y world.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes wroch, & thought to slaye him, & sayde one to another: what is he this, which barreth y childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kynge & his hoost? what as they are an vnwarped people, without strenght or understōdinge of y fettes of warre? That Achior therfore maye knowe, y he hath disceaued vs, we wil go vp in to y mountaynes: & whan the mightie men of the armye taken, he also shal be stucke with the swerde. Y all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The VI. Chapter.

Whan they had lest of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. So so much as thou hast prophesied vnto vs, sayenge that the people of Israel shal be defended of their

God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee whan we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & the shalt thou see, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. The shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow y sydes, & thou shalt fall downe sticken amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be utterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thynkest thy prophesie true, why dost thou then chaunge thy colour? why art thou a frayd? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be performed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt see these chinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that whan the punishment of my swerde (which they haue meritedly deserved) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punished with them.

So Holofernes commaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to deliuer him in to the handes of the childre of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & wente thorow the playn felde. But whan they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the syngers casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their loide.

Notwithstōdinge the childre of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, looked hym, brought him to Bethulia, set hym in the myddest of the people, and axed hym what the matter was, that the Assirians had lest him bounde.

Olas the sonne of Michas of the trybe of Symeon, & Charmim (which is also called Berthaniel) were the pryncipall rulers at the same tyme. Now whan Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before the all, beholde them, what answer he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroch, & commaunded him for the same cause to be deliuered vnto y Israelites: that whan he overcame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnely tolde out all these chinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, praysinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon our lowlynnes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, y thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how y thou bringest the lowe, y presume of the seiuers, & make their boast in their owne strenght. So whan the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayenge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strenght thou hast praysed, shall so rewarde the, y thou shalt rather see their destruccion. Whan y LORDE of God then shall geue his seruantes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so yf it please y, thou wylt thine mayest dwell w vs.

Now whan Olias had ended the counsell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greace supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refreshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The VII. Chapter.

The next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were an C. & xx. thousande fightinge men on fote, & two & twentie thousande horsmen, besyde the preparinge of them y were womē, & came to them on euery syde out of the countrees & cities which he had take. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyll syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon y lyeth towarde Esdrelon.

Now whan the childre of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon y ground, strowed as fishes vpon their heades, & prayed w one a corde, y the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapons, & sat betwixte the mountaynes in y narrow place, & kepte the waye daye & night. But whyle Holofernes was goinge abowte, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this commaunded he to be directe another waye, & to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walls, which they used secretly, more for pleasure then for necessity.

C Then wente the Ammonites & the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust neither in speare nor arrowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest overcome them therfore without y^e strykinge of any battayll, sett me to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye the without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wone, for so moch as it lieth in the mountaynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he set an hundred men at every well reunde aboute.

Judit. 16. a

Exo. 17. a

D And whan this watch had endured twentye dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, sayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in y^e whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kyng of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirst and greate destruction. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto y^e people of Holofernes: for better it is y^e we be captiue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scorne & shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen & earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punyssheth vs accordinge to the deservynge of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, y^e ye geue vp the cite now in to y^e power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Gal. 10. a

E Whan they had spokt out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou y^e art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punyssh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scour ge, and geue not those ouer that knowe the, vnto a people which knoweth them, lest they saye amonge the heithen: what is their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tinges, Osias stode vp with watry eyes, and sayde: O take good hartes vnto you (deare brethien) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peradventure he shal awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The VIII. Chapter.

And it happened whan these wordes came to the eares of Judith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Ioor, the sonne of Joseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, y^e sonne of Jammor, the sonne of Jeecon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Michia, the sonne of Euan, y^e sonne of Nethania, the sonne of Salathiel, y^e sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Raben. And hir husbände was called Manasse, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye harvest. For whyle he was byndinge y^e sheeues together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Judith his desolate wyddow the yeres y^e fir monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made hirself a priety chambur, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hurmaydes. She ware a smock of hayre, and fastid all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hir husbände also had left her greate riches, a plenteous houshelde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Judith was a woman of a very good repute with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell word of her.

Whan this Judith herde, how Osias had premised the people, that after the fyfte daye he wolde geue vp y^e cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chabbi and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherein Osias hath consented, y^e yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempt the LORDE? This denyce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wiath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of y^e LORDE a tyme, & appoynte him a daye after you re wyl?

C Nevertheless for so moch as the LORDE is patient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pearinge out teares, and besekynge him of grace. For God threateneth not as a man, neither wyl he be prouoked vnto wiath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a mekespirt, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyl and mercy: that like as oure hart is now vexed, & brought lowe thow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thow his grace: in so moch as we so lowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which falsed their God, & worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled & brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for a hoste cōfesse let vs tary with mekenesse. He shal requyre and make inquisition for oure bloude, from the veracions of oure enemies: he shal bringe downe all the heithen, that rise vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

D Therfore deare brethien, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all y^e people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp their hartes with youre exortacion, y^e they maye call to remembraunce, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, y^e they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a righte. They ought to remembre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was Isaac, so was Jacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thow many troubles, were founde stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaved not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put the selues forth with vnpatience and murmuringe agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shal denot we undertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to confesse, that all these punysshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes & mysdoes: Belcuyng also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the seruantes of God) for amendement, and not for oure destruction.

Then sayde Osias & the elders vnto Judith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no man can reproue y^e wordes. Praiethou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Judith sayde vnto them: Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and denice, yf it be of God: and besetke God, that he wyl bringe my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I denyed: Ye shal stode this night before the porte, and I wyl go forth with Abia my mayde: Praye ye therfore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remembre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, are ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the prynce of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

Judit. 10. b

The IX. Chapter.

Now whā they were gone their way, Judith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed ashes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father Symeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulnes, and that rauyshed y^e vyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wiues in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuite, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruantes, which bare a zeale vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I besetke y^e. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnyng, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and denyed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, & thy iudgements are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowledge. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the Egipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruantes, & put their trust in their charrettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokest vpon them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters overwhelmed them.

Gen. 24. d

Exo. 14. d

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in y^e power and multitude of their men

Plal. 45. b of warre, in their charrettes, arrowes & speares, and knowe not, that thou only art our God, which destroyest warres from the begynnyng, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as ever from & begynnyng, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, & they wyl unhallowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waiste the tabernacle of & name, and to cast downe the home of thine altar with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) & the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and & thou mayest synye him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

C This shal brynge thy name an euerlastinge remembrance, yf the hande of a woman ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondeb not in & power of men, nether hast thou any pleasure in the strengthe of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

O thou God of the heauens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callinge vpon the, and puttinge my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy couenaunt O LORDE, and my mister wordes in my mouth, & stablysh this deuyc in my hert, that thy house maye coneyne still in holynes, and that all the heithen maye knowe and understode, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

The X. Chapter.

And whan she had lest of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed & hayue cloth from her, put of the garmentes of hir wyddowhede, washed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an hooone vpon hir heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armeletes, spanges, earynges, fyngerynges, and deckte herself with all hir best aray.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beneygne and saynesse: for all this decking of hir self was not done for any voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right creacion and vertue, therefore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye: so & she was exceedinge amiable and wel fauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cates, and chese, and wente hir waye.

Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, & marvelled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they asked no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of cure fathers geue & his grace, and with his power persourme all the bewty of thy hert: that Jerusalem maye reioyse over the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy & righteous. And all they that were there, sayde w one voyce: so be it, so be it. Judith made hir prayer vnto & LORDE, & wente out at & porte, she & hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the springe of the daye, the spyes of & Assirians met her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of & Hebrewes, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shal be geue vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought to come to yelde the selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in your sight. Therefore haue I deuysed by my self after this maner: I wyl go before the prynce of holsernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyl shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shal perish.

And whan these men had herde hir wordes, & considered hir saye face, they were astonnyed: for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye: & sayde vnto her: Thou hast saved life by fyndinge out this deuyc, & thou wyldest come downe to & loide: & be thou sure, that whā thou comest vnto him, he shal wreathe the well, & thou shalt please him at & hert. So they brought her in to holsernes paulyon, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was overcome & taken with hir bewtye. Then tolde his seruantes: who wolde despyse & people of & Jewes, & haue so sayre wome: Shal we not by reason fight against the for the se? So whā Judith sawe holsernes sittinge in a canopye, & was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, smaragde and precious stones, she looked fast vpon him, & fell downe vpon the earth. And holsernes seruantes toke hir agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The XI. Chapter.

Then sayde holsernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despyed me, I shulde not haue lye vp a speare agaynst the. But tell me now, what is the cause & thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Judith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after & wordes of thy handmayden, the LORDE shal brynge thy mat-ter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a loide of the londe lyueth, & as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punishment of all men that go wrothge, all men shal not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the bestes also of & felde. For all people speake of thy pryncet ac-tyre, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou only art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commended in all londes.

The thinge is manifest also, that Achier saie, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaundest to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that our God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl de-lyuere them ouer vnto the enemye. And for so much as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are for a frayd of the. They suffre greate hunger also, & for wante of water, they are deede now in a manner. Moreover, they are appoynted to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbydde the to touch) for come, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, & they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto & to shew the these thinges. For thy handmayden worshippe God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wyl make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde the their synnes: then shal I come and shew the, & brynge the thorow the myddest of Jerusalem, so that thou shalt haue all & people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepheard: here shal not so much as one dogg bark agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so much as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased holsernes and all his seruantes, which marvelled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not such a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And holsernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so much as & promyse is good, yf thy God persourme it vnto me, he shal be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the court of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The XII. Chapter.

Then commaunded he her to go in, & where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue byr dwellinge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her fro his table. Judith answered him, and sayde: As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde holsernes vnto her: As the se thinges that thou hast brought with the sayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Judith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lord, thy hande mayden shal not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desired that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded holsernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wote forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and washed herself in the wellwater. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the deliuerance of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the evenyng.

Vpon & fourth daye it happened, & holsernes made a costly supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Dagao his chamberlay-ne: Go & waye, and counsell this hebrewe, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnnedled withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be a frayd, to come in to my lord, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lord naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and let what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

D So she stode vp, and deckt herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he bent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and syt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is mery to daye, then euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and drank before him, the thynges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery w her, and drank more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The XIII. Chapter.

Now whan it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, every mā to his lodgynge. And Vagao shutt the chamber doores, and wente his waye, for they were all eucladen with wyne. So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stode without before the doore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makinge hir prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strengthen me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Jerusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye perfourme the thyng, which I haue denyed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lowed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his hea-de, and sayde: Strengthen me O LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and deliuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth togetha after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried a sate of vnto & wach men vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath rewarded his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite togetha. And they came all to mete her, litle & greute, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered about hir euerychone: but she wente vp into an hye place, and caused silence to be proclaimed.

Whan everyman now helde his tongue, Iudith sayde: O prayse the LORDE our God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath perfourmed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assirians, and this is the canapy, wherein he laye in his dronkennes: wherethe LORDE our God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angel hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylchynes of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & with greute victory, that I am escaped, and ye deliuered. O geue thankes vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever.

So they praysed the LORDE alletogetha, and gaue thankes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought our enemies to naught.

And Ozias y chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all women vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded & a right to wounde and to synce of the heade of the captayne of our enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shal neuer come out of the mouth of me, which shal all waye remembre & power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in icoperdy, conseruinge the anguylsh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God & LORDE. And all the people sayde: Ame, Amen.

E Achior also was called. & he came. Then sayde Iudith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whos thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be anenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande synctified of the heade of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest see that it so is, beholde, this is & heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened & with destruction, sayenge: whan the people of Israel is take, I shal cause the also to be stricke with the swerde. Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguylsh & feare, so & he sworued withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her & prayd her, sayenge: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Jacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shal prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The XIII. Chapter.

Iudith saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Strengthen vp this heade vpon our walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take everyman his weapon, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go bysde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyas in the tētes see this, they shal of necessity be compelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captaynes to the battayll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes panyllion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the blonde, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceauē that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal deliuer them vnto you to be destroyed.

Then Achior seyng the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his heithenly beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcised: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stucke vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and eueryman toke his weapon, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyas sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tent, came before his chamber, and made a greates ruffhinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knowe, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chiefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came togetha, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Iudith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceauē no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, welcted in his blonde vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Iudiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of & Jewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame. For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chiefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpon them. So & they myndes were sore a frayd. And there was an excedyng greute crye in the whole hoost.

The XV. Chapter.

Now whan all the hoost herde that

Holofernes was headed, their mynde and councell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vnderooke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, lest all behynde them, and made haiste to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapons, and so they fled by the wayes of the felde, and thorow all the fore pathes of the dales.

And whan 3 children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with troopes, blowinge and makinge a greate crye after the. As for the Assirians, they had no ordie, and kepte not the selues together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordie, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messengers vnto all the cities and countrees of Israel.

B So all the regions and every cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, 2 smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to 3 vtmost parte of their borders. And thereafter that were in Bethulia came into the retes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nobre of the catell, and of all costly Jewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyle of them. And Joachim the hye priest at Ierusalem, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

C Now whan she came out vnto them, they begonne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshippe of the cite of Ierusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honr of oure people, thou hast donemanly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynes and chastyte, 2 hast knowne no man but thine owne husbände: therfore hath the hande of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for ever. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyle of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clotheinge and all ornaments) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both we men, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Then sange Iudith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O singe vnto him a new songe of thankesgeyng, being full and call vpon his name. It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might deliuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, and their houses covered the valleyes. He purposed to haue bit my londe, and to slaye my yongemen with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed awaye my children and virgins into captiuyte, but the almighty LORDE hurte him, and deliuered him to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confusion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, neither had the greate giannes sette them selues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari. Her sayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. For she layed awaye her widowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an hooone, to beguile him. Her slippers rauysht his eyes, her bewtye captiuated his mynde, with the swete smote she of his neck. The Persians were confounded at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of 3 Assirians, whan my symple appeared dry of chylde. The sonnes of the daughters haue perished them thorow, and slayne them as fruitie chylde: they perished in the battayll for the very feare of the LORDE my God. As vs synge a songe of thankesgeyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we synge vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shall deserue the, for thou spakst but the word, 2 they were made: thou sentest thy spere, 2 they were created, and no man maye withstande thy voyce. The mountaynes shall moue from the foundations with the waters, the stony rockes shall melt before the like warre. But they that feare the, shall be greate with 3 in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that rise vp agaynst my generacion, for the almighty LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, 2 in the daye of iudgment wyl he vyset them. For he shall geue fyre 2 wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and sele it for evermore.

D After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their best sacrifices and their promysed offerynges. And Iudith offred all Holofernes weapons, and all the Jewels, that 3 people had gathered, and the canopy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: 2 this ioye by reason of the victory, with Iudith endured thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputation at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastice ioyned, so 3 after hir husbonds Manasses dyed, she neuer knewe man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye sompne dayes she wente out with greate worshippe. She dwelt in hir husbonds house an hundred and fyue yere, 2 left hir honoure mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried before hir husbonds in Bethulia. And all the people monned for her seven dayes. So longe as she lyled, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeres also after hir death.

The daye wherein this victory was gotten, was solemnly holden, and rekened of the Jewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Jewes euer since vnto this daye.

The XI. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describied the dreame of Mardocheus.

Mardocheus the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Semei, 3 sonne of Cisei of 3 trybe of Ben Jamin a Jew: which had his dwell lyng in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, 2 excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges court. (Neuerthelesse he was one of the prisoners, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilō with Jechonias the kyng of Iuda.) In the seconde yere of the reigne of greate Artaxerxes in the first daye of 3 moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: he thought he herde a greate repest, horrible thunder clappes, earth quakes, 2 greates vpe in 3 londre: 2 he sawe two greates dragons, ready to fight one agaynst another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all heithen were vp, to fight agaynst 3 rigorous people. And 3 same daye was full of darcknes 2 very vnclere, full of trouble 2 anguysht, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared 3 plage 2 euell 3 was deuysed ouer the, 2 were at a poynte to them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greete ryuer 2 in to many waters. And with 3 it was daye, 2 the sonne rose vp agayne. And 3 lowly were exalted, and denoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desired to knowe alle the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntill the night.

The XII. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus uttereth the treason of the two seruantes agaynst the kyng, and therfore both the kyng rewardeth him.

In the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuysce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell handes vpon the kyng Artaxerxes: and so he certified the kyng thereof. Then caused the kyng to examen 3 two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

This the kyng caused to be put in 3 Cronicles for an everlasting remembrance, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kyng commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the court, and for this faithfulness of his, he gaue him a reward. But Aman the sonne of Amadath the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges court, undertoke to hurte Marbochus z his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The XIII. Chapter.

The copie of the commaundement, which Bigartarces (by the entisinge of Ama) sent out in to all countres, for the destruction of the Jewes. The prayer of Marbochus.

A The greates kynge Artaxerxes which raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seuen and two eye londes, sendeth his frendly salutation vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. When I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed w e quyte allwaye and gentylnes, to gouernethose that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to bringe my kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now when I axed my counsellors, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellent in wysdome, whose good wyll, truely z faithfulness hath oft bene shewed z proued (which was also y pryncipall z next vnto y Ege) Ama by name, which certified vs, how y in all lodes there was crepte in a rebellious folke; y made statutes z lawes agaynst all other people, z haue allwaye despyed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffered, that soch rule shulde continue by you z not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceiue the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, z withstande oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shewd matters, that oure kingdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therefore haue we commaunded, that all they that are appoynted in my kyngdom shewd vnto you by Ama (which is ordened and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kyng, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues z children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies, and aduersaries: z y there shalbe no mercy shewed, z no man spared. And this shalbe done y xiii. daye of the moneth called Adar of this yere, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the infernall after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Marbochus thought vpon all the woordes and noble actes of y LORD, z made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORD, thou valeaunt and almightyng (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no ma that can withstode ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen z earth, and what wonderinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORD of all thinges, and there is no man, y can resist the O LORD) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORD, that it was rather of malice, ner presumption, ner for any desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipec yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene content, and y with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel any good, to haue tysted his feetes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not lett the honoure of a ma in the shade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshipec none but onely y my LORD. And thus haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

And therfore O LORD thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they synn how they maye bringe vs to naught, in their mynde and desyre is to destroye and ouerthrowe the people, that hath warrent thine inheritance of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered z brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Hear my prayer, and be mercifull vnto y people, whiche thou hast chosen for an heritage vnto thy self. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyeve O LORD, and praise thy name. O LORD, suffre not y mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All y people of Israel in like maner cryed as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORD, for their death and destruction stood before their eyes.

The XIII. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

Hene Hester also beyng in the bayll of death, resorted vnto the LORD, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmetes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the shade of precious oymment, she scattered ches and ge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe. All places where she was wote to haue ioye of, these fylled she with y hayre, y she placed at herself. She prayed also vnto the LORD God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORD, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but y, for my misery and destruccione is harde at my hande. Fro my yowth vp I haue herde out of the kynged of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amonge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritance, and loke what thou didest promise the, thou hast made it good vnto the.

Now well LORD, we haue synned before the, therfore hast thou geuen vs in to the handes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORD thou art righteous. Nevertheless it satisfieth the not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed thy handes vpon the bondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordened and appoynted: to destroye thine inheritance, to shut and to stoppe y mouthes of them that prayse the, to quench the glorye and worshipec of thy house and thine altar, and to open the mouthes of the heithen, y they maye prayse the power z vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshy kynges for euer.

O LORD, geue not thy cepter vnto the that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorn in oure misery and fall: but turne their daye vpo them selues, and punyssh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Think vpon vs O LORD, and shew thy self in y tyme of oure distress and of oure trouble. Strengthen me O thou kyng of goddes, thou LORD of all power, geue me an eloquent and pleasaunt speech in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his herte in to y hate of oure enemye, to destroye him, and all soch as consent vnto him. But delyuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely y. LORD thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glorye and worshipec of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vn circūcised and of all heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, y I hate the token of my preemynance z worshipec, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be seene, z that I abhorre it as an vn cleane cloth, and that I wote it not whā I am quyet and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amas table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dionte the drynk offeringes, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye seno y daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but enely in the O LORD. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboue all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuer vs out of the hande of y wicked, z delyuer me out of my feare.

The XV. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kyng, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

And vpon y thirde daye it happened, that Hester layed awaye y mournynge ge garmetes, and put on hir glorious apparell, and deckt herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder z Sanioure of all thinges) toke two maytes w her: vpon the one she leant herself, as one y was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir beweye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amiable, but hir hert was sorowfull for greates feare. She wente in thorow all the doores, and stode before the kyng. The kyng sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly aray, all of golde, and sett w precious stones, and he was very terriblye. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and looked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leant herself vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

Nevertheless God turned y kynges mynde, that he was gentle, that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, z helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her lounge wordes also, z sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am y brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the commons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. The sayde she: I sawe the (O lorde) as an angell of God, z my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of amytie. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was a frayed, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The XVI. Chapter.

A cople of the commandement, which King Artaxerxes caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Jewes.

In the greate kynge Artaxerxes, which raigneth fro India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondaye friendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshippe, be ener y more proude and hie mynded, and vndertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plentyous benefites maye they not suffre, and be gyfte to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnto thankfulness awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumption (as they that be vnmaynde full and vnto thankfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, yf they all thinges, which (iudgment hateth & punyssheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, yf they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, were proude, and desyle the selues with shewyng of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceitfull wordes and with lyenger tales, disceue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search thereafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noy some thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and thereby to beware in tyme to come, that we maye make the kynge quyet & peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for yf thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

Hester 1. a What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu yf Macedonyan (a straunger rarely of the persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amonge vs as an aleaunt, and had opeyned the friendshippe that we beare toward all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hie honoure of every man, as the next and prynci-pal vnto the kynge, he conde not forbeare him self from his pryde, hath vnderaken not onely to robbe vs of the kynge, but of oure life.

With many folde disceate also hath he sired to destroye Mardocheus oure helpe and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent hester the like partaker of oure kynge, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had taken them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meane to translate the kynge of the persians vnto the of Macedona. And we fynde, that the Jewes (which were accused of yf wicked, yf they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most hie lyuynge God, by whom the kynge of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordied hither to. Wherfore, as fourth letters and comaundermentes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effect: for he that set them vp and inuented the hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kindred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deservynge.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Jewes maye frely and without hinderance holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpon yf xij. daye of yf ramoneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguyshe and trouble wolde haue oppressed the. For the God that governeth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye whan in yf chosen people shulde haue perished.

Moreover, amonge the hie solompne dayes that ye haue, ye shal holde this daye also w all gladnesse: hat now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraunce to god, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the persians: but a remembraunce of destruction to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lodes that do not this, shal horribly perishe and be destroyed w the fire and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of yf wilde beastes & foules.

The first. Chap. Ho. xxxij.

The first Chapter.

Set youre affection vpon wyssdome, ye that be iudges of the earth. Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & set him in the synglenesse of hert. For he will be soude of them that tempre him not, and appeareth vnto soch as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be allowed) resourmeth yf vnyssed. And why? wyssdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, nor dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fawmed nurture, & withdraweth himself fro yf thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge: & where wickednes hath the vpper hande, he flieth from thence. For the spere of wyssdome is lowynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witnesse of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. For the spere of yf LORDE sylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and yf same that vpholde all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

Therfore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgment of reprove. And why? inquisition shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shal be punished. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudginges shal not be hydd. Therfore beware of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slaunder. For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

O sete not youre owne death in yf error of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre owne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruction of the lyuynge.

For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyng: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shoulde haue health, that there shoulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shoulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlasting and immortall, but vnrighteousnesse bringeth death). Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both wth wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ii. Chapter.

Amonge them selues (but not right:) The tyme of oure life is but short & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man & turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrils, & y^e wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for o^r body, it shalbe very asshes & are quēched, & o^r soule shal vanish as & softe ayre. Oure life shal passe awaye as & trace of a cloude, & come to naught as & myst & is dryū awaye wth the beames of y^e Sonne, & put downe wth the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembrance.

So o^r tyme is a very shadow & passeth awaye, & after o^r ende there is no returnyng, for it is fast sealed, so & no mā cometh agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye & pleasure & there are, & let vs soone vse & creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues wth good wyne & oymment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne o^r selues wth roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no sayre medowe, but o^r lust shal go thorow it. Let every one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some to ken of o^r pleasure in every place, for & is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppresse the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regard y^e heades & are gray for age. Let & lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for & thinge & is feble is nothinge worth. Therfore let vs defraude the righteous, & why he is not for o^r profit, yee he is cleane contrary to o^r doinges. He chedeth vs for offendinge agaynst & lawe, & standeth vs as transgressours of all nurto^r. He maketh his boost to haue y^e knowledge of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewayer of our thoughtes: It greneth vs also to lōt vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He cometh vs but vayne personnes, he wth draweth him self from o^r wayes as from fylchynes: he commendeth greatly & latter ende of the iust maketh his boast & God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs knowe what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be & true sonne of God, he will receaue him & deliuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitesfull rebuke and ementinge, that we maye knowe his dignite & proue his pacience. Let vs condemne him wth the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Such thinges do the vngodly ymagin, & go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath bynded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regard the worshipec that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vnderstonde, yee after the ymage of his awne likenesse made he him. Neuerthelesse the thowndre of the deuill came death in to the worlde, and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iii. Chapter.

Wher the soules of & righteous are in & & hande of God, & y^e payne of death shal not touch the. In y^e sight of the vnwyse they appeare to dye, & their endes take for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vetter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffer payne before men, yee is their hope full of immortallite. They are punished but in fewe thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, & fyndeth the mete for himself: yee as the golde in the fornace doth he trye them, & reueneth them as a burnt offeringe, and when & tyme cometh they shalbe lōted vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparck & & renne thorow the rede busshes. They shal iudge the nacions, & haue dominion ouer & people, & their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They & put their trust in him, shal vnderstande the trouth, & soch as be faithfull, wil agryue vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue giftes & peace. But the vngodly shal be punished accordinge to their awne ymaginacō, for they haue despysed the righteous, & forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyseth wysdome & nurture, he is unhappie, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfructfull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vnchaste, and their chyldre most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather y^e barren & vndeuyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedde: she shal haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is y^e gedeb, which wth his handes hath wroughte no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be given y^e speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in y^e temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, & the race of wysdome shal neuer fade awaye. As for & chyldre of aduoutrers, they shal come to an ende & the seide of an vnrighteous bedde shal be roted out. And though they ly in lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, & their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye hastily, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vngodly.

The iiii. Chapter.

How sayre is a chaist generacion wth vertue. The memoriall therof is immortal, for it is knowne to God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple there at: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned & holden in hono^r, & wynneth & rewarde of the vndeuyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly chyldre is vnprofitable, and the thinges & are planted wth whoredome, shal take no depe roote, ner laye any fast foundation. Though they be grene in the brayndes for a tyme, yee shal they be shakē wth the wynde: for they stonde not fast, & thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnperfecte brayndes shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee meete for nothinge. And why? all the children & are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wicked agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be aied. But though the righteous be ouertaken wth death, yet shal he be in rest.

Age is an honorable thinge: neuerthelesse it stoneth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeaes: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vndeuyled li fe is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amonge synners, he traslaced him. Yee so delly was betaken awaye, to the intent & wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstōdinge, & & ypo-crisse shulde not beayle his soule. For y^e craftie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges bad, & vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne as yde & vnderston dinge of & symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therfore haisted he to take him awaye frō amonge & wicked. This the people se, & vnderstōde it not: they laye not vpon such thinges in their hertes, how & & lōnyng fauor & mercy of God is vpon his saintes, & & he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

Thus & righteous & is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are lyuinge: & & youth & is soone brought to an ende, & lōge life of & vnrighteous. For they se & ende of & wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore & LORDE hath taken him awaye. And why? they se him & despyse him, therfore shal God also laugh the to scorne: so & they the selues shal dye here after (but without hono^r yee in shame amonge & deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those & be put vp, & remoued the frō & foundations, so & they shalbe laied wast vnto the hyst. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shal perishe. So they beynge astrayed shal remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye the.

The v. Chapter.

Then shal & righteous stonde in great & stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely wth the, & take awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed wth horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of & sodane health: & they shal be very distresse of mynde, & shal saye within them selues (hauyng inwarde sorrow, and mournyng for very anguyshe of mynde).

These are they, whom we somtyme haue in derision, & iested vpon. We foolcs thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be wth out honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therfore we haue erred from the waye of trouth, & light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vnderstōdinge rose not vpon vpon vs. We haue weered o^r selues in & waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath & pryde done vnto vs? Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messenger rennyng before: as a shippe & passeth over the waves of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, neither & path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde & flyeth thorow & ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowne, but only hearth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemence of hir goinge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no token of hir waye can be founde. Or like as when an arrowe is shot at a mark, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cometh together againe, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, begonne immediatly to drawe to oure ender, & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

C Such wordes shal they that haue synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye chistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye wth the wynde: like as thynne scumme is scattered abroad wth the storme: like as smoke which is dispersed here & there wth the wynde, & as a remembrance of a stranger & tarieth for adaire, & the departeth.

But a righteous shal lyue for evermore: their rewarde also is wth the LORDE, & their remembrance wth the h^{ighest}. Therfore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome & a beutifull crowne of the LORDES hande: for wth his righte hande shal he couer the, & wth his owne arme shal he defende the. His glorious also shal take awaye the harness, & he shal waite a creature to be aueraged of a enemies. He shal put on righteousness for a brest plate, & take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The invincible shyld of equite shal he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpe for a speare, & the whole compasse of the worlde shal fight wth him agaynst the vnwyse.

D The shal the thonder boltes go out of lightninges, & come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place appointed: out of the hard stony indignacion there shal fall thick hales, & a water of a see shal be wroth agaynst the, & the floudes shal renne roughly together. A reynie wynde shal stode up agaynst them, & a storme shal scatter the abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealinge of the shal bunge all the lode to a wyldernes, & wickednes shall currethorne the dwellinges of the mightie.

The VI. Chapter.

Wysdome is better then strength, & a man of understandinge is more worth then one that is stronge. Heare therfore (O ye kynges) & vnderstande: O lerne ye the iudges of the endes of the earth. Goe are ye a rule & multitudes, & delite in much people. For the power is geue you of the LORDE, & the strength from the h^{ighest}: which shal trie y^e workes and search out y^e ymaginacions: how that ye beynge officers of his kyngdo me, haue not executed true iudgment, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousness, nor walked after his will. Horribly & that righte none shal he appeare vnto you: for an harte iudgment shal they haue & beare rule. Alas is graunted vnto the symple, but they that be in auctorite shal be sore punysshed. For which is L O R D E ouer all, shal excepte no mans personne, nether shal he stande in awe of any mans greatnesse: for he hath made small and greates, & careth for all alike. But the mightie shal haue a sore punysment.

Vnto you therfore (O ye kynges) do I speake, & ye maye lerne wysdome and not go amysse: for they that kepe righteousness shal be righteously iudged: and they that are lerne in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answer. Wherefore set y^e lust vpon my wordes, & lo ueth, so shal ye come by nurre. Wysdome is a noble thinge, & neuer saydeth awaye: she is easely sene of the that loue her, & founde of such as seeke her. She proueth them that desyre her, & she maye first shewe herself vnto the. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greates traualle, for he shal fynde her settinge ready at his doores. To that vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shal be safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, seekinge such as are meete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them wth all diligēce. For a vnfained desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nurre is loue, and loue is the keepinge of hir lawe. Now the keepinge of a lawe is perfection: & an vn corrupt life, & an vn corrupt life maketh a man familer wth God. And so the desyre of wysdome ledeth to a kyngdome called stinge. As y^e delyte be the in royall festes & cepters (O ye kynges of the people) set y^e lust vpon wysdome, & ye maye raigne for evermore. O loue the light of wysdome, all ye that be rulers of the people. As for wysdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I will tell you, and will not hyde the misteryes of God from you: but wil set her out from a begynnynge of the natyure, and bringe the knowledge of her in to light, and wil not kepe backe the trouth. Neither will I haue to do wth a mynge enuye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wysdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wise kyng is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nurre then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The VII. Chap.

I myself also am a mortall man, like as all other, & am come of a earthly generacion of hum & was first made: in my mothers wombe was I fashioned to be flish: in the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in bloude thorow the sede of man, & the comodious appetite of slepe. When I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men, & fell vpon the earth which is my nature: crienge & wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, & brought vp wth greates cares. For there is no kyng that hath had eny other begynnynge of byrth. All men then haue one intrance into life, & one goinge out in like maner.

D Wherefore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geue me: I called, & the sperte of wysdome came in to me. I set more by her then by kyngdomes & royall states, & counted riches nothinge in comparison of her. As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her above welfare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. All good thinges came to me wth her, & innumerable riches thorow hir handes. I was glad in the all, for this wysdome wth it before me, & I knew not that she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lered vnfaignedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & friendship of God, and are accepted vnto him for the gistes of wysdome.

C God hath graunted me to talke wysely, & conveniently to handle the thinges that he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, that ledeth vnto wysdome, & teacheth to vse wysdome a nyght. In his hande are all our dooers: yee all & wysdome, & vnderstandinge & knowledge of all workes. For he hath geue me a true science of these thinges: so that I knowe how a worlde was made, & the powers of a elements: a begynnynge, endinge & myddest of a tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: a course of the yere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures & kyndes of beastes: the furiosnesse of beastes: the power of a wyndes: the ymaginacions of men: the diuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all such thinges as are secrete & not looked for, haue I lered. For the workmaster of all thinges hath taught me wysdome. In hir is a sperte of vnderstandinge, which is holy, masculine, one onely, foryll, curteous, discrete, quyet, vndeysed, playne, swete, leuynge the thinge that is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth no good do well, geale, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: bynyng all vices, circumspecte in all thinges.

ges: receauinge all spertes of vnderstandinge beiege cleane & sharpe. For wysdome is neembler the all needle thinges: she goeth thorow & attayneth to all thinges, because of hir clenness. For she is a birth of a power of God, & a pure cleane expressinge of a cleannes of All-mightie God. Therfore can no vndeysed thinge come in to her: for she is a byghness of a euerlastige light, & vndeysed myrrour of a maiesty of God, & a ymage of his goodnesse. And for so moch as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beingested fast herself she renuerth all, & amoge a people conueyth she herself in to a holy soules. She maketh Gods frendes & prophetes: for God loneth no man, but him in whos wysdome dwelleth. For she is more beutifull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be compared vnto her: for vpon a daye cometh nyght. But wickednesse can not ouer come wysdome, and foolishnes maye not be wth her.

The VIII. Chapter.

Wysdome reacheth fro one ende to another mightely, & lowgly doth she ordie all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her eue from my yowth up: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self wth her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath a company of God, cometh by hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is a scolemastresse of a nurre of God, & a choser out of his workes. As a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wysdome, & worketh all thinges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstandinge worketh. What is it amoge all thinges, & worketh more then wysdome? As a man loue vertue & righteousness, let him labo for wysdome, for she hath greates vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteousness & strength, which are such thinges as man can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. As a man desyre moch knowledge, she can tell a thinges that are past, & discerns thinges for to come: she knoweth a sotiltes of wordes, & can expounde darcke sentences. She can tell of toiles & woderous thinges, & neuer they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my company, & comolowgly wth her: no doute she shal geue me good counsell, & speake comfortably vnto me in my carefulnes & grese. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amoge the comers & lordes of a counsell. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so that I shal be maruelous in a sight of greates men, & a faces of prynces shal wonder at me. What I helde my toge, they shal hyde my leysure: lob. 32. a whā I speake, they shal loke vpon me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpon their mouth. Moreover, by the meanes of her I shal obtayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlasting memorie, amonge the people that come after me. I shal see the people in ordie, & the nations shal be subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrantes shal be afrayed, when they do but heare of me: amonge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest & her: for his company hath no bytternes, & his fellowship hath no redousnesse, but myrrour & ioye.

C Now when I considered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my heart, how I to be ioyned vnto wyssdome is immortallite, & greates pleasure to haue his friendship: how I in the workes of his handes are infinite riches: how that, who so keepeth company with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute seekinge, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a ripe wytt, and had a good understandinge.

But when I grew to more understandinge, I came to an vnderstanded body. Neuertheless when I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (& I was a poynte of wyssdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I slepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole heart I sayde after this maner:

The IX. Chapter.

A God of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou hast made all thinges with thy worde, & ordeyned man thowow thy wyssdome, & he shulde haue dominion ouer the creature, which thou hast made: & he shulde ordie & woulde accordinge to equite & righteousness, & execute iudgment with a true heart) geue me wyssdome, which is euer aboute thy seate, & put me not out fro amonge the children: for I thy seruant & sonne of thy handmayden, am a feeble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yonge to the understandinge of iudgment and of lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amonge the children of men, yet yf thy wyssdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. But thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto the people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

B Thou hast commaunded me to buylde a temple vpon thy holy mount, & an altier in the cite wherein thou dwellest: a lictnesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared fro the begynnynge, and thy wyssdome with I, which knoweth thy workes: which also was with I when thou maydest I woulde, & knew what was acceptable in thy sight, & right in thy commaundementes. O sende her vnto of thy holy heauens and from the throne of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & labour with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in thy sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shal leade me soberly in my workes, and preferre me in his power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to sit in my fathers seate. For what man is he, that maye knowe the counsell of God? Or, who can chaunge what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & our forecastes are but vncertaine. And why? a mortall and corruptible body is hevy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the understandinge & musteth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discern the thinges that are vpon earth, and greates laboure we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before our eyes: Who will then see out the grounde of the thinges that are done in heuē? Whā LORDE, who can haue knowledge of thy vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wyssdome and sende thy holy goost vnto aboute? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: ymen maye lerne the thinges that are pleasant vnto the, and be preferred thowow wyssdome.

The X. Chapter.

Wysdome preserved I first mā, who God made a father of the world, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the mould of the earth, & gaue him power to rule all thinges. Whā the vnrighteous were awaye in his wrath from this wyssdome, & brotherhede perished thowow I wrath of murthur. Agayne, whā I water destroyed the whole worlde, wyssdome preserved the righteous thowow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Moreover whā wickednes had gotten the vpperhande, so I the nations were puffed up with pryde, she knewe the righteous, preserved him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vpon sure mercy for his children. She preserved the righteous, when he fled from the vngodly & perished, what tyme as I fell downe vpon the cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfructfull waiste and smokynge is degeneth testimony of their wickednes: & the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a toke of a remembrance of the vnfructfull soule, there standeth a pillar of salt. For all such as regarded not wyssdome gatte not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto me, a memorie of their foolishnes: so I in the thinges wherein they sinned, they coude not be hydd. But as for such as take hede vnto wyssdome, she shal de liuer them from sorowe.

C Whā the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, wyssdome led him the right waye, shewed him the kyngdome of God, gaue him knowledge of holy thinges, made him rich in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In the difficultes of such as defrauded him, she stood by him, & made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from the deceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, & he might knowe, how that wyssdome is stronger then all thinges. Whā the righteous was sold, she forsoke him not, but deliuered him fro sinners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and sayled him not in the bandes: yll she had brought him the cepter of realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyars, & brought him to perpetuall worshippe.

D She deliuered the righteous people and faultlesse seide, from the nations that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruant of God, and stode by him in wordes and tokens agaynst the horrible kynge. She gaue the righteous the rewarde of their labours, & led them forth a marvelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. She brought them thowow the reed see, and caried them thowow the greates water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyle of the vngodly, and praised thy holy name (O LORDE) and magnified thy victorious had with one acorde. For wyssdome openeth the mouth of the domine, & maketh the conges of babes to speake.

The XI. Chapter.

She ordeined their workes in the habes of the holy prophet: so I they wente thowow the wyldernes I was not inhabited, & pitched their cēttes in the waiste deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, & were auenged of their aduersaries. Whā they were thirstie, they called vpon I, & water was geuen them out of the rocke, & their thirst slackened out of the harde stone. For by the thinges, where thowow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their neede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest mā bloude in steade of lynnynge water. And where as they had scarcenesse in I rebulke whā the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyyst I was at that tyme, how thou wouldest bringe thine awne vnto hono, & slaye their aduersaries.

So whā they were tryed & nourtured with fatherly mercy, they knowledged how the vngodly were iudged, and punished thowow I wrath of God. These hast thou exorcised as a father, & proued the: but vnto I ether thou hast bene a boytous kynge, layed hard to their charge, & condēned the. Whether they were absent or present, their punishment was alyke. For their greife was double: namely, mourninge, and remembrance of thinges past. But whā they perceaued the their punishmentes dyd the good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at I ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in I outcastinge they thought scorn, as of an abiecte. Neuertheless I righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euē like as I thoughtes of I foolish were, so was also their wickednes. Where as certayne men now (thowow errō) dyd worshippe domme serpentes & vayne beestes, thou sendest a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: & they might knowe, that loke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punished. For vnto thy allmighty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of Bees, or woode lyes, or cruell beastes of a strange kynde, such as are vnkowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smokynge breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtynge, but also kylle them with their horrible sight. Yes without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scattered abrode thowow the bieth of thy power.

Neuertheles thou hast ordeined all thinges in measure, nōbre & weight. For thou hast enner had greates strength & might, & who maye withstode I power of thine arme? And why like as I small thyng I & balaunce weyeth, so is I woulde before I: yee as a droppe of I morninge dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the synnes of me, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thinges that are, and hatest none of the whō thou hast made nether didest thou ordeyne or make any thinge of euell will.

How might any thinge endure, yf it were not y will? Or how coude any thinge be preserved, excepte it were called of y? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, O LORDE, thou lover of soules.

The XII. Chapter.

LORDE, how gracious & sweete is thy sperte in all thinges: Therfore chastenest thou the measurably that go wronge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherein they offende: thou speakest vnto them (O LORDE) and exortest the to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde inhabitants of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wythcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominacions, mysbelenes & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that y londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childre of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest the also (as me) & sendest y forerunners of thyne hoost, euē hornettes to destroye the out by lytle & lytle. Not y thou wast unable to subdue y vngodly vnto y righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or w one rough worde to destroye the together: But y mynde was to drye the out by lytle & lytle, geuynge the tyme & place to amende: knowynge well, y it was an vnrighteous nacion & wicked of nature, & y their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed seide from y begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done y? Or who wyl stode agaynst thy iudgmet: Or who wil come before y face an auēger of vnrighteous mā? Or who wil blame y, yf y people perish, whō thou hast made: For there is none other God but thou, y carest for all thinges: y thou mayest declare how y y iudgmet is not vnright. There dare nether kige, ner tyrant in y sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch the as thou art righteous y self, thou ordrest all thiges righteously, & punishest euē hī y hath not deserved to be punished, & takest him for a straūger & an aleaunt in y lōde of y power. For y power is y begynnynge of righteousnes: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vnto all. Whan men thinke y not to be of a full strength, thou declarest y power boldly deluyrest thou them quer y knowe y not. But thou LORDE of power iudgest quetly, and ordrest us with greates worshippe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be wise and louynge: and hast made thy childre to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For so moch as thou hast punyshed, and do soch diligence deluyered y enemies of thy seruantes, which were worthy to dye (where thou hast thou gauest the tyme & place of amēdement y they might turne frō their wickednes) & how greates diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childre, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne & made couenantes of good promises: So where as thou doest but chasseye, thou punyshest y enemies by diverse wayes: to y intēt y whā we punysh, we shulde remembre y goodnesse: & whan we d selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

Wherefore where as men haue lyued ignorantly & vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed the sore, euē thorow y same thinges that they worshipped. For they wente astraye verylge in y waye of errō, & helde y beestes (which euē their enemies despyed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therefore hast thou sent a scoynfull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childre of synne & raunce. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by these scoynes & rebukes, they felt the worthy punyshment of God. For y thinges y they suffred, they bare the vnpackely, beinge not content in them but vnwyllynge. And whan they perished by y same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowledged that there was but one true God, whom before they wolde not knowe: therfore came y ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The XIII. Chapter.

Ayme are all men, which haue nō knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are sene, knewe not him, that of himself is enalastinge. Neether toke they so moch regard of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or aye, some y course of y starres, some y water, some the Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which rule y earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes:

The boke of Wysdome.

yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more saye he is that made them. For the matter of beuty hath ordered all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of the, they shulde haue perceaued thereby, y which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse & beuty of the creature, y matter thereof maye playnely be knowne. For notwithstandinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God & wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they were abute in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes y are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandinge and knowlege was so greates, y they coude discern the worlde and y creatures, why dyd they not rather synde out y LORDE thereof?

But unhappie are they, and amenge the deed is their hope, that call the God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by conynge, the similitude of beastes, or any vayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. Or as whan a carpenter entrecth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the hard of it conyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be used, and highteth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carneth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his conynge) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what soule spot is in it, he casteth some colour vpon it. Then maketh he a conuēnt tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessity be helped.

Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his childre and for his wife: he seeketh helpe at it, heareth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it y hath no soule: for health, he maketh his petition vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: & to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges y

he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne any thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do maner of good.

The XIII. Chapter.

Sayne, another mā purposinge to saye lēz begynnynge to take his iourneye thorow y raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, y is farre weaker, the y tre y beareth him. For as for it, couetousnesse of money hath founde it out, & y craftesman made it his conynge. But y prouydence (O farther) governeth all thinges frō y begynnynge, for thou hast made a waye in y see, & a sure path in the myddest of y waves: declaringe therby, y thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuerthelesse, y y workes of y wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: & therfore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wodd passynge ouer the see in a shyppe, & are saved.

For in the olde tyme also whā the proude giannes perished, he (in whō the hope was left to increase y worlde) wēt in to the shippe, which was governed thorow thy hande, & so left seide behinde him vnto y worlde. For happie is y tre where thorow righteousnes cometh: but cursed is the ymage of wodd, y is made w hādes, yee both it & he y made it: he, because he made it: & it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge. For the vngodly & his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so y worke & he y made it also shal be punyshed together. Therefore shal there a plage come vpon the ymages of the heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the feete of the vnwyse. And why? the settinge out of ymages is the begynnynge of whoredome, and the bringynge vp of them is the destruccion of life. For they were not from the begynnynge, nether shal they continue for euer. The welchy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therfore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whā a father mourned for his sonne y was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all y haist) of his deed sonne: & so began to worshiipe him as God, which was but a deed mā & ordered his seruantes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme & thorow lōge custome, this errō was kepte as a lawe, & tyrantes cōpelled mē by violence to honō ymages. As for those y were so farre of, y mē might not worshiipe them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kyng) whiche they woldehonoure) to the intent that with greace diligence they might worshippe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular conynge of the craftesman gaue the ignorant al so a greate occasiō to worshippe ymages. For the workman wyllinge to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his conynge to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beauty of the worke) the comon people was disceaved, in so much that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honoured as a man. And this was the erreure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affection, or to do some pleasure vnto kynges) as crybed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Moreover, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignorance, these many and greate plagges called they peace. For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable marches: so that they kepte nether life nor mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to deatch maliciously, or els greued his neyghboure wth aduoutrie. And thus were all thynges myrre together: bloude, manslaughter, thefte, dissimulation, corrupcion, vnfaithfulness, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnto that fulnes, desylinge of soules, chaunginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysorde of aduoutrie and vnclennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnyng and ende of all euell. For they y^e worshippe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly manswaere them selues. For in so much as their trust is in y^e Idols (which haue nether soule nor vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

Therfore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuynge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceane, and dyspynginge righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth ever with the offence of the vngodly.

The XV. Chapter.

Wether thou (O God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordiest thou all thynges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. If we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the is perfecte righteousnes: For to knowe y^e righteousnes and power, is the rote of immortallite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath no disceaved vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable labour) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight maketh the ignorant: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Nevertheless, they that lonesoche and thynges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh y^e tempereth softe earth, labourerh it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessel, what so euer serueth for euer use: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for service, and some contrary. But what to every vessel serueth, that knoweth y^e potter himself. So with his wayne labour he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not y^e more because he shal labo^r ner because his life is shorte: but stryuethe to excell goldsmithes, y^e syluer smithes y^e copper smithes, and maketh it for an hono^r to make wayne thynges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth y^e his life is more vyle then claye: for so much as he knoweth not his awne mater, that geue him his soule to worke, and brathed in him the breth of life. They counce oute life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be but a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he y^e of earth maketh frayle vessel and ymages, knoweth himselfe to offende aboue all othe^r.

All the enemies of thy people and y^e holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnclap^p and excedinge proude vnto their owne selues: for they iudge all the Idols of the heathē to be goddes, which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: y^e as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man maketh them, and he that hath but a borrowed spere, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himselfe is better then they whom he worshippeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. For they worshippe bestes also which are most miserable: for compare thynges that can not sele vnto them, y^e they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of the bestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thyng, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thankes vnto God.

The XVI. Chapter.

Or these and soch other thynges haue they suffred worthy punishment, y^e thorow y^e multitude of bestes are they roted out. Insteade of y^e which punishmentes thou hast graciously ordied chine awne people, y^e geuen them their desyre that they loged for: a new y^e straunge taist, prepa^runge them quales to be their meate: to the intent y^e (by the thynges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they y^e were so greedy of meate, might be withdrawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shone tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and tasted a new meate. For it was requisite y^e (without eny excuse) destruction shulde come vpo^r those which vsed tyraⁿy, y^e to shewe only vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. For whan the cruell woodnesse of the bestes came vpon them, they perished thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

Notwithstandinge y^e wiath endured not perpetuall, but they were put in seare for a litle season, y^e they might be reformed, ha^rynge a token of saluacion, to remembre the commaundement of thy lawe. For he y^e couer^red, was not healed by the thynges y^e he sawe, but by the O sauio^r of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, y^e it is thou, which delinest fro^m all euell. As for the whan they were bytten wth greshoppers and flies, they died, for they were worthy to perish by soch: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venymous womes ouer came y^e children, for thy mercy was euer by them y^e helped the. Therfore were they punished to remembre thy wordes, but hastily were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulness, that they might not use thy helpe.

It was nether herbe ner plaster y^e restored the to health, but thy worde (O LORDE) which healeth all thynges. It is thou (O LORDE) y^e hast the power of life y^e death: thou ledest vnto deatches doie, y^e bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, y^e when his spiete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne y^e soule y^e is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape y^e hande. For y^e vngodly y^e welde not knowe y^e, were punished by y^e strength of thine arme: wth straunge waters, hales and raynes were they persecuted, y^e thorow fyre were they consumed. For it was a wonderous thyng that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thynges: but y^e worde is y^e auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was y^e fyre so tame, y^e the bestes which were sent to punish y^e vngodly, bren^t not: y^e because they shulde se y^e knowe, y^e they were persecuted wth the punishment of God. And somtyme bren^t the fyre in the water on euery syde, y^e it might destroye y^e vnrighteous naciō of the earth. Agayne, thou hast sed chine awne people wth angels fode, y^e sent the bried ready from heauē (without their labo^r) beyng very pleasant y^e well gusted. And to shewe thy riches y^e siuetnesse vnto thy childre, thou gauest euery one their desyre, so y^e every man might eate what liked him best. But the snowe y^e yse abode the violence of the fyre, y^e melted not: y^e they might knowe, y^e the fyre burninge in the hales y^e rayne, destroyed y^e frute of y^e enemies: y^e fyre also forgatt his strength agayne, y^e y^e righteous might be noursed. For y^e creature y^e serueth y^e (which art y^e maker) is farse in punishment y^e vnrighteous, but it is easy y^e gentle to do good, vnto soch as put their trust in the. Therfore dyd all thynges alter at the same tyme, y^e were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is y^e noyse of all thynges, accordinge to y^e desyre of the y^e had nede therof: y^e y^e childre (O LORDE) whō thou lonest, might knowe, y^e it is not nature y^e the growinge of frutes y^e fedeth mā, but y^e it is y^e worde, which preserueth the y^e put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed wth the fyre, as soone as it was warmed wth a litle Sonne beame, it melted: y^e all men might knowe, y^e thankes ought to be geuen vnto y^e before y^e Sonne ryse, y^e y^e thou oughtest to be worshipped before y^e daye sprynge. For y^e hope of y^e vnto hant full shal melt awaye as the wynter yse, y^e perishe as water, y^e is not necessary.

The XVII. Chapter.

Create are thy iudgements (O LORDE) y^e thy counceils can not be expressed: therfore men do erre, y^e wil not be reformed wth thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subieccion, they were bounde wth the bandes of darcknes y^e longe night, shut vnder y^e rase, thynkinge to escape y^e euerylatinge wysdome. And why lo they thought to be hyd in y^e darcknesse of their synnes, they were scattered abroad in y^e very myddest of the darck coueringe of forgetfulness, put to horrible feare y^e wonderously vered. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because y^e for the same came downe and vexed them: yee many terrible and straunge visions made them afayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flames of the starres lighte & horrible myght. For there appeared vnto the a sodane fyre, very dreadfull: the which (whan they sawe nothinge) they were so afayed, that they thought & thynge which they sawe, to be the more fearfull. As for the sorcery & enchauntemēt & they used, it came to derisio, and the proude wysdome was brought to shame. For they & promysed to dyue awaie the fearfulness & dyde fro & weake soules, weresick for feare the selues, and that wth scorne. And though none of & wōders feared the, yet were they afayed at the beestes which came vpon the, & at & his synge of the serpentes: In so much that with trembling they swowned, & sayde they sawe not & aye, which no mā yet maye escape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans ewe conscience beareth recorde of his wickednes & condēpneth him. And why? a vexed & wounded conscience, taketh euer cruell thinges in hādē. Fearfulness is nothinge els, but a declaringe & a mā seeketh helpe & defence, to answer for him self. And loke how much lesse the hope is within, the more is & vncertaintye of the matter, for the which he is punished. But they & came in & mightie myght, slepe & slepe & fell vpo the frō vnder & frō aboue: somtyme were they afayed thorow & feare of & wonders, & somtyme they were so weake, & they swowned withall: for an hastie & sodane fearfulness came vpon the. Afterwarde, yf eny of the had fallē, he was kepte & shut in prison, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a vyllage, yf he had bene an hyrd or husbandman, he suffred intollerable necessite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of darcknesse.

D Whether it were a blasynge wynde, or a swete songe of & byrdes amonge the thicke boughes of the trees, or the vehemence of haistie rūnyng water, or greates noyse of & fallynge downe of stones, or the playenge & rūnyng of beastes whō they sawe not, or & mightie noyse of roaryng beestes, or & sownde & answereth agayne in the hie mountaynes: it made the swowne for very feare. For all the earth shyned wth cleare light, & no mā was hyndered in his labo^r. Onely vpon the there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darcknesse that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them selues the most heuy & horrible darcknesse.

U Lucrtheles thy sayntes had a ray of greates light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them). And because they suffred not & same thinges, they magnified the: and they & were vexed a fore (because they were not hurt now) thanked the, and besought & (o God) & there might be a difference. Therefore had they a burnynge piler of fyre to let them in the vntowne waye, & thou gauest them the Semie for a fre gift without eny hūte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light to be put in the prison of darcknes, which kepte thy childre in captiuyte, by whom the corrupt light of the lawe of & would be geuen. Whan they thought to slay & the babes of the righteous (one beinge laid out, and yet preserved to be leder vnto the: then broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, and destroydest the same the mightie water. Of that night were our fathers certified a fore, that they knowinge vnto what oother they had geuen credite, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued & health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte our enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou caldest a fore. For the righteous children of the good men offred & creely, & ordred the lawe of righteousness vnto vnto: & the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayse vnto & father of all men. Agayne, there was hādē an vncōuenient voyce of the enemies, & a piteous crie for childre that were bewailed. The master and the seruaunt were punished alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had miserable that dyed one death.

Neither were & lynginge sufficient to lary & deed, for in & twyncklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of the was destroyed. As oft as God helped the a fore, yet wolde it not make the beleue: but in & destruction of & first bene they knowleged, that it was & people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, & whā & night was in & myddest of hir course, thy Almightie worde (o LORDE) leaped downe frō heauē out of & royall throne, as a rough mā of warre, in & myddest of & londē & was destroyed: & & sharpe swerde persecuted & straitē cōmandemēt, slādinge & fyllinge all thinges wth death: yee it stode vpo & earth & reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euill dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnto the.

D Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyet, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed the, shewed the these thinges a fore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished.

The tentacion of death touched the righteons also, and amonge the multitude in the wilderness there was insurreccion, but thy myght endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist, and toke the batayll vpon him, brought forth the weape of his munstracion: euen prayer and & cōsolacion of recōlunge, set himself agaynst & myght, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaryng theby, that he was thy seruaunt. For he overcame not the multitude with bodely power, not with weapes of myght: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembraunce of the ooth & cōuenaunt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the myght, and parted & waye vnto the lynginge. And why in his longe garmēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers graue, and thy maiesty was witten in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afayed of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of myght.

The XIX. Chapter.

AS for the vngodly, the myght came vpo them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happen vnto them: how that whan they had consented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greates diligence they wolde repent, & folowe vpon them. For whan they were yet mourninge and makinge lamentacion by the graves of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flūge, whom they had cast out a fore wth prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges & happened vnto them a fore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punishment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with cōmētes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fynde a straunge death.

The was enery creature fashioned agayne of the newe acordyng to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy cōmandementes, & thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude overshadowed their tentes, & the drye earth appeared, where a fore was water: so & in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greates depe became a grene felde: where thorow all & people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous & maruelous workes. For as & hoises, so were they scōd, & leaped like lābes, praylinge the (o LORDE) which haddest deliuered them. And why? they were yet mynde full of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londē: how the grounde brought forth fyles in steade of cattell, and how & ryuer scawled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fysshes.

But at the last they sawe a newe creacion of byrdes, what tyme as they were discaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punishmentes came vpon & synners, not without the tokēs which came to passe a fore by the vehemēce of & streames: for they suffred worthely acordyng to their wickednesse, they dealt so abhominably & churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vntowne gestes, some brought & straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also, and dyd the much euell, that receaued the gladly. Therefore were they punished with blindnesse, like as they that were couered with sodane darcknesse at the doores of the righteous: so & every one sought & inuauce of his doore.

Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tūne is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepte their melody: which maye easely be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lōde was turned in to a watery, & & thinge that a fore swam in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cōtrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench. Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that were with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despyed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Jesus Syrac

The prologe of Jesus the sonne of Syrac vnto his boke.

Many and great men have declared wysdome vnto vs out of 3 lawe, out of 3 prophetes & out of other that folowed the. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wysdome: Therfore they that haue it reade it, shulde not onely the selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wytyng.

After that my graundfacher Jesus had genen diligent labour to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other boke that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therein: he purposed also to wyte some thinge of wysdome and good maners, to the intent that they which were wyslinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more understandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherfore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wyttin in the hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is traslated in to any other speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other boke sounde farre other wyse, then they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yere whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomey Euergetes, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wyte many good thinges. Wherfore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauaile to interpret this boke. And consideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and byd my best to peruse me this boke, and to bryng it vnto lichte: that the straigers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyue accordinge to 3 lawe of 3 LORDE.

The first Chapter.

All wysdome cometh of God the LORDE, & hath bene euer to him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred y sonde of the see, & drop pes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heane, & bredth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the groundes of Gods wysdome, which hath bene before all thinges? Wysdome hath bene before all thinges, and the understandinge of prudence from euerlastynge. (Gods woide in the heyth is the well of wysdome, and the euerlastynge commaundementes are the intrance of her.) Vnto whom hath y rote of wysdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wysdome bene discovered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the many folbe entrance of her?

There is one: eue the hyst, the maker of all thinges, y Allmightie, y kynge of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sitteth vpon his throne, beinge a God of dominion: he hath created her thorow y holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: he hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh acordinge to his gife: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshippe and triumphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geueth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

C The loue of God is honorable wysdome: loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wondrous thinges it doth. The feare of LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shal go with the chosen women, and shal be knowne of y righteons and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is y right Gods seruyce, that preferueth and iustifieth the hert, and geueth myrrour & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal be happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wysdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir gyses, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wysdome, and geueth plenteous peace & healeth. She hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wysdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto hono^r.

D The feare of the LORDE is the rocc of wysdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wysdome is vnderstandinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wysdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and thē shal he haue y rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstandinge wyl hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mē lippes shal speake of his wysdome. In the treasures of wysdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshippe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commandement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome & nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and longynge mekenesse, and he shal fylle the treasures ther of. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duple hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Mark well these thinges, lest thou happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discouer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregacion: because thou woldest not receiue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of fainednes and disceate.

The II. Chapter.

M Sonne, yf thou wilt come in to y seruyce of God, stonde fast in righteousnes and feare, & arme thy soule to tentacion: saddle thine hert, and be patient: bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shienke not away, whan thou art entysed. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thyself vnto him & suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What ever happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in helynesse, and be patient in thy trouble. For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, even so are acceptable men in the furnace of aduersite. Beleue in God, and he shal helpe the: ordre thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and groweth in. O ye y feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shienke not away fro him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare y LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewarde shal not be emptye. O ye that feare y LORDE, put your trust in him, & mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye y feare y LORDE, set y hert vpon him, & y hertes shal be lightened.

Considre the olde generacions of men: y children) and marck them well: was there ever eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer continued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despyse, that called faithfully vpon him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgetteth synnes in y tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them y set him in y truth. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wickid lippes and euell occupied handes, & to the synner y goeth two maner of wayes. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therfore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsake the right wayes, and are turned back in frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to visyte the?

They that feare y LORDE, wil not mistrust his worde: and they that loue him, wil kepe his commandement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl set out y thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe. They that feare y LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and humble their soules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commandementes, and wil be patient, tyll they se himself) sayenge: better is it for vs to fall in to the handes of y LORDE, than in to the handes of men: for his mercy is as greete as him self.

The III. Chapter.

The children of wysdome are a congregacion of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (o my deare children) and do thur after, that ye maye be safe. For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaundeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shal be forgiven him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: & whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father, shal haue a longe life: & he that is obedient for y LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessing: for the blessing of y father buyldeth vpon the houses of the children, but the mothers curse rotyeth out the foundations. Reioyse not whan thy father is reprovied, for it is no honour vnto the, but a shame. For the worshippe of a mans father is his owne worshippe, and where the father is without honour, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge faile, haue pacience to him, & despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shal not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shal be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousness) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembered: thy synnes also shal mele awaye, like as the yse in y saye warne wether.

He y forsaketh his father, shal come to shame: & he that despyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perforce y workes y longynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. The greater thou art, the more humble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt synde saund in the sight of God. For greete power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

Sete not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the groundes of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, thinke vpon that allwaye, and be not curious in many of his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se thine eyes, y thinges y are secrete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the already, which be aboue y capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wytes in vanite. Know he that loueth parell, shal per. sh therein.

In harde herte shal saye euell at y last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prosper: & he that is frowarde of hert, wyl euer be the worse and worse.) A wickid hert shal be laden w sorowes, and y vngodly sinner wyl heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for y plancke of synne shal be rodd out in the. The hert of h m y hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hie thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wise & hath vnderstandinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousness. Water quengeth burnynge fyre, & mercy reconyleth synnes. God hath respect vnto him y is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

The III. Chapter.

M Sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despyse not an hongric soule, and despye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helpelesse, and withdrawe not the gift from y nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro y poore, y thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of y in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: eue he y made him, shal heare him. Be curteous vnto y company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe y heade to a man of worshippe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and y w mekenesse.

Deluyer him y suffreth wroge fro y hade of y oppressor, & be not saint harted w hachon sitre: it in iudgmet. Be merciful vnto y fatherles as a father, & be in steade of an husbade unto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obedient sonne of thy father, and he shall love thee more than thy mother doth. Wisdom beareth life in to his children, receiveth they that seek her, and will go before thee in the way of righteousness. He that loveth her, longeth life: they that seek her diligently, shall have great joye. They that keep her, shall have the heritage of life: for where she entrencheth in, there is the blessing of God. They that honour her, shall be the servants of the holy one: and they that love her, are beloved of God. Who so giveth eare unto her, shall iudge the heathen: and he that hath respect unto her, shall dwell safely.

C He that beleueth her, shall have her in possession, and his generation shall endure: for when he falleth, she shall go with him before all. Feare, drede and tentacion shall she bring upon him, and crye him in his doctrine: till she have so proved him in his thoughts, that he committe his soule unto her. Then shall she stablish him, bringe the right way unto him, make him a glad man, shewe him his secretes, and heape upon him the treasures of knowledge, understandinge and righteousness. But yf he go wronge, she shall forsake him, and geue him over in to the handes of his enemye.

D My sonne, make moch of the tyme, eschue the thinge that is euell, and for thy life shame not to saye thy trueth. For there is a shame that bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth woollshipe and faulde. Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of thy neyghbour in his aduersite, and kepe not back thy counsell whan it maye do good, neither hyde thy wysdome in thy beutey. For in the tyme is wysdome knowne, so is understandinge, knowledge and lernynge in the talkinge of the wysse, and stedfastnesse in thy wordes of righteousness. In no wise speake agaynst the worde of treuth, but be ashamed of the lyes of thine owne ignorance. Shame not to confesse thine erreure, and submitte not thyself unto every man because of synne. Withstande not the face of the mightie, and stryue not agaynst the streame. But for the treuth stryue thou unto death, and God shall fight for thee agaynst thine enemies. Be not hasty in thy tonge, neither slacke and negligent in thy wordes. Be not as a lyon in thine owne house, destroyinge thy household folkes, and oppressinge them that are vnder thee. Let not thine hande be stretched out to receaue, and shutt whan thou shouldest geue.

The V. Chapter.

Trust not vnto thy riches, and saye not: I have ynough for my life. (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion.) Solowe not the lust of thine owne heart in thy strength, and saye not: I shall be safe. For who will cast me downe because of my wordes? For doubtles God shall avenge it. And saye not: I have committed no synnes, but what euell hath happened me? For the Almighty is a pacient rewarder. Because thy synne is forgiven, be not therefore without feare, neither heape one synne vpon another. And saye not: I have the mercy of the LORD. For he shall forgewe my synnes, but they neuer so many. For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cometh downe vpon synners.

Make no tarienge to turne vnto the LORD, and put not off thy daye to daie: for suddenly shall his wrath come, and in the tyme of vengeance he shall destroye thee. Trust not in thy riches, for they shall not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to every wynde, and go not in to every waye: for so doeth the synner that hath a double tonge. (Stonde fast in the waye of the LORD, be stedfast in thy understandinge, abyde by thy worde, and solowe the worde of peace and righteousness. Be geyle to heare thy worde of God, that thou mayest understande it, and make a true answer to wysdome. Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuynge answer. If thou hast understandinge, shappe thy neyghbour an answer. If no, laye thine hand vpon thy mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vncrete worde, and so be confounded. Thou that art in a mans wyse talkinge, but thy coge of thy discrete is his owne distructiō. Be not a pryuy accuser as longe as thou lyvest, and do no slander to thy tonge. For shame and sorrow goeth ouer the thefe, and an euell name ouer him that is double tonged: but he that is a pryuy accuser of other men, shall be hated, envied and confounded. Se that thou sufficethe small and greates alyke.

The VI. Chapter.

Des not thy neyghbours enemye for thy friends sake: for who so is euell shall be thy heyre of rebuke and dishonour, and who so ever beareth envye and a double coge, offendeth. Be not proude in the deuoyce of thine owne understandinge, lest thy leues wither, and thy frute be destroyed, and so thou be left as a drye tree. For a wicked soule destroyeth him that hath it, maketh him to be laughed at, and scorned of his enemies, (and bringeth him to the porcion of the vngodly.) A swete worde multiplieth frendes, and pacieth the heart at variacion, and a thankfull tonge will be plentiful in a good man. Holde friendship with many, nevertheless haue but one counsellor of a thousande.

If thou gettest a frende, proue him first, and be not hasty to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and will not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemye, and taketh parte agaynst thee: and yf he knowe thy hurt by thee, he telleth it out. Agayne, some frende is but a companyon at the table, and in the daye of neede he contynueth not. But a sure frende will be vnto thee euery as thyne owne self, and deale faithfully with thy household folke. If thou suffre trouble and aduersite, he is with thee, and hydeth not himself from thee. Depart from thine enemies, yee and beware of thy frendes.

A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth such one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithful frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithful frende is a medecyne of life, and they that feare the LORD, shall fynde him. Who so feareth the LORD, shall prosper with frendes: and as he is himself, so shall his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctrine from thy youth up, so shalt thou fynde wysdome till thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciely for hir good frutes. For thou shalt haue but litle labour in hir worke, but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. O how exceedinge sharpe is wysdome to vlnerned men: an vnstedfast body will not remayne in her. Vnto such she is as it were a twychstone, and he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wysdome is to him but in name, there be but few that haue knowledge of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abydeth euer vnto the appearinge of God.)

Gee eare (my sonne) receaue my doctrine, and refuse not my counsell. Put thy foot in to his lynckes, and take his yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shoulder vnder her, beare her paciely, and be not weery of hir bandes. Come vnto her with thy whole heart, and kepe her waves with all thy power. Seke after her, and she shall be shewed thee: and whan thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt fynde rest in her, and that shall be turned to thy greates joye. Then shall his feet be a stronge defence for thee, and his yock a glorious rayment. For the beweye of life is in her, and hir bandes are the complinge together of saluacion. See a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue understandinge: and yf thou wilt applye thy mynde, thou shalt be wysse. If thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctrine: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wysse. Stonde with a multitude of such elders as haue understandinge, and consente vnto their wysdome with thine heart: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons, and that the worthy sentences escape thee not. And yf thou seist a man of discrete understandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy foot treade vpon the steppes of his doores. Let thy mynde be vpon the commandementes of God, and be earnestly occupied in his lawes: so shall he stablish thy heart, and geue thee wysdome at thine owne desyre.

The VII. Chapter.

No euell, so shall there no harme happen vnto thee. Depart awaye from the thinge that is wicked, and no myfortune shall medle with thee. My sonne, sowe no euell thinges in the sowes of vnrightheousnes, so shalt thou not reape the sevenfold. Laboure not vnto man for any lordshipe, neither vnto the kynge for the seate of honoure. Justifie not thy self before God (for he knoweth the heart) and desyre not to be reputed wysse in the presence of the kynge. Make no labour to be made a iudge, excepte it be so were, and thou couldest mightely put downe wickednes: for yf thou shouldest stonde in a we of the presence of the mightie, thou shouldest fayle in geuynge sentence. Offende not in the multitude of the cite, and put not thyself amonge the people. Bynde not two synnes together, for in one synne shalt thou not be unpunished. Saye not: I shall, God will loke vpon the multitude of my oblations, and whan I offere to the hyest God, he will accepte it.

Be not saynt harted whan thou makest thy prayer, neither slacke in geuynge of almesse. Laugh no man to scorne in the benyngnesse of his soule, for God (which seeth all thinges) is he that can bunge downe, and set vp agayne. Accepte no lesynge agaynst thy brother, neither do the same agaynst thy frende. Use not to make any manner of lye, for the custome therof is not good. Make not many wordes, whan thou art amonge the elders: and whan thou prayest, make not moch babling. Let no laborious worke be tedious vnto thee, neither the husbandrie which the Allmightie hath created. Make not thy boast in the multitude of thy wickednes, but humble thy selfeuen from thine hert: and remember that the wrath shall not be longe in tattering, and that the vengeance of the flesh of þe vngodly is a very fyre and woume. Be not ouer thy frende for any good, ner thy faithfull brother for the best golde.

C Departe not from a discrete and good woman, that is fallen vnto the for thy porcion in the feare of the LORDE, for þe gift of hir honesty is aboue golde. Where as thy seruauunt worketh truly, intreate him not euell, ner the hyeling that is faithfull vnto the. Loue a discrete seruauunt as thine owne soule, defraude him not of his libertie, nether leaue him a poore man. If thou haue catell, loke well to them: and yf they be for thy profit, kepe them. If thou haue sonnes, brynge them vp in nurture and lemyng, and holder them in awe from their youth vp. If thou haue daughters, kepe their body, and shew not thy face cherefull towarde the. Manye þe daughter, and so shalt thou perferme a weightie matter: but geue her to a man of vnderstandinge. If thou haue a wife after thine owne mynde, forsake her not: (but comitte not thy self to the hateful.)

Honoure thy father from thy whole herte, and forgett not the sorowfull trauaile that thy mocher had w the: remember that thou wast borne thorow them, and how cast thou recompense them the thinges that they haue done for the. Feare the LORDE with all þe soule, and honoure his ministers. Loue thy mother with all thy strength, and forsake not his seruauentes. Feare the LORDE with all thy soule, and honoure his prestes. Geue them their porcion of the first frutes and increase of þe earth, like as it is commaunded the: geue them y shoulders, and their appoynted offeringes, and firstlinges. Reach thine hande vnto the poore, that God maye blesse the with plenty. Be liberall vnto all men lyuynge, yet let not but do good euen to them that are deed.

D Let not them that receiue be without comforte, but merue with such as mourne. Let it not greue the to vyset the sick, for that shall make the to be loued. What so euer thou takest in hande, remember the ende, and thou shalt neuer do amysse.

The VIII. Chapter.
S Tryue not with a mightie man, lest thou chaunse to fall in to his handes. Make no variaunce w a rich man, lest he happen to bringe vp an harde quarrell against þe. For golde and silver hath vnderdoney a man, yee eue þe hertes of kynge hath made to fall. Stryue not w a man that is full of wordes, and laye no stickes vpon his fyre. Be no company with the vnlerned, lest he geue thy kynred an euell reporte. Despyse not a man that turneth himself awaye from synne, and cast him not in the teth withall: but remember þe we are frayle euerychone. Thyne scoone of newe in his olde age, for we maye olde also. Be not glad of the death of thine enemye, but remember that we must dye all the sorte of vs (and sayne wolde we come in to ioye.) Despyse not the sermons of such docters as haue vnderstandinge, but acquainte thy self w the wyse sentences of them: for of them thou shalt lerne wysdome and the doctrine of vnderstandinge, and how to scape greate men without complaynte.

Go not from þe doctrine of the elders, for they haue lerned it of their fathers. For of them thou shalt lerne vnderstandinge, so þe thou mayest make answer in þe tyme of neede. Bynde not þe coales of synners, lest thou be brent in the fyre flammes of their synne. Resist not the face of the blasphemour, that he laye not wayte for thy mouth. Lend not vnto him that is mightier then thyself: If thou lendest him, counte it but lost. Be not suertie aboue þe power: yf thou be, then thou shalt surely to paye it. Go not to lawe w the indige, for he wyl indige a cordinge to his owne honoure. Trauaile not by the waye w him þe is branelesse, lest he do the euell: for he shall loweth his awne wilfulnes, and so shalt thou perish thorow his foly.

Stryue not with him that is angry and cruell, and go not with him in to þe wyldernes: for bloude is nothinge in his sight, and where there is no helpe, he shall murther þe. Take no counsell at foolles, for they loue nothinge but the thinges that please themself. Make no counsell before a stranger, for thou canst not tell what wyll come of it. Ope not thine hert vnto euery man, lest he be vnchaste full to the, and put the to reprove.

The IX. Chapter.

Be not gelous ouer þe wyse of thy besome, þe she shew not some shew of poynthe of wicked doctrine vnto the. Be not the power of thy lyfe vnto a woman, lest she come in þe strength, and so thou be confounded. Loke not vpon a woman that is desyrous of many men, lest then fall in to hir snares. Use not the company of a woman that is a player and dauser, and heare hir not, lest thou perish thorow hir entysing. Beholde denot a mayde, that thou be not hurt in hir bewtye. Cast not thy mynde vpon harlottes in any maner of thinge, lest then destroye both thy self and thine heretage. Go not aboute gasinge in euery layne of the cite, ne the midde thou abide in the stretes therof. Turne awaye thy face from a beutyfull woman, and loke not vpon the saynesse of o thet.

Many a man hath perished thorow the bewtye of women, for thorow the desyre is kyndled as it were a fyre. (An aduenterous woman shall be trodden vnder sores as myre, of euery one that goeth by the waye. Many a man wonderinge the bewtye of a straunge woman, haue bene cast out, for hir wordes kyndle as a fyre.) Syt not w another mans wyfe by any meane, lye not with her vpon the bed, make no wordes with her at þe nyght lest thine hert consent vnto her, and so thou with thy bloude fall in to destruction. For thou shalt not an olde frende, for the new shall not be like him.

A new frende is new wine: let him be olde, and thou shalt drynke him with pleasure. Desyre not þe honoure and riches of a synner, for thou knowest not what destruction is for to come vpon him. Desyre not thou in the thinge that the vngodly haue pleasure in: beinge sure, that the vngodly shall not be accepted vntill their graue.

Repeche from the man that hath power to slaye, so nedest thou not to be afrayed of death. And yf thou comest vnto him, make no farte, lest he happen to take awaye thy life. Remember that thou goest in the myddest of snares, and vpon the bulwookes of þe cite. Bewarre of thy neighbour as nye as thou canst, and medle with such as be wyse and haue vnderstandinge. Let iust men be thy gyses, let thy myrth be in the feare of God, let the remembraunce of God be in thy mynde, and let all thy talkynge be in the commaundementes of the hyest. In the handes of craftesmen shall the workes be commended, so shalt the prynces of the people in the wysdome of their talkynge. A man full of wordes is perous in his cite: and he that is temerarious and past shame in his talkynge, is to be abhorred.

The X. Chapter.

Wyse iudge wil orde his people with discrecion, and where a man of vnderstandinge beareth rule, there goeth it well. As the iudge of the people is himself, so are his officers: and loke what maner of man the ruler of the cite is, soch are they that dwell therein also. An vnwise kinge destroyeth his people, but where they that be in auctorite are men of vnderstandinge, there the cite prospereth.

The power of the earth is in the hande of God, and whan his tyme is, he shall set a profitable ruler vpon it. In the hande of God is the power of man, and vnto the scribes shall he laye his honoure. Remember no wronge of thy neighbour, and medle thou w no vnrighteous workes. Pryde is hateful before God and men, and all wickednes of the hee then is to be abhorred. Because of vnrighteous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shall be traslated fro one people to another.

There is nothinge worse then a covetous man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and asphes: There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylchic dogge rhylye he lyueth.

And though the phisician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in conclusion it goeth after this maner: to daye a kynge, tomorrow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpentes, bestes and woumes. The begynnyng of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the originall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shall be fylled with cursinges, and at þe last it shall ouerthrowe him. Therefore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonour, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

God hath destroyed the states of prynces, and sett vp the meke in their strade. God hath wythered the rotes of the proude heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the lordes of the heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to cease from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of þe humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether wrothfulnes for mens children. The side of men that feareth God, shall be brought to honoure: but þe side which transgresseth the commaundementes of þe LORDE shall be shamed. He þe is the ruler amonge brethren, is holde in honoure amonge them, and he regardeth such as feare the LORDE.

The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God.

Despyse not thou the iust poore man, and magnifie not þe rich vngodly. Greate is the iudge and mightie in hond, yet is there none greater, then he þe feareth God. Vnto þe seruant that is discrete, shal the fre do seruyce. He that is wyse and well nurtured, wyll not grudge whan he is resourmed, and an ignoraunt body shal not come to honoure. Be not proude to do thy worke, and dispare not in the tyme of aduersite. Better is he þe labourer, and hath plenteousnes of all thinges, then he þe is gorgeous, and wanteth bled.

My sonne, kepe thy soule in mekenes, and geue her hir due honoure. Who shal iustifie him, that synneth agaynst himself? Who wil honoure him, that dishonoureth his owne life? The poore is honoured for his faithfulness and truerth, but þe rich is had in reputaciō because of his goodes. He that ordreth himself honestly in pouerte, how much more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? And who so ordreth himself vnonestly in riches, how much more shal he behaue himself vnonestly in pouerte?

The XI. Chapter.

He wysdome of him þe is broughte lowe, shal lift vp his heade, and shal make him to syt amonge greate mē. Commende not a man in his berwyte, nether despyse a man in his vetter appareance. The Dey is but a small beast amonge the foules, yet is his frute excedyng swete. Be not proude of thy rayment, and exalte not thyself in the daye of thy honoure: for þe workes of the hystorye only are wonderfull: yee glorious, secrete and vnkowne are his workes. Many cyrauntes haue bene fayne to syt downe vpon the earth, and vnclifly hath wome þe crowne. Many myghtie mē haue bene brought lowe, and the honorable haue bene deliuered in to other mens handes. Condemne no man, before thou haue tryed out the matter: and whan thou hast made enquisicion, then resourme righteously. Geue no sentēce before thou hast herde the cause, but first let men tell out their tayles.

Serue not for a matter that toucheth not thyself, and stonde not in the iudgment of synners. My sonne, medle not with many matters: and yf thou wylt be riche, thou shalt not gett it: and though thou rennest þe waye afore, yet shalt thou not escape. There is some mā that labourerth, and the more he reuerierth himself, the lesse he hath. Agayne, some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, waiteth strenght, and hath greate pouerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp from his lowe estate, and lifteth vp his heade: so that many men maruell at him, and geue honoure vnto God.

Prosperite and aduersite, life and death, pouerte and riches come all of the LORD. (Wysdome, nurture and knowledge of þe LORD are with him. Erreure and darthenes are made for synners: and they that exalte themselves in euell, wate olde in euell.) The gift of God remayneth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal geue prosperite for euer. Some man is rich by luyngge nygardy, and is the porcion of his rewarde, in that he seeth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself alone. And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, þe he must leane all these thynges vnto other men, and dye himself. Stande thou fast in thy couenaunt, and exercise thyself therein, and remayne in the worke vnto age. Contynue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thyng in þe sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and chaunge suddenly. The blessing of God hasteth to þe rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to flouish and prospere. Say not what helper it me? and what shal I haue? why? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? Whan thou art in miserie, forget not aduersite: and whan it passeth not well with the, haue a good hope, that shal be better. For it is but a small thyng to God, in the daye of death to rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discovered. Praise no body before his death, for a man shal be knowne in his children.

Bringe not euery man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dynasty. Like as a partrich in a maude, so is the hert of the proude: and like as a spyer, that loketh vpon the fall of his neghb. For he turneth good vnto euell, and slaundereth the chaste. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, and vngodly mā layeth wayte for bloude. Beware of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth many thynges, to bringe þe in to a perpetuall shame. If thou takest an aleaunt vnto þe, he shal destroye the in vnquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes.

The XII. Chapter.

Whan thou wylt do good, knowe to whom thou doest it, and so shalt thou be greatly thanked for thy benefite.

Do good vnto the righteous, and thou shalt fynde greate rewarde: though not of him, yet (no doute) the LORD him self shal rewarde the. He stodeh not in a good case, that is allway occupied in euell, and geueth no allmes: for the hystorye hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repentaunce. Geue thou vnto such as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shal recompense vengeance vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bled be geuen him, that he be not mightier then thyself therein. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as much euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the hystorye hateth synners, and shal rewarde vengeance to the vngodly.

In prosperite a frende shal not be knowne, and in aduersite an enemye shal not be hyd. For whan a mā is in wealch, it greueth his enemies: but in heuynes and trouble a man shal knowe his frende. Trust neuer thine enemy, for like as an yron rusteth, so doth his wickednes. And though he make much croutunge and knelinge, yet kepe well thy mynde, and beware of him. Set him not by þe, nether let him syt at thy right hande: lest he turne him, gett in to thy place, take thy rowme and sette thy seate, and so thou at the last remembre my wordes, and be pucted at my sayenges.

Bynde not two synnes together, for the one shal not ene be unpunished. Who wil haue pite of the charmer, that is stynged of þe serpent, or of all such as come nye þe beastes? And so is it to him þe kepeth company with a wicked mā, and lappeth him self in his synnes. For a season wil he byde with the, but yf thou stamble, he tarieth not. An enemy is swete in his lippes, he can make many wordes and speake many good thynges: yee he can wepe with his eyes, but in his herte he ymagineth, how to throue the in to the pytte: and yf he maye fynde oportynite, he wil not be satisfied with bloude. If aduersite come vpon the, thou shalt fynde him there first: and though he proude to do þe helpe, yet shal he vndermyne þe. He shal shake his heade, and clape his handes ouer þe for very giabnes, and why? he maketh many wordes, he shal dysguise his countenance.

The XIII. Chapter.

So so toucheth pitch, shal be fylled withall: and he that is fanlyar with þe proude, shal clothe himself with pryde. He taketh a burthen vpon him, that accompanieth a more honorable man then him self. Therfore kepe no familiarite with one that is richer then thyself. How agree the kerell and the pott together? for yf þe one be synnten agaynst the other, it shal be broken. The rich dealeth vnrighteously, and threateneth withall: but þe poore beynge oppressed and wrogeously deale withall, suffreth scarcenesse, and geueth saye wordes. If thou be for his profit, he vseth the: but yf thou haue nothinge, he shal forsake the. As long as thou hast any thyng of thine owne, he shal be a good fellowe with the: yee he shal make the a bare man, and not be sorry for the. If he haue nede of the, he shal defraude the: (with a preuy mock) shal he put the in an hope, and geue the all good wordes, and saye: what wantest thou? Thus shal he shame þe in his meate, vntill he haue suppe the cleane vpon twyse or thryse, and at the last shal he laugh the to scoone. Afterwarde, whan he seyth that thou hast nothinge, he shal forsake the, and shake his heade at the.

Beware, that thou be not disceaued and broughte downe in thy symplenesse. (Be not to humble in thy wysdome, lest whan thou art broughte lowe, thou be disceaued thow wofullnes.) If thou be called of a mightie man, absent thy self, so shal he call the to him the more oft. Piasse not thou vnto him, that thou be not shott out: but go not thou farre of, lest he forgett the. Withdrawe not thyself fro his speach, but belue not his many wordes. For so much comunicacion shal he tempre the, and (with a preuy mock) shal he question þe of thy secretes. The vnnerefull mynde of his shal march þe wordes, he shal not spare to do þe hurte and to put þe in prison. Bewarre, and take good hede to thyself, for thou walkest in parell of þe overthrowinge.

Now whan thou hearest his wordes, make the as though thou werest in a dreame, and wake vp. Loue God all thy life longe, and call vpon him in thy nede. Every beast loueth his like, euen so let euery man loue his neghboure. All flesh wil resorte to their like, and euery man wil kepe company with such as he is himself. But as þe wolfe agreeth with the lambe, so doth the vngodly with þe righteous. What felishippe shulde an holy man haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde asse is the lyons pray in the wildernes. euen so are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, euen so doth the ryche abhorre the poore. If a rich man fall, his frendes sette him vp agayne: but whan the poore falleth, his frendes forsake him. If a rich mā fall in to an erreure, he hath many helpers: he speaketh proude wordes, and yet men iustifie him.

D But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punysshed: yee though he speake wisely, yet can it haue no place. Whan the riche man speaketh, every body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he sayeth, they praysse it vnto the clowdes. But yf the poore man speake, they saye: What selowe is this? and yf he do amysse, they shal destroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no synne in his conscience, and pouerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenance, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenance is a rokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

The XIII. Chapter.

Blessed is the man, that hath not fallen with y wordes of his mouth, and is not picket with the conscience of synne. Happie is he that hath had no heyrnes in his mynde, and is not fallen from his hope. It becommeth not a covetous man and a nygarde, to be ryche: and what shulde a nygarde do with golde? He that with all his carefulnes heapeth together vnrighteously, gathereth for other folkes, and another mā shal make good chere with his goodes. He y is wicked vnto him self, how shulde he be good vnto other mē? How can soch one haue any pleasure of his goodes? There is no chynne worse, then whan one dissauoureth himself, and this is a rewarde of his wickednes. If he do any good, he doeth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciouse. A nygarde hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face, and despyseth his owne soule. A covetous mans eye hath neuer ynough in the porcion of wickednes, vntyll the tyme that he wither awaye, and haue lost his owne soule.

B A wicked eye spareth bled, and there is scarcenesse vps his table. My sonne, do good to thy self of y thou hast, and geue y LORDE his due offeringes. Remembre y deach carieth not, and how y the couenaunt of the graue is shewed vnto the: (for the couenaunt of this worlde shal dye the deach.) Do good vnto y frende before thou dye, and accordinge to thy abylyte reach out thine hande, and geue vnto y poore. Be not dispoyned of y good daye, and let not y porcion of y good daie overpas

the. Shalt thou not leaue thy trauayles and labours vnto other men? In the daye of the heretage geue and take, and sanctifie thy soule. Worke thou righteously before thy deach, for in y hell there is no measure synde. All flesh shal fade awaye like grass, and like a floushing leafe in a grene tre. Some growe, some are cast downe: even so is y generation of flesh and bloude: one cometh to an ende, another is borne.

All transitory thinges shal fayle at the last, and the worker therof shal go withall. Every chosen worke shal be iustified, and he y medlath withall, shal haue honoure therein. Blessed is the man y kepech him in wysdome, and exercyseth himself in vnderstandinge, and with discrecion shal he thinke vpon the foreknowledge of God. Which considereth y wayes of wysdome in his hert, hath vnderstandinge in his secretes, goeth after her (as one that seeketh hir out) and continueth in hir wayes. He loketh in at hir windowes, and harkeneth at hir doores: he taketh his rest besyde hir house, and festeneth his state in her walles: he shal pitch his tene nye vnto her hande, and in his tent shal good thinges rest for evermore: he shal sett his children vnder hir coveringe, and shal dwell vnder hir banniches. Under hir coveringe shal he be defended from the heate, and in hir glory shal he rest.

The XV. Chapter.

Who so feareth God, wil do good: and who so kepech the lawe, shal optayne wysdome. As an honorable mother shal she meete him, and as a virgin shal she receaue him. With y bled of life and vnderstandinge shal she fede him, and geue him the water of wholsome wysdome to drinke. If he be constant in her, he shal not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shal not come to confucion. She shal bringe him to honoure amonge his neighbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shal she open his mouth. With the spere of wysdome and vnderstandinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of mych and ioye vps him, and geue him an everlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holt vpon her, but soch as haue vnderstandinge, wil meete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of trouth shal be founde in her, even vnto the beholdinge of God.) Praysse is not semely in the mouth of y vngodly, for he is not sent of y LORDE.

for of God cometh wysdome, and the prayse shal stonde by the wysdome of God, and shal be plenteous in a faithfull mouth, and the LORDE shal geue her vnto him.

Say not thou: It is the LORDES faute that I am gone by, for thou shalt not do y thinge that God hateth. Saye not thou: he hath caused me to go wronge, for he hath no mede of the vngodly. God hateth all abhominacion of erreure, and they that feare God wyll loue no soch. God made man from the begynnyng, and left him in the hande of his counsell. He gaue him his commaundementes and preceptes: yf thou wilt obserue the commaundementes, and kepe acceptable faithfulness for ever, they shal preserue y. He hath set water and fyre before the, reach out thine hande vnto which thou wilt. Before man is life and death, good and euell: loke what him listeth, shal be geuen him. For the wysdome of God is greate and mightie in power, and beholdeth all men continually. The eyes of the LORDE are vpon them that feare him, and he knoweth all the workes of man. He hath commaunded no man to do vngodly, ne ther hath he geuen eny man leue to synne.

The XVI. Chapter.

Slyte not thou in the multitude of vngodly children, and haue no pleasure in them, yf they feare not God. Trust not thou to their life, and regarde not their labours: for one sonne y feareth God is better, then a thousande vngodly. And better it is for a man to dye without children, then to leaue behynde him soch children as are vngodly. For by one y hath vnderstandinge, maye a whole cite be vpholden, but though the vngodly be many, yet shal it be waysted thorow them. Many soch thinges hath myne eye sene, and greater thinges then these haue I herde with myne eares. In the congregacion of the vngodly shal a fyre burne, and amonge vnfaithfull people shal the wrath be kyndled.

The olde giants optayned no grace for their synnes, which were destroyed, trustinge to their owne strenght. Neither spared he them, amonge whom Loth was a stranger: but smote them and abhorred them because of the pryde of their wordes. He had no pitie vps them, but destroyed all the people, that were so stout in synne. And for so moch as he overawe not the sire hundred thousande, that gathered them selues together in y hardnesse of their hert: it were marvell yf one beyng hardnecked, shulde be fre. For wrath and wrath is with him: he is both mightie to forgeue, and to poure out displeasure. Like as his mercy is greate, euē so is his punishment also, he iudgeth a man accordinge to his workes. The vngodly shal not escape in his spoyle, and the longe pacience of him that sheweth mercy, shal not byde behynde. All mercy shal make place vnto every man accordinge to the deservynge of his workes, (and after the vnderstandinge of his pilgrymage.)

Say not thou: I wyll hyde my self from God, for who wyll thinke vpon me from abyde? I shal not be knowne in so greates a heape of people, for what is my soule amonge so many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heuens, the depe, the earth and all that therein is, shal be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundations of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges both no hert vnderstonde, but he vnderstandeth every hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his storme, and the most parte of his workes are secrete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteousnes? Who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the tryenge out of men is in the fulfyllinge. He that is humble of hert, thinketh vpon soch thinges: but an vnwyse and erroneous man catcheth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herten thou vnto me, and lerne vnderstandinge, and marke my wordes with thine hert: I wyll geue the a sure doctrine, and plainly shal I instructe the. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynnyng, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnysed his workes from everlastinge, and their begynnynge accordinge to their generacions. None of the hyndered another, nether was eny of them disobedient vnto his worde. After this, God loket vps the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of lyuinge beastes hath he covered the grounde, and they all shal be turned vnto earth agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

When shope man of the earth, and turned him vnto earth agayne. He gaue him the nombre of dayes and certayne tyme, yee and gaue him power of the thinges that are vps earth. He clothed him with strenght, and made him a fere his ownelikes. He made all flesh to stonde in awe of him, so that he had the dominion of all beastes and foules. He made out of him an helper like vnto him self, and gaue him discrecion and tonge, eyes and eares, and a hert to vnderstande, and fylled them with instruction ⁊ vnderstandinge. He created for them also the knowlege of the spirite, fylled their hert with vnderstandinge, and shewed them good and euell. He sett his eye vpo their her-tes, declaringe vnto them his greate and no-ble workes: that they shulde prayse his ho-ly name together, reioyse of his wonders, ⁊ be tellinge of his noble actess. Besydes this, he gaue them instruccion, and the lawe of li-ue for an heretage. He made an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, and shewed them his righteousnes ⁊ iudgmentes. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares herde the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: beware of all vnrighteous thinges. He gaue euery man also a commaundement concernynge his neighbour.

Their waies are euer before him, and are not hyd from his eyes. He hath sett a ruler vpon enery people, but Israel is y^e LORDES porcion. All their woorkes are as the Sonne in y^e sight of God, z his eyes are allwaye lo- tyng vpon their wayes. All their vnrighteousnesses are manifest vnto him, z all their wickednesses are open in his sight. The mercy y^e a man sheweth is as it were a pitse to him, and a mans good dede preferreth him as the apple of an eye. At the last shall he awake, z rewarde enery man vpon his be- he as he hath deserved, and shal turne them together in to the nethermost partes of the earth. But vnto them that wyl repent, he hath geue the waye of righteousness. As for such as be wake, he comforeth the, suffreth them, and sended them the porcion of y^e ve rice. O turne then vnto the LORDE, forsake thy synnes, make thy prayer before the LORDE, do the lesse offence, turne agayne vnto the LORDE, forsake thine vnrighteousnes, be an vtter enemye to abhominacion (lerne to knowe the righteousness and iudgements of God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth for the z in the prayer of the most hye God. Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde, with such as be lyuinge and geue thanks vnto God.)

Who wil prayse the LORDE in the hell?
 Abyde not thou in the erreure of the vnged ly, but geue him thātes before death. As fo y deed, thankfulnessse perissheth from him as nothinge. Geue thou thankes in thy life, yee whyle thou art lymynge ⁊ whole shalt thou geue thankes, and prayse God and reioyse in his mercȳ. O how greate is the louynge kyndnesse of the LORDE, and his mercifull goodnes vnto such as turne vnto him? In all thinges maye not be in man: & why? the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare tht the Sonne? yet shal it say

le. Or what is more wicked, then the thinge that flesh and bloude hath ymaged: and that same shall be reprobred. The LORDE seyth the power of the hye heauen, and all are but earth and affshes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Let that syneth for euermore, made all things together. God onely is righteous, & remaineth a victorious eye for euer. Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him? Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes? Who shal deuide the power of his greatnesse? Or, who shal take vpon him to tell out his mercy? As for the wonderous workes of y^e LORD, they maye nothinge be taken from them, nothinge maye be put vnto them, neither may the grounde of them be founde out. But whan a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour.
What is man? Wherto is he worth? What good or euell can he do? If the nombre of a mans dayes be almost an hundred years, it is moche.

Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto y see, and as a grauell stone is in comparis of the sonde: so are these few yeares to the dayes euerlastinge. Therfore is y LORD patient with them, and poureth out his me cy vpon them. He saue and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginacions of their ha te, that they were euell: therfore heaped he vp his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waie of righteousness. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his ney beure: but y mercy of God is vpon all flesh.
He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourtur ye euen as a shepheard turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chas tenynge, nourtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto them, that stonde in awe of his indgements.

My sonne, when thou doest good, make no grudginge at it: and what so euer thou greatest, speake no discomfortable wordes.
Shal not the dew coole the heate? (Lewys) is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frendly worde a good honest gift: but a gracious man geueth them both. A foole shal cast a man in the teth, and that roughly, & a gift of the mygarde putteth out y eyes. Gaius righteousnes before thou come to iudgmēt: Lerne before thou speake, and go to phisick or erer thou be sick: examen and iudge thy self, before the iudgment come, and so shalt thou synde grace in the sight of God. Hum blethy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conuersacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be reformed vnto death, for the rewarde of God endureth for ever. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one that tempteth God. Thynke vpon the wiathfull indig nation that shalbe at the ende, and the hou re of vengeaunce, whā hē shal turne a waie his face. Whan thou hast ynough, remem ber the tyme of hunger: and whan thou art rych, thynke vpon the tyme of pouerte and scarcenesse.

D From the mornynge vntyll the euenyngethe tyme is chaunged, and all soch chynges are soone done in y sight of God. A wyse man seareth God in all thinges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wyssdome, and he that fyndeth her, maketh moch of her. They that haue had vnderstan-dinge, haue dealt wysely in wordes, haue vnderstonde the truthe and righteousnes, and haue sought out wyse sentēces and iudgmentes. Solowe not thy lustes, but turne y from thine owne will. For ys thou gwest thy soule hir desyres, it shal make thine enemies to laugh the to scorne. Take not thy pleasure in greate volupuousnes, ⁊ medle not to moch withall. Make not to greate cheare of the thinge that thou hast wonne by awauntage, lest thou fall in to pouerte, and haue no-thinge in thy purse.

The XIX. Chapter.

Labourynge man that is genen vnto dionckennes, shall not be riche: and he that maketh not moch of small thyn-ges, shal fall by litle and litle. Wyne and women make wyse men renagates, and put men of vnderstandinge to reprove: and he that ac-companieth aduouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and wommes shal haue him to heretage, yee he shall be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe roted out of the nombre. He that is haistie to gene credence, is light mynded, and both agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be reformed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quencheth wickednes. (He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in micfednes, ſhalbe punyſhed.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish worde twyse, and thou shalt not be hyndered.
Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foo, z yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herten vnto the and marck the: and whan he fyndeth oportunitie, he shall hate the. If thou hast herde a worde agaynst y neighbour, lett it be deed within the: and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foo le trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arrowe short in a dogges thye, so is a worde in a fooles hert. Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignoraunt, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neighbour, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

Tell thy neighbour his faulte, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credence to every worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. For what is he, that hath not offended in his tongue? Geue thy neighbour warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORD. The feare of God is all wysdome, and he that is a righte wyse man keepeth the lawe. As for the doctrine of wickednes, it is no wysdome, and the prudence of synners is no good vnderstandynge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion and a blasphemynge of wysdome. A simple man of small vnderstandynge that feareth God, is better then one that hath much wysdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the Lord.

A craftye sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he wraysth the open and manyfest lawe. A wicked man can behaue himself humbly, and can bowe with his heade, and yet is he but a disceuerer within. He hydeeth his face, and disguiseth it: because he shulde not be knowne, he puenenteth the.

Matt.

And though he be so weak that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye fynde oportunitie, he shall do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstandinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenance. A mans garment, laughter & goynge, declare what he is. Eccli.

The XX. Chapter.

SOME man reproveth his neyghbo of tymes, but not in due season: Agayne, some man holdeth his tonge, and he is wyse and discrete. It is moch better to gene warnynge and to reproue, then to beare euell will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserved from hurt and destruction. Like as whan a chamberlayne thow desyre and lust desyleth a mayden, euen so is it with him that vseth violence and vnrighteousnes in y^e lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man y^e is reprovied, to shewe openly his repentance: for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man kepeth sylence, and is founde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tongue, because he hath not the vnderstandynge of the language: and some man kepeth sylence, waytinge a conuenient tyme. A wyse man wyl hold his tongue tyll he se oportunte, but a wanton and an vndiscrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that vseth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he that taketh auctorite vpon him vnrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: Agayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: Agayne, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall for beyng to proude, and some cometh to worshippe from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle pryce, and must paye for it sevenfolde.

A wyse man with his wordes maketh him self to be loued, but the fauours of fooles shalbe poured out. The gift of the vnwyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seven folde. He shal geue lile, & saye he gaue moch: he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, to morrow he aseth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I haue no frende, I haue no thanke for all my good dedes: yet euen they that care my bried, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorn: He taketh a more perous fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the grounde: euen so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is vntaught, are many vncouenient and vnnete wordes. A wyse sentence shal not be allowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherewithall, and in his rest he shal be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an vnwyse bodyes sake destroyeth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vnderstand himself.) Some man promyseth his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemy of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shal it be euer in the mouth of the vnwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruction to heretage. The conditions of lyers are vn honest, and their shame is euer with them.

A wyse man shal brynge himself to honour with his wordes, and he that hath vnderstandynge shal be sett by amonge great men. He that sylleth his londe, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousness, shal be exalted, & he that pleaseth greute men, shal escape moch euell. Rewar des and giftes blynde the eyes of the wyse, and make him domme, that he can not tell me their fautes. Wyssdome that is hyd, and treasure that is hoorded up, what profit is in them both: Better is he that kepeth his ignorance secreete, then a man that hydeh his wyssdome.

The XXI. Chapter.

W^hosome, yf thou hast synned, do it no more: but praye for thy synnes, that they maye be forgiven the. Fle from synne, euen as from a serpent: for yf thou comest to nye her, she will bite the. The teeth therof are as the teeth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged sworde, which maketh soch woundes that they cannot be healed.

Stryfe and wrongeons dealinge shall waiste awaye a mans goodes, & thow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe roted out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth, and cometh vnto the eares, and his vengeance (or defence) shal come, and y^e haistely. Who so hateth to be resourmed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyl remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne a farre of by his tongue, but he that hath vnderstandynge, perceueth that he shal haue a fall.

Who so buyldeth his house with other mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the vngodly is like stubble gathered together, that is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that keepeth the lawe, wyl holde fast the vnderstandynge ginge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wyssdome. He that is not wyse, wyl not be taught in good: but the vnwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstandynge. The knowlege of the wyse shal flowe like water that runneth ouer, and his counsell is like a fountayne of life.

The hert of a foole is like a broke vessell, he can kepe no wyssdome. Whan a man of vnderstandynge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commende it, and make moch of it. But yf a voluptuous man heare it, he shal haue no pleasure therein, but cast it behynde his back. The talkynge of a foole is like an hevy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a doctrine is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal pondre his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wyssdome vnto a foole: As for the knowlege of the vnwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him y^e hath no vnderstandynge, euen as fetters aboute his fete, and like manacles vpon his right hande. A foole listeth vp his voyce to laughter, but a wyse man shal scarce laugh secretly.

Learnynge is vnto a wyse man a Jewell of golde, and like an armlett vpon his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neighbours house, but one that hath experience, shal be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyl pepe in at y^e window in to the house, but he that is well nourtured, wyl stonde without. A foolish man stondeh herkenynge at the doore, but he that is wyse, wyl be ashamed.

The lippes of the vnwyse wyl be tellynge foolish thinges, but y^e wordes of soch as haue vnderstandynge, shalbe weyed in the balance. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. Whan the vngodly curseth the blasphemers, he curseth his owne soule. A prieny accuser of other men shal desyle his owne soule, and be hated of everyman: (but he that kepeth his tongue and is discrete, shal come to honour.)

The XXII. Chapter.

A slowfull body is moulded of a stone of clai: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtured sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe lile regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husband: but she that cometh to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heuynes. A daughter that is past shame, dishonoureth both hir father & hir husband: the vngodly shal regar de her, but they both shal despise her. the playenge of Musick is not mete where heuynes is, euen so is the correccioⁿ & doctryne of wyssdome euer vnpleasunt vnto fooles.

Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one that gleweth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a tale to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a man out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wyssdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one y^e is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his tale, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because the light sayleth him: eue so let me mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstandynge. Make but litle wepinge because of the deed, for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. Seven dayes do men mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the vnwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

Talke not moch with a foole, and go not with him that hath no vnderstandynge. Bewarre of him, lest it turne the to trauaile, & thou shalt not be desyled with his synne. De parte from him, and thou shalt synde rest, & shalt not be drawe back in to his foolishnes. What is heuier then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? So de, salt & a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an vnwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of wodd bounde together in the foundation of the house can not be lowsed, eue so is it with y^e hert y^e is stablised in y^e thoughte of coucell. The thought of the wyse, shal ne ther feare ne be offended at eny tyme.

Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter house, & an hye buyldinge, maye not abyde y^e wi de & storme: eue so is a foolers hert a fraied in his ymaginacion: he feareth at every thinge, and can not endure. He that nypeth a mans eye, bryngeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth y^e meanyng & thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: & he y^e blasphemeth his frende, breaketh y^e frendshipe, though thou drawest a swerde at thy frende, yet displaye not, for thou mayest come agayne to y^e frende. If he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blasphemest him, bysdayne him, ope his secretes and wounde him traitorously: for all soch thinges shal dryne awaye a frende.

E Be faithfull vnto y^e neghb^r in his pouer te, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abide stedfast vnto him in y^e tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be hey reth him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the oven before y^e fy re, even so euell wordes, rebukes and threate nynges go before bloudsheddinge. Be not a shamed to defende y^e frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shul de do me harme. Who so ever heareth it, shal beware of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, & a sure seale vpon my lippes, y^e I fall not wth th^e, & y^e my tonge destroye me not?

The XXIII. Chapter.

LORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leaue me not in their ymagi naciō & counsell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprose. Who wyl kepe my thoughte with y^e scourge, and the doctryne of wysdō me in myne herte: that he spare not myne ig norance, that I fall not with them, lest my ne ignorances increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes exceede not: lest I fall before myne enemyes, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father & God of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all voluptuousnes fro me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vncleennes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshame fast and obstinate mynde.

Hear me (o ye children) I will geue you a doctryne, how ye shal orde y^e mouth: who so keperth it, shal not perishe thowow his lip pes, ner be hurt thowow wicked wordes (As for the synner, he shalbe taken in his owne vanite: he that is proude and cursed, shal fall therin.) Let not thy mouth be accustomed with swearing, for in it there are many fal
les. Let not the namynge of God be continu ally in y^e mouth: for like as a seruaunt which is oft punyshed can not be without some so re, even so what so ever he be y^e sweareth and nameth God, shal not be cleane purged fro synne. A man that vseth moch swearing, shalbe fylled with wickednes, and the plague shal neuer go from his house. If he begyle his brother, his faute shalbe vpon him: yf he knowlege not his synne, he maketh a double offence: and yf he sweare in vayne, he shall not be founde righteous, for his house shal be full of plagues.

The wordes of y^e swearer bringeth death (God graunte y^e it be not founde in the house of Jacob.) But they y^e feare God, eschue all soch and lye not weltringe in synne. Of ne y^e mouth to vn honest and fylchye talkynge, for in it is the worde of synne. Remember y^e father and chy mother, whā thou art set a monge greace men: lest God forget y^e in their sight, and lest y^e on dotinge in thy custome, suffre rebuke, and wyshe not to haue ben be ne, and so curse the daye of thy natiuite. The man that is accustomed with the wordes of blasphemy, wyl neuer be resourmed all y^e day es of his life. To synne twyse is to moch, but the thirde bringeth wiath and destruction.

An whote stomack cannot be quenched (as like a burnynge fyre) tyll it haue swalowed vp somethinge: enē so an vnchaste mā hath no rest in his flesh, tyll he haue kyndled a fyre.

All bried is swete to an whoiemonger, he wyl not leane of, tyll he haue his purpose. A man that breaketh wedlock, & regardeth not his soule, but sayeth: Tush, who seyth me? I am compassed aboute with dardnes, the walles couer me, no body seyth me: when nede I to feare? The hysst wyl not remem bre my synnes. (He vnderstandeth not that his eyes se all chinges, for all soch feare of n^e dryneth awaye the feare of God from him:
for he feareth onely the eyes of men, and con sidereth not that the eyes of the LORDE a re clearer then the Sonne, beholdinge all y^e wayes of men and the grounde of the depe, and lokynge even to mens hertes in secret places. The LORDE God knowe all chinges or ever they were made, and after they be brought to passe also he loketh vpon them all. The same mā shalbe opely punyshed in y^e stretes of y^e cite, and shalbe chased abrode like a yonge hoise foale: and whan he th^e teth lest vpon it, he shalbe catte. Thus shal he be put to shame of euery man, because he wolde not vnderstande the feare of the LOR DE. And thus shal it go also wth euery wyf y^e leaueth hir husbāde, & getteth enheritaun ce by a straunge mariage. First, she hath bene vnfaithfull vnto the lawe of y^e hysst: Secon dly, she hath forsaken hir owne husbāde: Thirde, she hath played y^e whore in adu tery, & gotte hir childre by another man. She shalbe brought out of y^e cōgregaciō, and hir childre shalbe loked vpo. Hir childre shal take rote: & as for frute, hir brāches shal ge forth none. A shamefull reporte shal be leue behynde her, & hir dishon^r shal not be put out. And they y^e remayne, shal knowe, y^e there is nothinge better, thē y^e feare of God: &
y^e there is nothinge sweter, then to take hede vnto the commaundementes of the LORDE.
A greace wo:shipec is it to folowe y^e LORDE,

for longe life shalbe receaved of him.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Wysdome shal prayse hirself, & be ho noured in God, & reioyse in y^e myd dest of his people: In the cōgrega ciōs of the hysst shal she open hir mouth, & triumphe in y^e beholdinge of his power:
In y^e myddest of hir people shal she be exal ted, & wondred at in the holy fulnesse: In the multitude of the chosen she shalbe commen ded, & amonge soch as be blessed she shalbe prayed, & shal saye: I am come out of the mouth of y^e hysst, first borne before all crea tures. I caused y^e light y^e sayleth not, to ary se in the heauen, & couered all the earth as a cloude. My dwellinge is aboue in y^e heyth, & my seate is in the piler of the cloude. I my self alone haue gone rounde aboute the com passe of heauen, & pearced the grounde of y^e depe: I haue walked in the floudes of y^e see, & haue stonde in all landes: my domynion is in euery people and in euery naciō, & with my power haue I troden downe the hertes of all, both hye and lowe.

In all these chinges also I sought rest, & a dwellinge in some enheritaunce. So y^e crea tor of all chinges gaue me a commaunde ment: he that made me, appoynted me a ta bernacle, and saide vnto me: Let thy dwellin ge be in Jacob, and thy inheritaunce in Is rael, & rote thy self amonge my chosen. I was created from the begynninge and before the woulde, & shal not leaue of vnto the woulde to come. In the holy habitacion haue I ser ued before him, and so was I stablished in Sion. In y^e holy cite rested I in like maner, & in Jerusalem was my power. I toke rote in an honourable people, even in the porciō of y^e LORDE in his heretage, & kepeme in y^e fulnes of the sayntes. I am sett vp an hye like a Cedar vpo Libanus, & as a Cypress tre vpon the mount Hermon: I am exalted like a palme tre in Cadex, & as a rose plāte in Je rich: As a sayre olyue tre in the felde, & as exalted like a plantayne tre by the water side. I haue geuen a smell in the stretes, as y^e Cynamom and Balme, that hath so good a sauour: yee a swete odoure haue I geuen, as it were Myrr of the best.

I haue made my dwellinges to smell as it were of rosyn, Galbanum, of Clowes and Incense, & as Libanus whan it is not hewe downe, & mine odoure is as the pure Balme.
As the Cerebynte haue I stretched out my brāches, and my brāches are the brān ches of honour and longynge sauoure. As y^e ym haue I brought forth frute of a swete

sauioure, and my floures are y^e frute of benē and riches. I am the mother of bewtye, of lo ue, of feare, of knowlege & of holy hope. In me is all grace of life and truerth: In me is all hope of life and vertue. O come vnto me, all ye that be desyrous of me, and fyll youre selues with my frutes: for my spire is sweter then hony, & so is my inheritaunce more then the hony combe: the remembraunce of me en dureth for evermore. They that eate me, shal haue the more honger: and they that dryn ke me, shal thyrste the more. Who so herke neth vnto me, shal not come to confusiō:
and they that worke in me, shal not offende.
They that make me to be knowne, shal haue euerlastinge life.

All these chinges are the boke of life, the couenaunt of the hysst, and the knowlege of the truerth. Moses commaunded the lawe in the preceptes of righteousnes for an herita ge vnto the house of Jacob, and comitted y^e promyses vnto Israel. Out of Dauid his ser uaunt hys ordered to raise vp a most migh tie kinge, syttinge in the seate of honour for euermore. This fylleth with wysdome like as the floude of phison, & as y^e floude of Ti gris, whan the new frutes are a growinge.

This bringeth a plenteous vnderstandin ge, like Euphrates: & fylleth it vp, as Jordane in the tyme of harvest. This maketh nure to breate forth as the light, & as the water Gi hon in y^e harvest. The first hath not knowne her perfectly, nomore shal the last seke out y^e grounde of her. For hir thought is fuller thē the see, and hir counsell is profounder then the greates depe.

I wysdome haue cast out floudes. I am as a greates waterbroke out of y^e riuer. I am as the ryuer Doux, and as a water condyte am I come out of the garden of pleasure. I sayde: I wyl water the garden of my yonge plantes, and fyll the frute of my byrth. So my waterbroke became exceedinge greates, and my ryuer approached vnto the see. For I made doctryne to be vnto all mē as light as the sayre moynynge, and I shall make it to be euer the clearer. (I will pearse thowow all the lower partes of the earth, I wyl lōke v pon all soch as be a slepe, and lighten all thē that put their trust in the LORDE.) I shal yet poure out doctryne, like as prophesy, and leaue it vnto soch as seke after wysdome, and their generacions shal I neuer sayle, vnto
the holy euerlastinge woulde. Beholde, horo that I haue not laboured for my self o nely, but for all them y^e seke after y^e truerth.

The XXV. Chapter.

A These things there are, & my spere fa-uoureth, which be also a lowed before God and men: The vynte of bre-thien, the loue of neighbours, and man & wyfe that agree well together.

These things there be which my soule ha-reth, and I utterly abhoue the life of them:
A poore man that is proude. A rich mā that is a lyar, and an olde body that doteth and is vchaste.

If thou hast gathered nothinge in thy youth, what wilt thou fynde the in thine age? How pleasaunt a thinge is it, whā gray headed men are discrete, & whan the elders can geue good counsell: How coly a thin-ge is wysdome vnto aged men: yee vnderstandinge and counsell is a glorious thinge.
The crowne of olde men is to haue moch experience, & & feare of God is their worshippe.

B There be ix. thinges, which I haue iudged in my hert to be happie, and the tenth wil I tell forth vnto men with my tonge. A man y whyle he lyueth, hath ioye of his children, and seith & fall of his enemies. Well is him, that dwelleth with an houswife of vnderstādinge, and that hath not fallen with his tonge, and & hath not bene faine to serue soch as are vnnete for him. Wel is him, & syndeth a faithfull frende: & wel is him, which talketh of wysdome to an eare & heareth him. How greate is he, & syndeth wysdome & knowlege: Yet is he not aboue him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath sett itself aboue all thinges. Blessed is & man, vnto whō it is graunted to haue the feare of God. On to whō shal he be likened, & keperth it fast?
The feare of God is the begynnynge of his loue, and the begynnynge of faith is to cleue fast vnto it. The heynenes of the hert is all the punysshment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboue all. All punysshment & pla-ge is nothinge in comparison of the plage of the hert, eue so all wickednes is nothinge to the wickednes of a woman.

C What so euer happeneth vnto a man, is nothinge in comparison of it, & his euell wil-lers do vnto him: and all vengeance is no-thinge to the vengeance of the enemye. The re is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the serpent, and there is no wrath aboue & wrath of a woman. I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe house with a wicked wyfe. The wickednesse of a woman chaungeth hir face, she shal mossell hir coutenance as it were a Deer, & as a sack shal she shewe it amonge the neighbours. Hir husbande is brought to shame amonge his neghbours, & whā he heareth it, it maketh him to sighe. All wickednes is but litle to the wickednes of a woman, & porcion of the wylde-ly shal fall vpon her.

Like as to clynne vp a sonby waye is to y fere of the aged, eue so is a wife full of wickednes to a still quyet man. Loke not to wylde-ly vpon the bewtye of a woman, lest thou be prouoked in desyre toward her. The wrath of a woman is dishonoure and greute confusio. As a woman gett the masticke, then is she contrary to hir husbāde. A wicked wife maketh a sory hert, an heuy countenāce and a deed wounde. Of the woman came the begynnynge of synne, and thow her we all are deed. Geue thy water no passage, no not a litle, nether geue a wicked woman her will. If she walke not after thy hande, she shal confounde the in the sight of thy enemies. Cut her of then from thy flesh, that she do not allwaye abuse the.

The XXVI. Chapter.

G Appie is the man that hath a vertuous wyfe, for the nobre of his years shalbe double. An honest woman ma-keth hir husbāde a ioyfull man, & she shal fylle & yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which shalbe geuen for a good porcion vnto soch as feare God.
Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye haue euer a mery hert, & a chearful countenā-
ce. There be thie thinges & my hert feareth, and my face is a frayd of the fourth. Traison in a cite, a sedicious people, and noysome tonges, all these are heuyer then the death.
But whan one is gelous ouer his wife, & bryngeth payne and sorowe vnto the hert and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a scourge of the tonge. Whan one hath an euell wife, it is euen as whan an vnlike part of oxen must drawe together: he that ge-teth her, getteth a scorpion. A drunken woman is a greute plage, for she can not couer hir owne shame.

The whordome of a woman maye be knowne in the pryde of hir eyes and eydelyddes. If thy daughter be not shamefast, holde her straitly, lest she abuse herselfe the-row ouermoch liberte. Bewarre of all the dishonesty of hir eyes, and maruell not if she do agaynst the. Lik as one that goeth by the waye and is thynstie, so shal she open hir mouth, and brynke of euery neyghter that she maye gett.

By every hedge shal she syt her downe, & ope hir quyer agaynst euery arrowe. A loy-ge wyfe reioyseth hir husbāde, and she his bones with hir wysdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye nothinge be compared.

C An honest and manerly woman is a gyft aboue other gyses, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule itself. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hye heauen of & LOR-DE, so is a vertuous wife & bewtye of all hir house. Like as the cleare light is vpon & holy candlestick, so is the bewtye of the face vpon an honest body. Like as the golde pilers are vpon the socetres of syluer, so are the saye legges vpon a woman that hath a constant mynde. Perpetuall are the foundacions that be laied vpon a whole stonye rocke, so are & commandementes of God vpon an holy woman.

D There be two thinges & greue my hert,
and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon
me. Whan an experie man of warre suffreth farsines and pouerte, Whan men of vnderstandinge and wysdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteousnes into synne. Who so doth soch, the LORDE hath pared him vnto the swerde. There be two maner of thinges, which me thyncke to be hede and perylous. A marchaunt can not lightly kepe him from wronge, nether a rauener himselfe from synne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

B Ecause of pouerte haue many one of fended: and he that seeketh to be riche, turneth his eyes asyde. Like as a nale in the wall sticketh fast betwixte two sto-mes, men so doth synne sticketh betwixte & byer and the seller. If he holde him not diligent in & feare of the LORDE, his house shal sone be ouerthrowne. Like as whan one sitteth, the sylthynges remayneth in the syne:
So, remayneth there some vncleane thinge in the thought of man. The ouen proueth the potters vessell, so doth tentacion of troublete righteous men. The tre of the felde is knowne by his frute, so is the thought of man hert knowne by his wordes. Praise no man except thou haue harde him, for a man is knowne by his wordes. If thou folowest righteousnes, thou shalt gett her, and put her vpon & as a saye garment. (And thou shalt dwell with her, and she shal defende the foruer, and in & daye of knowlege thou shalt fynde stedfastnesse.) The byrdes resorte vnto that be occupied withall. The lyon wayteth for & praye: so do the symes lurke vpon the woikes of wickednes. The talkinge of him that feareth God, is nothinge but wysdome: as for a foole, he chaungeth as & Moo-

ne. If thou be amonge the vndiscrete, kepe thy word to a convenient tyme, but amonge ge soch as be wysse, speake on hardely. The talkinge of foolles is abhominacio, and their spoyte is voluptuousnesse and mysnurtoure.
Moch swearynge maketh the haye to ston-de up, and to stryue with soch, stoppeth the eares.

The stryfe of the proude is bloudsheddyng, & their blasphemynge is heuy to hea-
re. Who so discovereth secretes, leseth his credence, and syndeth no frende after his will.
Love thy frende, and bynde thyselfe in faithfulness with him: but yf thou bewrayest his secretes, thou shalt not gett him agayne: For like as the m. is that destroyeth his enemye so is he also that dealeth falsly in the frendshipe of his neighbour.

Like as one that letteth a byrde go out of his honde, can not take her agayne: Euen so thou, yf thou geue ouer thy frende, thou canst not gett him agayne: Yet thou cast not come by him, for he is to farre of. He is vnto the as a Roo escaped out of the snare, for his soule is wounded. As for woundes, they maye be bounde up agayne, and an euell worde maye be reconcyled: but who so betrayeth the secretes of a frende, there is no more hope to be had vnto him.

He that wynceth with the eyes, ymagineth some euell, and no man shal take him from it. Whan thou art present, he shal hyle commende and prayse thy wordes: but at the last he shal turne his taylor, and slauber thy sayenge. Many thinges haue I hated, but nothinge so euell, for the LORDE himself also abhorreth soch one.

Who so casteth a stone at hye, it shal fall vpon his owne heade: and he that synyeth with gyle, woundeth himselfe. Who so diggeth a pytt, shal fall therein: and he that lay-eth a snare, shal be taken in it himself. Who so getteth a wicked noysome counsell, it shal come vpon himself, and he shal not knowe from whence. The proude blasphemie and are-scornefull, but vengeance lurketh for them as a lyon. They that reioyse at the fall of & righteous, shal be taken in & snare, anguysht of hert shal consume them before they dys-
Anger and rigorousnes are two abhominablenes, and & vngodly hath them both vpon him.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

Deut. 32. c
Rom. 12. c
Mat. 5. b
1. b. 13. b

H that seeketh vengeance, shall fynde vengeance of the LORDE, which shall surely kepe him his synnes. For geue thy neighbour the hurte that he hath done the, and so shall thy synnes be forgiven the also, when thou prayest. A man that beareth hatred agaynst another, how darre he desire forgiveness of God? He that sheweth no mercy to a man which is like himself, how darre he aske forgiveness of his synnes? If he that is but flesh, beareth hatred and kepeth it, who wyl increate for his synnes? Remember the ende, and let enemye passe, which seeketh death and destruction, and abyde thou in thy commandementes. Remember thy commandement, so shalt thou not be rigorous over thy neighbour. Thynte vpon the couenant of thy yest, and forgive thy neighbours ignorance. Bewarre of strife, and thou shalt make thy synnes fewer. For an angrie man kindleth variaunce, and the vngodly disquieteth frendes, and putteth discorde amonge them that be at peace. The more wodd there is, the more vehement is the fyre: and the mightier the men be, the greater is the wrath: and the longer the strife endureth, the more it burneth.

C An haistie brawlinge kindleth a fyre, and an haistie strife sheddeth bloude. If thou blowe the sparke, it shall burne: If thou spyte vpon it, it shall go forth, and both these go out of thy mouth. The slanderer and dubble tongued is cursed, for many one that be frendes setteth he at variaunce. The thirde tonge hath disquieted many one, and dryuen them from one londe to another. Stronge cities hath it broken downe, and ouerthrowne the houses of greute men. The thirde tonge hath cast out many an honest woman, and robbed them of their labours. Who so, harkeneth vnto such, shall neuer fynderest, and neuer dwell safely. The stroke of a rod maketh yedders, but the stroke of the tonge smyteth the bones in sunder. There be many that haue perished with the swerde, but many more thorow the tonge.

D Wel is him that is kepte fro an euell tongue, and commeth not in anger therof: which draweth not the yock of such, and is not bound in the bondes of it. For the yock therof is of yron, and a bonde of it of stele. The death therof is a very euell death: hell were better for one, then such a tonge. But the fyre of it maye not oppresse them that feare God, and y flamme therof maye not burne the. Soch as forsake the LORDE, shall fall therein: and it shall burne them, and no man shall be able to quench it. It shall fall vpon the as a Lyg, and deuoure them as a leparde. The best gift & goodes is thomes: why dost thou rather make doies and barres for thy mouth? Thou wiest thy golde and syluer: why dost thou not weye thy wordes also vpon the lance? Bewarre, that thou styde not in thy tonge, and so fall before thine enemye, that laye wayte for the.

The XXX. Chapter.

Who so wil shewe mercy, let him lende vnto his neighbour: and he that is able, let him kepe the commandement. Lende vnto thy neighbour in time of his nede, and paye thou thy neighbour againe in due season. Kepe thy word, be le faithfully with him, and thou shalt alway fynde the thinge that is necessary for the. There haue bene many, that when a thinge was lent them, rekened it to be founde: and made them trauayle and labour, that had helped them. Why let they receaue any thinge, they kysse the handes of such as geue them, and for their neighbours good they haue the voyce. But when they shalde paye agayne they kepe it back, and geue euell wordes, and make many excuses by reason of the tyme: though he be able, yet geueth he scarce the half agayne, and rekeneth the other to be founde. And yf he witholde not his money, he hath he an enemye of him, and that is serued.

He payeth him with cursinge and railing, and geueth him euell wordes for his good de. There be many one which are not glad for to lende, not because of euell, but they feare to lese the thinge that they lende. He haue thou patience with the simple, and holde not mercy from him. Helpe the poore for the commandementes sake, and let him not go emptye from the because of his neede. Lese thy money for thy brother and neighbours sake, and burye it not vnder a stone, wher it rusteth and corrupeth. Gather thy treasure after the commandement of thy best, and so shall it bunge the more gold. Laye vpon the almes in the hand of the poore, and it shall kepe the from all euill. (A mans almes is as a purse with him, which shall kepe a mans sauoure as the apple an eye: and afterwarde shall it crye, and praye every man his rewarde vpon his heade. It shall fight for the agaynst thine enemies, better then the shyld of a giante, or spear of the mightie.)

A good honest man is swettye for his neighbour, but a wicked personne letteth him to shame. Forget not the friendship thy swettye, for he hath geue his soule for y. The vngodly despyseth y good dede of his swettye, and the vntankfull and ignorant leaue his swettye in daunger. (Some man prayeth for his neighbour: and when he hath lost his honesty, he shall forsake him.) Suerishipe hath destroyed many a ryche man, and rauened them as the warres in y see. Mightie people hath it dryuen awaye, and caused the to wandre in straunge countrees. An vngodly man transgressynge the commandement of the LORDE, shall fall in to an euell swerishipe: and though he force himself to get out, yet shall he fall in to iudgment. Helpe thy neighbour out after thy power, and bewarre, that thou thy self fall not in such dett. The these thinge that kepeth in the life, is water and bread, clothinge and lodgyng, to couer the shame.

Better is it to haue a poore luyng in a mans owne house, then delicate sayre amonge the straunge. Be it lile or moch y thou hast, holde the content withall (and thou shalt not be blamed as a vagabounde) for a miserable life is it, to go from house to house: and where a man is fronde, he darre not open his mouth. Though one be lodged, and haue meate and drynke, yet shall he be taken as vnworthy, and heare many bytter rough wordes, namely thus: Go thy waye thou straunger, and prepare a table (for thy self) and fede me also of that thou hast. Awaye thou straunger (so that he regardeth his honoure nomore) my brother commeth in to my house, and so he telleth him the necessity of his house. These thinges are heuy to a man that hath vnder standinge: namely, the forbyddinge of y house, and that the leder casteth him in the teth.

The XXX. Chapter.

Who so loneth his childe, holdeth him still vnder correccion, that he maye haue ioye of him afterwarde (and that he grope not after his neighbours doies.) He y teacheth his sonne, shall haue ioye in him, and nede not be ashamed of him amonge his aquantance. Who so enfourmeth y teacheth his sonne, greueth y enemye, and before his frendes he maye haue ioye of him. Though the father dye, yet is he as though he were not deed: for he hath left one behynde him that is like him. In his life he saue him, and had ioye in him, and was not sorry in his death, (nether was he ashamed before y enemies.) For he left behynde him an auenger agaynst his enemies, and a good doer vnto the frendes. For the life of childe shall binde the woundes together, and his hert is greued at every crye. An vntamed hourse wylbe harde, and a wanton childe wyl be wylfull. If thou brynge vpon thy some delicately, he shall make y afraied: and yf thou playe with him, he shall brynge the to heuyness. Laugh not with him, lest thou wepe with him also, and lest thy teth be sett on edge at the last.

Geue him not liberte in his youth, and ercuse not his foly. Bowe downe his necke whyle he is yonge, hytt him vpon the sydes whyle he is yet but a childe, lest he waxe stubburne, and geue no more force of y (and so shalt thou haue heuyness of soule.) Teach thy childe, and be diliget therein, lest it be to thy shame. Better is the poore beyng whole and stronge, then a man to be riche, and not to haue his health. Health and welfare is aboue all golde, and an whole body aboue all treasure. There is no riches aboue a sounde body, and no ioye aboue the ioye of the hert. Death is better then a wretched life, or contynual sicknes. The good thinges that are put in a close mouth, are lile as when meate is layed vpon y graue.

What good doth the offeringe vnto an Idoll? For he can nether eate, taist, ner smell. Eue so is it also with the riche, whom God maketh seke: he seith it with his eyes, and groweth there after, and is euen as a gelded man, that lyeth with a vyrgin and sygheth. Geue not ouer thy mynde in to heuyness, and vexe nether thy self in thine owne counsell. The ioye and chearfulness of the hert is the life of man, and a mans gladnes is the prolonginge of his dayes. Loue thine owne soule, and comforte thine hert: as for sorrow and heuyness, dryue it farre from y, for heuyness hath slayne many a man, and bryngeth no profit. Zele and anger shorten the dayes of the life: carefulness and sorrow brynge age before the tyme. Vnto a mery hert every thinge hath a good taist, that he eateth.

The XXXI. Chapter.

Rauayle and carefulness for riches taketh awaye the slepe, and maketh the flesh to consume. When one lyeth and taketh care, he waketh euer vpon, lile as greute sicknes breaketh the slepe. The rich hath greute laboure in gatheringe his riches together, and then with the pleasure of his riches he taketh his rest and is refreshed. But who so labourerth and prospererth not, he is poore: and though he leaue of, yet is he a begger. He that loneth riches, shall not be iustified: and who so foloweth corrupcion, shall haue ynough therof. Many one are come in greute myffortune by the reason of golde, and hane founde their destruccion before them. It is a tre of fallynge vnto them that offre it vp, and all soch as be foolish fall therin. Blessed is the rich, which is founde without blemish, and hath not gone after golde, nor hoped in money and treasures. Where is the rich one, and we shal commend him, and call him blessed, for greate thinges doth he amonge his people. Who so is tryed, & founde perfecte in soch thinges, shalbe commended and praised. Who might offende, & hath not offended? Who coude do euell, and hath not done it? Therefore shal his good be stablished, and the whole congregacion shal declare his almesnes. If thou sytt at a greate mans table, open not thy mouth wyde vpon it, and make not many wordes. Remember, that an euell eye is a shiew.

B What thinge created is worse then a wicked eye? therfore wepeth it before euery mans face. Laye not thine hand vpon euery thinge that thine eye seyth, and syryue not with him in the dyshe. Ponder by thy self what thy neighbour wolde sayne haue, & be discrete in euery poynte. Eate the thinge that is set before the, manerly, as it becommeth a man: and eate not to moch, lest thou be abhorred. Leane thou of first of all because of nurture, lest thou be he whom no man maye satisfie, which maye turne to thy decaye. Whā thou syttest amonge many men, reach not thine hāde out first of all. O how well cometh is a wyse man to a litle wyne: so & in slepe thou shalt not be seke therof, ner fele eny payne. A swete wholsome slepe shal soch one haue, and fele no inwarde grefe. He ryseth vp by tymes in & moynge, and is well at ease in him self. But an vnfaciable eater slepeth vnquyetly, and hath ache and payne of the body. If thou selest that thou hast eaten to moch, aryse, go thy waye, cast it of thy stomack, and take thy rest.

C My sonne, heare me, and despyse me not: and at the last thou shalt fynde as I haue tolde the. In all thy workes be diligent and quyd, so shal there no sicknes happen vnto the. Who so is liberall in dealynge out his meate, many men shall blesse him and prayse him with their lippes: and the same is a sure token of his loue and faithfulness. But he & is vnfaithfull in meate, the whole cite shall complayne of him: and that is a sure experience of his infidelite and wickednes. Be not thou a wine drinke, for wyne hath destroyed many a man. The fyre proueth & hard yron, enen so doth wyne proue the hertes of the proude, whā they be dronken.

Wyne sorbely dronken, quydeth the life of mā. If thou drynkest it measurably, thou shalt be temperate. What life is it, & maye contynue without wyne? Wyne was made from the begynnyng to make man glad (and not for dronkenes). Wyne measurably dronke is a reioysinge of the soule and body. But yf it be dronken with crasse, it maketh bytternes and sorowe vnto the mynde. Drunkenes fylleth the mynde of the foolish with shame and ruine, mynsheth the strength, and maketh woundes. Rebutenot thy neighbour at & wyne, and despyse him not in his mynth. Geue him no despyseful wordes, and preasse not vpon him with contrary sayenges.

The XXXII. Chapter.

If thou be made a ruler, pūde not thy self therin, but be thou as one of the people. Take diligent care for them, and loke well chertoy: and whā thou hast bene all thy dewtye, syt the downe, that thou mayest be mery with them, and receaue a crowne of honoure. Talke wysely & honestly, for wysdome becommeth the righte well. Synder not musyk. Speake not, where there is no audience: and poure not forth wysdome out of tyme, at an importunyte. Like as the Carbuncle stone shyneth, that is set in golde, so doth a songe garrysh the wyne feast: and as & Smaragde that is set in golde, so is the swetnes of Musyk by & mynth of wyne.

Thou yonge mā, speake that becommeth the, & that is profitable, and yet scarce whā thou art troyce axed. Comprehende moch with few wordes. In many thinges be as one that is ignorant, geue care, and holde thy tongue withall. If thou be amonge men of hyer anctouite, desyre not to compare thy self vnto them: and whā an elder speaketh, make not thou many wordes therin. Before the thunder goeth lightenyng, and before nurture and shamefastnesse goeth loue and fauoure. Sedde vp by tymes, and be not the last: but get the home soone, & there take thy pastyme, & do what thou wilt: so & thou do no euell, and desyre no mā. But for all thinges geue thankes, vnto him that hath made the, and replenished the with his goodes.

Who so feareth the LORDE, wyl receaue his doctryne: and they that get them to him by tymes, shall fynde grace. He that siteth the lawe, shall be fylled withall. As for him & is but fayned, he wyl be offended therat. They that feare the LORDE, shal fynde the indgment, & their righteousnes shal be led as a light. An vngodly man will not be reformed, but can helpe himself with the example of other in his purpose. A man of vnderstandinge despyseth no good counsell: but a wynde and proude body hath no feare. My sonne, do nothinge without aduysment, so shal it not repēt the after & bede. Go not in the waye where thou mayest fall, ner where thou mayest stumbe against the stone. Be not & self in to a labourous slyperry waye, and beware of thine owne children. In all thy workes put thy trust in God from thy whole hart, for that is the keepinge of the commaundementes. Who so beleueth Gods word, taketh hede to the commaundementes: & he that putteth his trust in & LORDE, shal want nothinge.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Here shall no euell happen vnto him that feareth God: but whā he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall deliuer him. A wyse man hateth not & lawe, but an hypocrite is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstandinge geueth credence vnto the lawe of God, and & lawe is faithfull vnto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof. Be first wel instructed, the maiest thou geue answer. The hert of & foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the axell tre. Like as a wynde boisteth that neryth vnder euery one & syttert vpon him, so is it with a scoonefull frende. Why doth one daie excell another, seynge all the dayes of the yere come of the Sonne? The wysdome of the LORDE hath so parted them asunder, and so hath he ordered the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, & out of the earth of Adam.

In the multitude of science hath & LORDE sundred them, and made their wayes of vnyerse fashions. Some of them hath he blessed, made moch of them, halowed them, & claymed them to himself. But some of the hath he cursed, brought the lowe, & put the out of their estate. Like as & claye is in the potters hande, & all the ordrynge therof at his pleasure: so are men also in the hande of him & made the, so that he maye geue them as it liketh him best. Agaynst euell is good, and agaynst death is life: so is the vngodly agaynst soch as feare God. Beholde thus all the workes of the hys, & there are euer two agaynst two, and one set agaynst another. I am awaked vp last of all, as one that gathereth a ster in harvest. In the giftes of God and in his blessinge I am increased, & hane fylled my wyne presse, like a grape gatherer. Beholde, how I haue not laboured enely for myself, but for all soch as loue nurture and wysdome.

Hear me O ye greates men of the people, & harken & ye eares ye rulers of & congregacion. Geue not & sonne & wyse, & brother & frende power ouer the, whyle thou lyest: & geue not awaye thy substaunce and good to another, lest it repent the, & thou be fayne to begg therfore thy self. As long as thou lyest & hast brech, let no man chaunge the: for better it is thy children to praye the, then & thou shuldest be fayne to loke in their handes. In all thy workes be excellent, that thy honoure be neuer stained. At the tyme whā thou shalt ende thy dayes, and synish thy life, distribute thine inheritaunce. The fodder, the whyppe, and the burden belongeth vnto the Ass: Meate, correccion, and worke vnto the seruant.

If thou set thy seruant to laboure, thou shalt fynde rest. But yf thou let him go ydel, he shall seke libertye. The yock & & whyppe bowe downe the neck, but tame thou thy euell seruant with bōdes & correccion. Send him to laboure, that he go not ydle: for Idylnesse byngeth moch euell. Set him to worke, for that belongeth vnto him and becommeth him well. If he be not obedient, bynde his fete: but do not to moch vnto him in anye wyse, & without discrecion do nothinge. If thou haue a (faithfull) seruante, let him be vnto the as thine owne soule, for in bloude hast thou gotten him. If thou haue a seruante, holde him as thy self, for thou hast neede of him as of thy self. If thou intreatest him euell, and kepest him harde, and makest him to be proude, and to renne awaye from &, thou canst not tell, what waye thou shalt seke him.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A wyse people begyle them selues with vayne and disceatfull hope, and foolles trust in dreames. Who so regardeth dreames, is like him that wil take holde of a shadowe, and solowe after the wynde: Euen so is it with the appearinges of dreames. Before the face is the likenes of a face. Who can be clensed of & vncleane? Or what treuth can be spoken of a lyar? Soyth sayenge, witchcraft, sorcery and dreameinge is but vanyte: like as whā a woman trauayleth with chylde, and hath many fantasyes in hir herte. Where as soch visions come ner of God, set not thine herte vpon them: for dreames haue disceaued many a mā, and they sayled, that put their truste therein.

B The lawe shalbe fulfilled without lyes, & wysdome is sufficient to a faithfull mouth. A wise man & is well instructe, vnderstondeth much: & he & hath good experie-ce, knoweth litle: & he & erreth, causeth much wickednes. Whan I was yet in erreure, I lerned much also: yee I was so lerned, that I coude not expresse it all, and came oft in pa-rell of death therouer, tyll I was delynered from it. Now I se, that they which feare God, haue the right sperte: for their hope stō-deth in him, that can helpe the. Who so feareth the LORDE, stōdeth in awe of no man, and is not a frayd, for the LORDE is his hope and comforte.

C Blessed is the soule of him & feareth the LORDE: In whō putteth he his trust: who is his strength? For the eyes of the LORDE haue respecte vnto them, that loue him. He is their mightie proteccion, & strōge grounde: A defence for the heate, a refuge for the hote noone daye, a succore for stomblyng, & an helpe for fallynge. He setteth vp the soule, and lighteneth & eyes: He geueth health life, and blessinge. He that geueth an offerin-ge of vnrightheous good, his offeringe is refused: and the scornfull dealinges of the vn-rightheous please not God. God hath no de-lyte in the offeringes of & vngodly, nether maye synne be reconcyled in the multitude of oblations. Who so bryngeth an offeringe out of & goodes of & poore, doth enē as one & kylleth & sonne before & fathers eyes.

D The bred of the needfull is the life of the poore: he & defraudeth him therof, is a man, of bloude. Who so robbeth his neghbō of his lyvinge, doth as greates synne as though he slew him to death. He that defraudeth & laborer of his hye, is a bloude shedder. Whā one buyldeth, and another breaketh downe, what profit haue they then but labour? Whan one prayeth, & another curseth, whose se voyce wyl the LORDE heare? He that washteth himself because of a deed body, & then toucheth the deed agayne, what doth his washtinge? So is it with a man that fasteth for his synnes, and doth them agayne: who wil heare his prayer? Or what doth his fastynge helpe him?

The XXXV. Chapter.

10.17. c

Who so kepech the lawe, bryngeth of-ferynges ynough. He that holdeth fast the commaundement, offereth the right health offryng. He & is thankfull

& recompenseth, offereth syne floure. Whō is mercifull & geueth allmes, & is the right thank offryng. God hath pleasure, whā one departeth fro synne: & to forsake vnrightounes recōaleth vs to him. Thou shalt not appeare emptye before & LORDE, for all soch is done because of & cōmaundement. The offeryng of & rightheous maketh & an offerin-ge, & a sweete smell is it before & hyest. The offryng of the rightheous is acceptable vnto God, & shal neuer be forgottē. Gene God has honō with a chearfull eye, & kepe not backe the firstlinges of & handes. In all thy giftes shew a mery countenance, & halowe thy thes vnto God w gladnes. Gene vnto God, acordynge as he hath enriched & prospered the: & loke what thine hande is able, & geue w a chearfull eye: for the LORDE recompen-seth, & geueth & fewe tymes as much agayne.

Geue no vnrightheous giftes, for soch wil not be receaue. Bewarre of wrongeous offrynges, for & LORDE is a rightheous iudge: & regardeth no mans personne: He accepteth not the personne of the poore, but he heareth & prayer of & oppressed. He despyseth not & desyre of & fatherles, ner & wyddow, whā she poureth out hir prayer before him. Doth not God se & teares, & renne downe & dētes of the wyddow? Or heareth he not the am-playnce, ouer soch as make her to wepe? Who so serueth God after his pleasure, shalbe accepted, & his prayer reacheth vnto the clou-
des. The prayer of him & humbleth himself, goeth thorow & cloudes, tyll she come nye.
She wyl not be comforted, ner go hir way, tyll & hyest God haue respecte vnto her, ge-ue true sentēce, & persourme & iudgme. And & LORDE wil not be slack in cōmyng, nether longe: tyll he haue smytte in sonder & beetes of & vnrightheous, & auenged himself of & heithen: tyll he haue takē away & mul-tude of & cruell, & brokē the cepter of the vn-rightheous: tyll he geue euery man after his workes, & rewarde them as they haue deser-ued: tyll he haue delynered his people, mayn-tened their cause, & reioysed them in his mercy. O how sayre a thinge is mercy, in the tyme of anguyshe & trouble? It is like a dewe of rayne, & cōmeth in & tyme of a drouth.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Gue mercy vpon vs O LORDE, that God of all thinges. Haue respecte to vs (shew vs the light of thy mercies, & sende & feare amōge & heithen & strangers, which seke not after the: & they may knowe, how & there is no God but thou, and & they maye shew thy wonderous workes.)

Lift vp thine hande ouer the onclādish heithen, & they maye lerne to knowe thy mighte & power. Like as thou art halowed in vs before them, so brynge to passe, & thou mayest be magnified also in them before vs: & they maye knowe the, like as we knowe the. For there is none other God, but onely thou O LORDE. Renue the tokens, & chaunge the wonderous workes. Shewe thine hāde and thy right arme gloriously. Rayse thy indignation, & poure out thy wrath. Take awaye the aduersary, & smyte the enemye. Make & tyme shorte, remembre thy couenaunt, that & wonderous workes maye be praysed. Let the wrath of the sye consume them, that ly-ue so careles: and let them perishe, that do & people hurte. Smyte in sonder the heade of the prynces, that be oure enemies, and saye:
there is none other but we.

B Gather all & trybes of Jacob together a-gayne, & they maye knowe, how & there is none other God but onely thou, & they maye shew thy wonderous workes, and be thy people & heretage, like as from the begynninge.
O LORDE haue mercy vpon the people & hath & name, & vpo Israel, whom thou hast likened to a first borne sonne. O be mercifull vnto Iherusalem the cite of thy Sanctuary, & cite of thy rest. Syll Sion with thy vnspēakeable vertues, & & people w thy glory. Ge-ue wytnes vnto & creature, whom thou may dest from the begynninge, and rayse vp the prophecies & haue bene shewed in thy name.
Rewarde them & wayte for the, & thy prophets maye be founde faithfull. O LORDE heare the prayer of thy seruantes, acordinge to & blessinge of Aaron ouer thy people:
that all they which dwell vpon earth, maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE the eter-nall God, which is from everlastinge.

C The bely deuoureth all meates, yet is one meate better then another. Like as the con-ge caisteth venyson, so doth an hert of vnderstandinge marck false wordes. A frowarde hert geueth heuynes, but a man of experience lifreth him vp agayne. The woman receaueth euery man, yet is one daughter better then another. A sayre wife reioyseth hir husbande, and a man loueth nothinge better. If she be louynge & vertuous withall, then is not hir husbande like other men. He that hath gotten a vertuous woman, hath a goodly possession: she is vnto him an helpe and piler wher vpon he resteth. Where no hedge is, there the goodes are spoyled: and where no housewife is, there & fredles mourneth. Like as there is no credence geuen to a robber, & goeth from one cite to another:

So is not & man beleued, that hath nonest, and must turne in, where he maye abyde in the night.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

Very frende sayeth: I wil be frendly vnto him also. But there is some fren-de, which is onely a frende in name.
Remayneth there not heuynes vnto death, whā a companion and frende is turned to an enemye? O most wicked presumption: fro whence art thou spronge up, to couer the earth with falsede & disceate? There is some companion, which in prosperite reioyseth with his frēde: but in the tyme of trouble, he taketh parte agaynst him. There is some cōpanyon, that mournereth with his frende for the bely sake: but whā trouble commeth, he taketh holde of the shyld. Forget not thy frende in thy mynde, & thynte vpon him in riches. Euery counseller bryngeth forth his councell: Neuertheles there is some, & coun-celler, & be aduysed afore wherto thou wilt vse him, for he wil geue counsell for himself. Lest he cast the lott vpon the, & saye vnto the: Thy waye and purpose is good, and afterwarde he stande agaynst the, and loke what shal become of the.

Ecclesi. 5. b

Ecclesi. 9. a
and 9. c

B Are no counsell at him, & suspecteth & for an enemye, & hyde & counsell from soch as hate &. Are no counsell at a woman, cōcernynge & thinges & she losgeth forner at a fearful & faynthearted body, in matters of warre:
or at a marchant, how deare he wil cheape thy wares towarde his: or at a byer, of sel-lynge: Or at an enuyous man, of thankesgeuyng: Or at the vnrightheous, of louynge kindnes: Or at & slouthfull, of workinge: Or at an hyelynge which hath no house, of profit or wealth. (An ydle body wolde not gladly heare speake of much labō.) Take no soch folkes to counsell, but be diligēt to seke councel at a vertuous man, & feareth God, soch one as thou knowest to be a keeper of & cōmaundemētes, which hath a minde after thine owne minde, & is sory for & whā thou stōblest.

C And holde thy counsell fast in thine hert:
for there is no man more faithfull to kepe it, then thou thy self. For a mā's mynde is som-tyme more disposed to tell out, then seven watchmen that sytt aboue in an hye place louynge aboute them. And aboue all this praye the hyest, that he wil lede thy waye in faithfulness & truerth. Before all thy workes are counsell first: and or ever thou doest eny thinge, be well aduysed. There be foure thing

ges that declare a chaunged hert, wherout there spungeth enell & good, death & life, & a masterfull tonge that babbleth moch. Some man is apte and well instructe in many thinges, and yet very vnprofitable vnto himself. Some man there is, that can geue wyse and prudent counsell, and yet is he hated, & coneynueth a begger: for that grace is not geue him of God, to be accepted. Another is robbed of all wisdom, yet is he wise vnto himself, and the frute of vnderstondinge is faithfull in his mouth.

D A wyse man maketh his people wyse, & y frutes of his wisdom sayle not. A wyse mā shal be piteously blessed of God: & all they that se him, shal speake good of him. The life of man stonderh in y nobre of the dayes, but the dayes of Israel are innumerable. A wyse man shal opceyne faithfulness & credence amonge his people, & his name shal be perpetuall. My sonne, proue thy soule in thy life: & yf thou se any euell thinge, geue it not vnto her. For all thinges are not profitable for all men, nether hath euery soule pleasure in euery thinge. Be not greedy in euery eatynge, and be not to haiste vpon all meates. For excesse of meates bryngeyth siknes, and glory cometh at the last to an vnumeasurable heate. Thowro glory haue many one perished: but he that dyeteth him self temperarly, prolongeth his life.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

A Honour the phisician: honoure him because of necessity. God hath created him: for of the hyseth cometh me decaye, and he shal receaue giftes of the kynge. The wisdom of the phisician bryngeyth him to greate worship, & in the sight of the greate men of this worlde, he shal be honorably taken. The LORDE hath created me decaye of the earth, and he that is wyse, wyl not abhorre it. Was not y bytter water made swete with a tre: that men might lerne to knowe the vertue therof. The LORDE hath geuen men wisdom & vnderstondinge, & he might be honoured in his woredes workes. With soch doth he heale men, & taketh awaye their paynes: Of soch doth the Apotecary make a confection, yet can no man perfourme all his workes. For of y LORDE cometh prosperous wealth ouer all y earth.

B My sonne, despyse not this in thy sickness: but praye vnto the LORDE, & he shal make the whole. Leane of from synne, & ordie thy handes a right: clese thine hert from all wickednes. Geue a swete sauourid offrynge, & y fyne floure for a token of remembraunce: & the offrynge fatt, as one that geueth the first frutes, & geue rowme to the phisician. For y LORDE hath created him: let him ne go from the, for thou hast nede of him. The houre maye come, & the seke maye be helpe thowro them, whan they praye vnto y LORDE, & he maie recover, & get healeth to himself. He that synneth before his maker, shal fall in to the handes of the phisician.

My sonne, brynge forth thy teares out of the deede: and begynne to mourne, as yf thou haddest suffred greate harme thy self: & the couer his body after a conuenient maner, & despyse not his buryall. Enforseth yf to wepe, & prouoke thy self to mourne, & make lamentacion expediently, and y a daye or two, lest thou be euell spoken of: & then coforte thy self because of the heuynes. For of heuynes cometh death, the heuynes of y hert breaketh strength. Heuynes and pouerty gneth the hert in tentacion & offence. Take heuynes to hert, dryue it awaye, and remember the last thinges. Forget it not, for there is no turnynge agayne. Thou shalt do him no good, but hurte thy self. Remember his iudgment, thine also shal be like wyse: vnto me yesterdaye, vnto the to daye. Let the remembraunce of the deed ceasse in his rest, and coforte thy self agayne ouer him, for yf his spire is departed from him.

The wisdom of the scribe is at an nyent tyme of rest: & he y ceaseth from anye & labo, shal be wyse. He that holdeth y plough, & hath pleasure in proddyng & dryuynge y oxen, & goeth aboute w soch workes, he can speake of oxen. He setteth his hat to make forewes, & is diligent to geue y tyne fodder. So is euery carpenter also & wether master, that laboureth still night & daye: he carueth, graueth & cutteth out, & his tyme is in sondrye conynge thinges, and his hert ymagineth, how he maye conynge cast an ymage, his diligence also & watchynge perfourmeth the worke. The yronsmith in like maner bydeth by his styche, & doth his diligence to labour the yron. The vapour of the fyre bienneth his flesh, and he must fight with the heate of the fowace. The noise of the hammer soundeth euery in his eares, and his eyes lye still vpon the thinge y he maketh. He hath set his minde there vpon, that he wyl make out his worke, and therefore he watcheth, how he maie set it out, and brynge it to an ende.

So doth the potter sit by his worke, he turneth y whele aboute with his fether:

diligent & carefull in all his doynge, & his labour and worke is without nombre. He fashioneth the claye with his arme, and th his fete he tēpereth it. His hert ymagineth how he maye make it pleasaunt, & his diligence is to clense the ouen. All these hope in their hādes, & euery one thinketh to be conynge in his worke. Without these maye not the ciues be manteyned, inhabited ner occupied: yet come they not hie in the congregacion: they vnderstande not the conuaint of y lawe: they can not declare equitye & iudgment: they can not synde out the darck sentēces: but thowro them shal the creature of y worlde be manteyned: their prayer concerneth only the worke & labo of conynge.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

Whe y applyeth his mynde to vnderstande the lawe of God, doth diligently seke out y wisdom of them of the olde tyme, & exercyseth him self in the prophetes. He tēpereth y sayenges of famous men, and preasseth to the vnderstandinge of darck sentēces of wisdom. He setteth out y mystere of secrete sayenges, and exercyseth him self therein cōynually. He doth seruyce amonge greate men, & appeareth before the prynce. He goeth in to a straunge countre, & traualah thowro it: loke what good or euell is comēge men, he proueth it & setteth it out. He purpōseth in his hert, to resorte early vnto the LORDE y made him. & to praye before the hyest God. He openeth his mouth in prayer, & prayeth for his synnes.

When the greate LORDE wil, he shal be filled w the spire of vnderstondinge, & he maie then poure out wyse sentēces, & geue thankes vnto the LORDE in his prayer. He shal ordie his deuycce, and lede his knowlege a right, & geue him vnderstandinge of secrete thinges. He shal shew forth the sciēce of his learninge, & reioyce in the conuaint of the lawe of the LORDE. The whole congregacion shal comende his wisdom, & it shal neuer be put out. The remembraunce of him shal neuer be forgotten, & his name shal conynge from one generacion to another. His wisdom shal be spoken of, & the whole congregacion shal openly declare his prayse. Whyle he liueth, he hath a greater name than a thousande besydes: & after his death, the same name remaineth vnto him. Yet wyl I speake of mo men of vnderstandinge, for I am full as the Moone.

Hert vnto me (ye holy vertuous childre) brynge forth frute, as the rose that is plantid by the brokes of the felde, and geue ye a swete sinell as Libanus. Flourish as the rose garden, synge a songe of prayse. O geue thankes vnto God ouer all his workes. Geue glory and honoure vnto the LORDE, shew his prayse with youre lippes. See even with the lēnge of youre lippes, with harpes & playenge, and in geuynge thankes vnto him, saye after this maner: All y workes of the LORDE are exceeding good, and all his commandmentes are mere and conuenient in due season.

A mā nede not to saie: what is y: what is that? for at tyme conuenient they shal all be sought. At his cōmaundement y water was as a wall, & at the worde of his mouth y waters stode still. In his commandment is euery thinge acceptable and reconcyled, and his healeth can not be diminished. The workes of all flesh are before him, & there is nothinge hydd from his eyes. He seith from euerlastinge to euerlastinge, and there is nothinge to wonderfull or hie vnto him. A man nede not to saie then, what is this, or that? For he hath made all thinges to do good vnto man. His blessinge shal renne ouer as the stream, and moysture the earth like a floude of water. Like as he maketh the water for diourh, so shal his wrath fall vpon the heithen.

His wayes are playne and right vnto y iust, but the vngodly stamble at them. For the good are good thinges created from the begynnynge, and euell thinges for the vngodly. All thinges necessary for the life of man are created from the begynnynge: water, fyre, yron and salt, meel, wheate and hony mylke and wyne, oyle and clothynge. All these thinges are created for the best to the faithfull: But to the vngodly shal all these thinges be turned to hurte and harme. There be spites that are created for vengeance, and in their rigorosities haue they fastened their toimentes. In the tyme of the ende they shal poure out their strength, and pacifie y wrath of him that made them. Fyre, hayle, hunger and death: all these thinges are created for vengeance.

The teth of wylde noysome beestes, the scorpions, serpentes, and the swerde are created also for vengeance, to the destruction of the vngodly. They shal be gladd to do his commandmentes: and whan nede is, they shal be ready vpon earth: and whan their houre is come, they shal not ouerpasse the commandment of the LORDE.

Therefore haue I taken a good courage vnto me from the begynnynge, and though y to put these things in writing, and to leave the behynde me. All thy workes of the LORD are good, and he giveth every one in due season, and when need is. So that a man need not to say: this is worse then that. For in due season they are all pleasant and good: And therefore praise the LORD with whole heart and mouth, and give thanks unto his name.

The XL. Chapter.

Greate tranayle is created for all men, and an hevy yock upon all mens children, from the daye that they go out of their mothers wombe, tyll they be buried in (the earth) the mother of all thinges: namely, their thoughtes and ymaginacions, feare of the hert, counsell, meditations, longing and desyre, the daye of death: from the hiest that syteth upon the glorious seate, unto the lowest and most symple upon the earth: from him that is gorgeously arrayed, and weareth a crowne, vntyll him that is but homely and symple clothed. There is nothinge but wrych, zeale, fearfulness, vnquietnes, and feare of death, rigorous anger and stryfe. And in the night when one shulde rest and slepe upon his bedd, the slepe chaungeth his vnderstandinge and knowlege. A litle as nothinge is his rest, in thy slepe is well as in the daye of labour.

The feareth and is disquyted in the vision of his hert, as one that renneth out of a battayll: and in the tyme of heath he awaketh, and marueleth that the feare was nothinge. Such thinges happen vnto all flesh, both man and best: but sevenfold to the vngodly. Morouer death, bloudsheddinge, strife and swerde, oppression, hunger, destruction and punysshment: these thinges are all created agaynst the vngodly, and for their sakes came the floude also. All that is of the earth, shal turne to earth agayne: and all waters ebb agayne in to the see. All brybes and vnrighteousnes shalbe put awaye, but faithfulness and truth shal endure for ever. The substaunce and goodes of thy vngodly shalbe dried vp and syncke awaye as a water floude, and they shal make a sounde like a greates thonder in the rayne.

Like as the righteous reioysyth when he openeth his hande, so shall the trasgressours be saynte, when their goodes vanysh and consume awaye. The children of the vngodly shal not optayne many brannches: and thy vncleane robes vpon the hyerockes shalbe rotted out before the gras by the water syde, and vpon the ryuer bankes.

Frendlynes and liberalite in the mercie, and blessinge of God, is like a paradise garden of pleasure: such mercy also and kindness endureth for ever. To laboure to be content with that a man hath, is a swete pleasant life: that is to fynde a treasure above all treasures. To beget children and to repaie the cite, maketh a perpetuall name: but an honest woman is more worth then they both. Myne and mynstrall ye reioyse the hart, but the lye of wysdome is above them both.

Pypinge and harpyng make a swete melody, but a frendly tonge goeth beyonde them both. Thine eye desyret houre and benche, but a grene sede tyme rather then they both. A frende and companyon come together at oportynite, but above them both is a wife that agreeth with hir husbände. One brother helpeth another in the tyme of trouble, but allmes shal deliuer more then they both. Golde and syluer fasten the fete, but a good counsell is more pleasant then they both. Temporall substaunce and strength lift vp the mynde: but the feare of the LORD is more then they both. The feare of the LORD wanteth nothinge, and needeth no helpe. The feare of the LORD is as a pleasant gard of blessinge, and nothinge so bewtyfull as it is. My sonne, lede not a beggers life, for better it were to dye then to begg. Who so lotheth another mans table, taketh no thought for his owne luyng: how to vpholde his life, for he fedeth himself with other mens meate. But a wyse and well nurtured man will beware thereof. Begginge is swete in the mouth of the vnshamefast, but in his body there burneth a fyre.

The XLII. Chapter.

Death, how bitter is the remembrance of the, to a man that hath rest and comfote in his substaunce and riches, vnto the man that hath nothinge to vexe him, and that hath prospered in all thinges, yee vnto him that yet is able to receaue meate. O death, how acceptable and good is thy iudgment vnto the needy, and vnto him whose strength faileth, and that is now in his last age, and that in all thinges is full of care and fearfulness: vnto him also that is in dyspayre, and hath no hope nor patience. Be not thou afraied of death: remembre them I haue bene before thee: and I come after thy this is the iudgment of the LORD ouer all flesh. And why woldst thou be agaynst this pleasure of thy life? whether it be ten, an hundred, or a thousand yeares: death axeth not how longe one haue luyed.

The children of the vngodly are abhominable children, and so are they that kepe company with the vngodly. The inheretance of vngodly children shal come to naught, and their posterite shal haue perpetuall shame and confucion. The children complayne of an vngodly father: and why? for his sake they are rebuked and despysed. Wo be vnto you (O ye vngodly) which haue forsake the lawe of thy best God: If ye be borne, ye shal be borne to cursyng: yf ye dye, thy curse shal be youre porcion.

All that is of the earth, shal turne to earth agayne: so go the vngodly also out of the curse into destruction. The sorow of men is in their body: but the name of the vngodly shal be put out, for it is nothinge worth. Laboure to get the a good name, for that shal continue sure by the, then a thousande greates treasures of golde. A good life hath a nombre of dayes, but a good name endureth ever.

My children, kepe wysdome in peace: for wysdome that is hye and a treasure that is not sene, what profit is in the both? A man that hydeth his foolishnes, is better then a man that hydeth his wysdome. Therefore be ye turned at my wordes: for it is not good, in all thinges and allwaie to be ashamed. True faith must proue and measure it.

Be ashamed of whoredome before father and mother: Be ashamed of lesyng before the prince and men of an countie: Of synne, before the iudge and ruler: Of offence, before the congregacion and people: Of vnrighteousnes, before a companyon and frende: Of the fe, before thy neighbours. As for the trueth of God and his couenaunt, be not ashamed thereof.

Be ashamed to lye with thyne elbowes vpon the bried: Be ashamed to lye vpon harlots: Be ashamed to turne awaye thy face from thy frende: Be ashamed to take and not to geue: Be ashamed also to lye vpon another mans wyfe, and to make many tryfling wordes with hir mayden, or to stonde by hir bedsyde. Be ashamed to vprade thy frende: and when thou geuest any thinge, cast him not in the teth withall.

The XLIII. Chapter.

Hearse not a thinge twyse, and disclose not the wordes, that thou hast herde in secrete. Be shamefast and well mannered in dede, so shall every man fauoure thee. Of these thinges be not thou ashamed, and accept no personne to offende. Name ly, of these thinges be not ashamed: Of the lawe of God, of the couenaunt, of iudgment: to bryng the vngodly from his vngodlines vnto righteousness, and to make him a good man: to deale faithfully with neighbours companyon: to distribute the heretage vnto thy frendes: to be diligent to kepe true measure and weight: to be content, whether thou gettest much or litle: to deale truly with temporall goodes in byenge and sellynge: to bryng vp children with diligence: to correcte an euell seruant: to kepe that thine is as an euell wifer: to set a lock where many handes are: what thou delyuereest and geuest out to be kepte, to tell it, and to weye it: to wryte vp all the entgyunge and receayng: to enfourme thy vnlearned and vnwyse: Of the aged, that are iudged of the yonge. If thou be diligent in these thinges, truly thou shalt be learned and wyse and accepted of all men.

The daughter maketh thy father to watch secretly: and the carefulness that he hath for her, taketh awaye his slepe: yee in the youth, lest she shulde overgrowe him: And when she hath an husbände, lest she shulde be hated: lest she shulde be desyled or ransyshed in hir virginyte, or gotten with childe in hir fathers house: Or (when she cometh to the man) lest she behaue herself not right, or continue vnfructfull. If thy daughter be wanton, kepe her straitly, lest she cause thine enemies laugh the to scoone, and the whole cite to geue thee an euell repoyce, and so thou be fayne to heare thy shame of euery man, and be confounded before all thy people. Beholde not euery bodie bewtye, and haue not much dwellinge amonge women. For like as the woman and mothe cometh out of clouthinge, so both wickednes come of women.

It is better to be with an euell man, then with a frendly wyfe that putteth one to shame and rebuke. I wyl remembre the workes of the LORD, and declare the thinges that I haue sene. In thy wordes of the LORD are his workes. The stone overloket all thynges with his shine, and all his workes are full of thy clearnes thereof. Hath not the LORD brought to passe, that his sayntes shulde tell out all his wonderous workes, which the almighty LORD hath stablyshed? All thinges endure in his glory. He sekerth out the grounde of the depe and the hert, and he knoweth all their ymaginacion and wysdome. For the LORD knoweth all science, and he lotheth in to thy token of the time. He declareth the thinges that are past and for to come, and discloseth thinges that are secrete. No thought maye escape him, neither maye any woide be hyd from him. He hath garnyshe the hye excellent woikes of his wysdome, and he is frō everlastinge to everlastinge. Unto him maye nothinge be added neether can he be mynished, he hath no nebe also of any counsell. O how amiable are all his woikes, & as a sparke to loke vpon: They lyne all, and endure for ever: and whan so ever nebe is, they are all obedient unto him. They are all dabble, one agaynst another: he hath made nothinge that hath faute or blemyshe. He hath stablyshed the gooddes of everychone: and who maye be satisfied with his glory, whan he seith it?

The XLIII. Chapter.

The glory of the heyth, is the fayre and cleare firmament, the bewtye of the heaven in his glorious cleames. The sonne whan it appeareth, declareth the daye in & goinge out of it, a marvelous woike of the hysht. At noone it burneth & earth, and who maye abyde for the heate therof? Who so kepech an oven whan it is hote, thre tymes more doth the Sonne burne vpon & mountaynes, whan it brethereth out the fyrie beames and shyneth with the brightnes of it, it blyndereth the eyes. Greate is the LORDE that made it, and in his commaundement he cansech it to renne hastily.

The Moone also is in all, and at convenient season it sheweth the tymes, and is a token of the tyme. The token of the solempne feast is taken of the Moone, a light that mynished and increaseth againe. The Moone is called after the Moone, it groweth wonderously in his chaunginge.

The armye of heauen also is in the heith, in the firmament of heauen it geneth a cleare and glorious shyne. This is the cleares of the starres, the bewtifull apparell of heauen, the apparell that the LORDE lighteneth in the heyth. In his holy woike they continue in their ordie, and not one of them sayeth in his watch. Loke vpon & rayne bowe, and prayse him that made it: very bewtifull is it in his shyne. He compaseth the heauen aboute with his cleares & glory, the handes of the hysht have beded it. Thorow his commaundement he maketh the snowe to fall, & the thonder of his iudgment to synye hastily. Thorow his commaundement the treasures are opened, and the cloudes fle as the foules. In his power hath he strenghtened the cloudes, and broke the hayle stones.

The mountaynes melt at & sight of him, the wynde bloweth accordinge to his wyll.

The sounde of his thonder beareth & lech, and so doth the stome of the north wynde. He le wynde also lichteeth downe as a fether foule, casteth out and spredeth the fether brode: and as the greshoppers that defile all, so fallerh it downe. The eis marudeth at & bewtye of the whytenesse therof, and the hert is astraed at the raine of it. He poureth out the frost vpon earth, like salt, and whan it is frozen, it is as sharpe as the pyde of a thistle.

Whan the colde northwynde bloweth, harde Christall cometh of the water. He lichteeth downe vpon all the gatheringes together of water, and putterh on & water as a brest plate. He deuoureth the mountaynes, and burneth the wyldernes: and loke what is grene, he putterh it outlike fyre. The medycine of all these is, whan a dew cometh hastily: and whan a dew cometh vpon the heate, it shalbe refreshed agayne.

In his woide he stylleth the wynde, in his counsell he setteth the depe, and the LORDE Jesus planted it. They that sayle on the see, tell of his paretis and harmes: and whan we heare it with oure eares, we marvel therat. For there be straige wonderous woikes, dyuerse maner of nyce bestes and whall fishes. Thorow him are all thinges in good ordie and perfourmed, & in his woide all thinges endure.

I speake moch, but I can not sufficiently attayne vnto it, for he himself onely is the perfeccion of all woikes. We shulde prayse the LORDE after all & power, for he is great in all his woikes. The LORDE is to be feared yee very greate is he, and marvelous is his power. Prayse the LORDE, and magnifie him as moch as ye maye, yet doth he farre excede all prayse. O magnifie him in all youre power, and laboure earnestly, for ye are in no wyse able sufficiently to prayse him. Who hath sene him, that he might tell vs? Who can magnifie him so greatly as he is? For there are hyd yet greater thinges than these be: as for vs, we haue sene but few of his woikes. For the LORDE hath made all thinges, and given wysdome to soch as feare God.

The XLIII. Chapter.

A commendacion of the

olde vertuous fathers.

Let vs commende the noble famous men, and the generacion of our forefathers and fathers. Many glorious actes hath the LORDE done, and shewed his greate power euer sence & begynnyng. The noble famous men raigned in their kyngdomes, and bare excellent rule. In their wysdome and understandinge, they followed the counsell shewed in the prophetic. They led the folke thorow the counsell and wysdome of the scribes of the people. Wyse sentences are founde in their instruction. They sought the sweetnes and melody of Musick, and brought forth the pleasaunt songes in scripture. They were riche also, & made comfort and pacifie these that dwelt with them. All these were very noble and honorable men in their generacions, and were well reported of in their tymes. These haue left a name behynde them, so that their prayse shal allwaye be spokē of. Afterwarde there were some, whose remembraunce is gone. They came to naught and perished, as though they had neuer bene: and became as though they had neuer bene borne, yee & their children also with them.

Nevertheless these are louyng men, whose righteousnes shal neuer be forgotten, but continue by their posterite. Their children are an holy good heretage: Their sede endureth fast in & coneuant. For their sakes shal their childre & sede continue for euer, & their prayse shal neuer be put downe. Their bodies are buried in peace, but their name lyueth for euermore. The people can speake of their wysdome, & the congregacion can talke of their prayse. Enoch walked right & acceptably before the LORDE: therfore was he translated for an example of amendement to & generacions. Noe was a stedfast & righteous man: in the tyme of wiath he became a reseylinge. Therfore was he left a remnant vnto the earth, whan the floude came. An everlastinge coneuant was made wth him, that all flesh shulde perishe nomore with & water.

Abraham was a greate father of many people, in glory was there none like vnto him. He kepte the lawe of the hysht, & came into a coneuant with him. He sette the coneuant in his flesh, and whan he was tempered he was founde faithfull. Therfore swore God vnto him with an oeth, that he wolde blesse all people in his sede, that he wolde multiplie and increase him as the dust of the earth, and to exalte his sede as the starres: yee and that his sede shulde haue & possession and inheritaunce of the londe from se to see, and from the ryuer vnto & borders of the londe.

With Isaac dyd he stablysh & same coneuant, for Abrahā his fathers sake. Yee & gracious blessinge and heath of all men, and coneuant dyd he stablysh with Isaac, and made it to rest vpon the heade of Jacob. He knew him, in that he prospered him so well and richely, and gave him an heretage, and sundered his porcion by it self, and parted it amonge the twolve trybes. Mercifull men brought he out of him, which founde fauor before all flesh.

The XLV. Chapter.

Ofes beloued of God and mē, who se remembraunce is in hye prayse: him hath the LORDE made like in the glory of the sayntes, and magnified him so that the enemies stode in awe of him, thorow his woikes he dyd greate wonders. He made him greate in the sight of kynges, gaue him commaundement before his people, and shewed him his glorious power. He stablyshed him with faithfulness and mekenes, and chose him out of all men. For he herde his voyce, and led him in the darke cloude, and there he gaue him the commaundementes, yee the lawe of life and wysdome, that he might teach Jacob the coneuant, and Israel his lawes.

He chose Aaron his brother also out of & trybe of Leui, exalted him, & made him soch like. An everlastinge coneuant made he wth him, and gaue him the presthode in the people. He made him glorious in bewtifull arraye, and clothed him with the garment of honoure. He put perfecte ioye vpo him, and gyrded him with strength. He decked him with syde clothes and a tuncle, with an ouerbody cote also and gyrdle. Rounde aboute made he him belles of golde, and that many: that whan he wente in, the sounde might be herde, that they might make a noyse in the Sanctuary, and geue the people warninge. The holy garment was wrought & brederd with golde, yallow sylke and purple. And in the brestlappe there was a goodly woike, wherein was fastened light and perfectnesse.

Vpon & same also there was a woike fastened and set with costly precious stones, all bounde with golde: and this he brought in his mynistracion. The stones also were fastened for a remembraunce, after the twolue trybes of Israel. Vpon his mytre there was a plate of pure golde, a grauen ymage of holynes, a famous and noble woike, garnished, and pleasaunt to loke vpon. Before him were there sene no soch fayre ornaments, and these it behoued hi allwaye to vse: There might none other put them on, but onely his children and his childrens children perpetually. Daylie performed he his burnt offerings two tymes. Moses fylled his handes, and anoynted him wth holy oyle.

Leui. 8. a

D This was now confirmed him with an euerlastinge coneuant, and to his sede, as 3 dayes of heauē: namely, that his childre shul de allwaye mynistrē before him, and perfourme the office of the presthode, and wysly the people good in his name. Before all men lyuynge chose he him, that he shulde offre before the LORDE, and make odours for a swe-te sauoure and remembraunce, that he shulde reconcyle the people of the LORDE with him agayne. He gaue him auctorite also in his commaundementes and in 3. coneuant, that he shulde teach Jacob the statutes and testimonies, and to enfourme Israel in his lawe.

E Therefore there stode vp certayne agaynst him, and had enuye at him in the wyldernes: namely, they that were of Dathan & Abiramys syde, and the furious congregaciō of Chore. This the LORDE sawe, and it displeased him, and in his wrothfull indignacion were they consumed. A greate wonder did he vpon them, and consumed them with the fyre. Besydes this, he made Aaron yet more honorable and glorious. He gaue him an heretage, and parted the first frutes vnto him. Vnto him specially he appoynted the bred for sustenance (for the prestes ate of 3 offerynge of the LORDE) this gaue he vnto him & his sede. Els had he no heretage ner porcion in 3. londe and with the people. For the LORDE himself is his porcion and enhe-ritance.

S The thirde noble and excellent mā is phi-of the LORDE. For whan the people were turned back, he put himself forth right soone, & that with a good wyll, to pacifie the wrath of the LORDE towarde Israel. Therefore was there a coneuant of peace made with him, 3.

he shulde be the principall amonge the righteous and the people, that he and his posterite shulde haue the office of the presthode for ever. (Like as there was made a coneuant getfulness, and that their honoure might dure for ever.

The XLVI. Chapter.

U Anly & stronge in battail was Jesus 3. sonne of Naue, which in the de of Moses 3. prophet was geto be captayne of the people (which accor-ge vnto his name was a greate fame) to
to the electe of God to punish the enemies, that rose vp agaynst Israel, 3. Israel might optayne their inheritaunce. O how great, noble and excellent was he, whan he lift up his hande, and drew out his swerde agaynst
the cities: Who stode so manly before him.
For the LORDE himself brought in the en-mies. Stode not the Sonne styll at his commaundement, and one daye was as longe as two: he called vpon the hyest & most mightie, whā 3. enemies preassed vpon him on eu-ry syde: and the LORDE herde him with the hayle stones. They smote 3. heithemish peple mightely, & in fallinge downe they slew all 3. aduersaries, so that the heithen knew his hoost, and all his defence, that the LORDE himself fought agaynst them, for he stode vpon the mightie men of them.

In the tyme of Moses also he and Caleb
the sonne of Iephune, dyd a good worke, which stode agaynst the enemies, which che people from synne, and styll 3. with murmuringe. And offire hundredth thousand be people of fore, they two were persued,
whan they were brought in to the heretage, namely, a londe that floweth with mylke & hony. The LORDE gaue strength also vnto Caleb, which remayned with him vnto his age: so that he wente vp in to the hye place of the londe, and his sede conquered the lame for an heretage: that all the childre of Israel might se, how good a thinge it is, to be obedient vnto the LORDE. And the indigerulers (euery one after his name) whose hat wente not a whoringe, ner departed from the LORDE, and that forsake not the LORDE faithfully, whose remembraunce hath a good reporce: See their bones flourish out of that place, and their name shal neuer be chaunged.

Samuel the prophet beloued of the LORDE, ordeyned a kynge, and anoynted the prynces ouer the people. In the lawe of the LORDE ruled he, and indged the congregaciō. The LORDE had respecte vnto Jacob. The prophet was founde diligent in his faithnes: yee in his faithfulness was the faithnes of the vision knowne. He called vpon the LORDE the mightie, whā the enemies presed vpon him on euery syde, what tyme he offred the suckynge lambes. And the LORDE thoudied from heauen, and mayde his voyce to be herde wth a greate noyse. He discomfited the prynces of Tyre, & all the rulers of the phylistynes. Before his last ende he made protestacion in the sight of the LORDE & his anoynted, that he toke nether substaunce ner good of eny man, no not so moch as a shyre: & no man might accuse him. After this he toke, that his ende was at honde, and shewed the kynge also his ende and death: & from 3. earth lift he up his voyce in the prophetie, 3. the vngodly people shulde perishe.

The XLVII. Chapter.

Afterwarde in the tyme of kynge Da-uid, there rose vp a prophet called Nathan: For like as the fat is taken awaye from the offrynge, so was Dauid chosen out of the childre of Israel. He toke his pastyme wth the lyons as wth kyddes, and with beares like as with lambes. Slew he not a giante whan he was yet but yonge, & toke awaye the rebuke from his people: what tyme as he toke the stone in his hande, & smote downe proude Goliath wth the slynger. For he called vpon the hyest LORDE, which gaue him strength in his right hande, so that he overthrew the mightie gigante in the bat-tall, that he might set vp the home of his people agayne.

Thus brought he him to worshipec aboue all prynces, and made him to haue a good reporce in the prayse of the LORDE, 3. he shul-de weare a crowne of glory. For he destroyed the enemies on euery syde, roted out the Philistynes his aduersaries, & brake their home in Iuda, like as it is brotē yet this daye. In all his workes he praysted 3. hyest & holiest, & ascribed the honoure vnto him. With his whole hert dyd he prayse and loue him that made him. He set syngers also before the au-lar, and in their tyme he made swete songes.
He ordeyned to kepe the holy daies worship-fully, and that the solempne feastes chorow
the whole yeare shulde be honorably holde, with praylinge the name of the LORDE, & with synginge by tymes in the mornyng in the Sanctuary.

The LORDE toke awaye his synnes, and exalted his home for ever. He gaue him 3. conauant of the Kynge dome, and the trone of worshipec in Israel. After him there rose vp the wysse sonne called Salomon, and for his fate he dyed of enemies awaie farre of. This Salomon reigned with peace in his tyme (for God gaue him rest from his enemies on euery syde, that he might buylde him an honse in his name, & prepare the Sanctuary for euerylike as he was well instructe in his youth & fylled with wysdome and vnderstodinge, as it were with a water floude. He couered and fylled the whole londe with similitudes and wysse prudent sentences.

His name wente abroad in the Iles, because of his peace he was beloued. All londes marueled at his songes, proverbes, symlica-tes, and at his peace, and at the name of 3.
LORDE God, which is called the God of Israel. He gathered golde as tynne, & he had as moch syluer as leade. He was moued in ordinate loue towarde women, and was ouercome in affeccion. He stayned his honour and worshipec, yee his posterite defyled he also, in bringinge the wrath of the LORDE vpon
his childre, and sorowe after his ioie:
so 3. his Kynge dome was deuoyded, & Ephraim became an vnfaithfull & an vnconstant Kynge dome. Neuertheles God forsoke not his mercy, nether was he utterly destroyed because of his workes, 3. he shulde leaue him no posterite.

As for 3. sede 3. came vpon him (which he loued) he brought it not utterly to naught, but gaue yet a remnaunt vnto Jacob, and a reue vnto Dauid out of him. Thus rested Salomon with his fathers, and out of his sede he left behynde him a very foolishnes of the people, and soch one as had no understoding: namely, Roboā which turned awaye the people chorow his counsell, and Jeroboam 3. sonne of Nabat, which caused Israel to synne; and shewed Ephraim the waye of vngodlynes: In so moch that their synnes & myssedes had the vpper hande so sore, that at the last they were dryuen out of the lon-de for the same: See he sought out & brought vp all wickednes, tyll the vengeance came vpon them.

The XLVIII. Chapter.

Ethen stode vp Elias the prophet as a fyre, and his worde be like a cressbett. He brought an hōgger vpon the
and in his zeale he made them few in nombre.
(For they might not awaye wth the commadementes of the LORDE.) Thorow the worde of the LORDE he shut the heauen, and the tymes brought he the fyre downe. Thus became Elias honorable in his wonderous dedes. Who maye make his boost to be like him? One that was deed rayled he vp from death, & in the worde of 3. hyest he brought him out of the graue agayne. He cast downe Kynge and destroyed them, and the honorable from their seate. Vpon the mount Syna

he herde the punishment, & upon hoire the iudgment of the vengeance. He prophesied recompensynge vnto kynges, and ordeyned prophetes after him. He was taken vp in the storme of fyre, in a charret of horses of the LORDE. He was ordeyned in the reprobunges in tyme, to pacifie the wrath, to turne fherthes of the fathers vnto the children, & to set vp the trybes of Jacob agayne. Elias was couered in the storme, but Heliseus was fylled with his mouth. Whyle he lyned he was afrayed of no pryncce, and no man mighte ouercome him. There conde no worde disceane him, & after his death his body prophesied. He dyd wonders in his life, & in death were his workes maruelous. For all this, the people amended not, nether departed they from their synnes: tyll they were caried awaye prisoners out of the londe, and were scattede abroad in all countrees, so that of them there remayned but a very litle people, and a pryncce vnto y house of David. Howbeit some of them dyd right, & some heaped vp vngodlynes.

Ezechias made his cite stronge, conveyed water into it, dygged thoro the stony rock with yron, & made vp a well by the water syde. In his tyme came Sennacherib vp, and sent Rabsches, lye vp his hande agaynst Sion, & defyed them with greate pryde. They trymbled their hertes and handes, so y they sorowed like a woman trauaylinge with childe. So they called vpo the LORDE, which is mercysfull, & lye vp their handes before him. Immediately the LORDE herde the out of heauen, and deliuered them by the hande of Esay. He smote the hoost of the Assirians, & his angell destroyed the. For Ezechias had done the thinge that pleased the LORDE, & remayned stedfastly in the waye of David his father. Which Esay was greate & faithfull in his visions. In his tyme y Sonne wete backward, & he lengthened the kynges li fe. With a right spure prophesied he, what shulde come to passe at the last: & to such as were sorrowfull in Sion he gaue consolacion, wherewith they might cōfote them selues for euermore. He shewed thinges y were for to come & secrete, or euer they came to passe.

He remembraunce of Josias is like as whan the Apotecary maketh many precious scrette smellynge thinges together. His remembraunce shal be scrette as hony in all mouthes, and as the playenge of Musick by the wyne. He was appoynted to turne the people agayne, & to take awaye all abheminacions of y vngodly. He drew his hert vnto the LORDE, & in the tyme of the vngodly he set vp the worshippe of God agayne. All kynges (excepte Damiel, Ezechias & Josias) committed wickednes: for as kynges of Juda also forsoke y lawe of God, for they gaue their herte vnto othe, the hono & worshippe also to a strange people.

Therfore was the electe cite of the Sanctuary brent with fyre, and the streets laye desolate & waiste: for they increased Jeremy euill, which neuertheles was a prophete ordeyned from his mothers wombe, that he might rote out, breake of, & destroye: & that he might buylde vp, & plante agayne. Ezechiel sawe the glory of the LORDE in vision, which was shewed him vpon the charret of the Cherubins. For he thought vpon the enemies in y rayne, to do good vnto such as had ordeied their wayes a right. And the bones of the twolue prophetes floussh from out of their place: for they gaue comfort & consolacion vnto Jacob, and deliuered the faithfully. How shall we prayse Zorobabel, which was as a ringe in the right hande?

So was Jesus also the sonne of Josias: these men in their tymes buylde the house, & set vp the Sanctuary of y LORDE agayne, which was prepared for an everlasting worshippe. And Nehemias is allwaye to be cōmended, which set vp for vs the wallis y were broken downe, made the portes & barres agayne, and buylde oure houses of the new. But vpon earth is there no man created like Enoch, for he was taken vp from earth. And Joseph, which was loude of his brethren, & the vpholder of his people: his bones were couered & kepte. Seth & Sem were in greate honoure amonge y people: and so was Adam aboue all the beastes, whiche was created.

Samon the sonne of Onias the hye prest, which in his li fe set vp the house agayne, & in his dayes made full the temple. The heych of y temple also was founded of him, the dubble buyldinge, & the hye walles of the temple. In his dayes the welles of water flowed out, and were gaddinge full as the see. He toke care for his people, & deliuered them from destruction. He kepte his cite & made it stronge, that it shoulde not be beseged. He dwelt in honoure & worshippe amonge his people, and enlarged the intrance of the house and the court.

He getteth light as the mornynge starre in the myddest of the clondes, and as y Moone whan it is full. He shyneth as the Sonne in the temple of God. He is as bryght as y rayne bowe in y sayre clondes, & flourisheth as the floures and roses in the sprynge of y yere, & as the lilies by the ryuers of water: Like as the braunches vpon the mount Libanus in tyme of Sommer: as a fyre & incense that is kyndled: Like as an whole ornament of pure golde, set with all maner of precious stones: and as an olyue tre that is fructfull: & as a Cypres tre which groweth vp an hye.

Whan he put on the garment of honoure, & was clothed with all bewtye: whan he wente to the holy altare, to garnyshe the corner of the Sanctuary: whan he toke y portions out of the prestes hande, he himselfe stode by the herth of the altare, and his brethren rounde aboute in ordre. As the braunches of Cedre tre vpon the mount Libanus, so stode they rounde aboute him. And as the braunches of the olyue tre, so stode all y sonnes of Aaron in their glory. And y he might sufficiently perforce his seruyce vpon the altare, & garnyshe the offrynge of the hyest God, he stretched out his hande and toke of the drynkofferynge, & poured in of the wyne: so he poured vpon the botome of the altare a good smell vnto the hyest pryncce.

Then beganne y sonnes of Aaron to synge, and to blowe with trompettes, & to make a greate noyse, for a remembraunce & prayse vnto the LORDE. Then were the people afrayed, & fell downe to the earth vpo their faces, to worshippe the LORDE their God, & to geue thankes to Allmightie God. They synge goodly also with their voyces, so that there was a pleasaunt noyse in y greate house of the LORDE. And the people in their prayer besought the LORDE the hyest, that he wolde be mercysfull, tyll the honoure of y LORDE were perfourmed. Thus ended they their ministracion and seruyce.

Then wente he downe, and stretched out his handes ouer the whole multitude of the people of Israel, that they shoulde geue prayse & thankes out of their lippes vnto y LORDE, and to reioyse in his name. He beganne yet once also to praye, that he might openly shew the thankesguyng before the hyest, namely thus: O geue prayse & thankes (ye all) vnto the LORDE oure God, which hath done noble and greate thinges: which hath increased oure dayes from o mothers wombe, and dealt with vs accordinge to his mercy: that he wyl geue vs the ioyfulness of hert, & peace for oure tymes in Israel. Which faithfully kepe his mercy for vs euermore, & allwaye deliuereth vs in due season.

There be two maner of people, that I abhorre fro my hert: as for the thirde, whom I hate, it is no people: They that syt vpon the mountayne of Samaria, the philistynes, & the foolish people that dwell in Sichimis.

I Jesus the sonne of Sirac Eleazarus of Jerusalem, haue tokened vp these informacions and documetes of wysdome and vnderstandinge in this boke, and poured out the wysdome out of my hert. Blessed is he that exerciseth him selfe therein: and who so taketh soch to hert, shal be wysse. If he do the se thinges, he shal be stronge in all. For the light of the LORDE ledeyth him.

The LI. Chapter.

A prayer of Jesus the sonne of Sirac.

2
I Thanke the O LORDE and kyng, and praise the O God my Sauoure. I wil yelde prayse vnto y name: for thou art my defender and helper, & hast preserved my body from destruction, from y snare of traytorious coges, and from the lippes that are occupied with leyes. Thou hast bene my helper, from such as stode vp agaynst me, and hast deliuered me after the multitude of thy mercy, and for thy holy names sake. Thou hast deliuered me from the roaringe of them, that prepared them selues to be voure me, out of y handes of such as soughte after my life: from the multitude of them y troubled me, & wente aboute to set fyre vpon me on euery syde, so y I am not brent in the myddest of the fyre: from the depe of hell, from an vncleane coge, from lyenge wordes, from the wicked kyng, and from an vnrighteous conge. My soule shal prayse y LORDE vnto death, for my life drew nye vnto hell.

3
They cōpased me rounde aboute on euery syde, & there was no mā to helpe me. I looked aboute me, yf there were any man that wolde socoure me: but there was none. Then thought I vpon thy mercy O LORDE, and vpon thy actes that thou hast done euer of olde: namely, y thou deliuerest such as putte their trust in the, and rydest them out of y handes of the heithen. Thus list I vp my prayer from the earth, and prayed for deliuerance from death. I called vpon the LORDE my father, that he wolde not leaue me without helpe, in the daye of my trouble & in the tyme of the proude. I prayse thy name continually, yeldinge honoure and thankes vnto it: and so my prayer was herde. Thou savedest me from destruction, and delyveredest me fro y vnrighteous tyme. Therfore wil I acknowledge and praise the, and magnifye y name of the LORDE.

C What I was yet but yonge, or euer I wate astraye, I desired wysdome openly in my prayer. I came therfore before the temple, & I sought her vnto the last. Then flourished she vnto me, as a grape that is soone ripe. My hert reioysed in her, then wente my fete the right waye, yet from youth vp sought I after her: I bowed downe myne eare and recea-ued her. I founde me moch wysdome, and prospered greatly in her. Therfore wyll I ascribe the glory vnto him, that geueth me wysdome: for I am aduysed to do therafter.
I will be gelous to cleue vnto the thinge y is good, so shal I not be confounded. My soule hath wrestled with her, and I haue bene diligent to be occupied in her. I lift vp my-ne handes an hye, then was my soule lightened thorow wysdome, that I knowleged my foolishnes. I ordred my soule after her, she & I were one hert from the begynninge, and I founde her in cleynesse. And therfore shal I not be forsaken.

D My hert longed after her, and I gat a good treasure. Thorow her y LORDE hath geuen me a new conge, wherewith I wil praise him. O come vnto me ye vnlearned, & dwell in y house of wysdome: withdraue not you-re selues from her, but talke & comon of these thinges, for youre soules are very thirstie. I opened my mouth, and spake: O come & bye wysdome without money, bowe downe you-re neck vnder hir yock, and youre soule shal receaue wysdome. She is harde at hande, & is content to be founde. Beholde with you-re eyes, how that I haue had but litle laboure, and yet haue founde moch rest. O receaue wysdome, and ye shall haue plenteousnes of syluer and golde in possession. Let you-re mynde reioyse in his mercy, & be not ashamed of his pray-
se. Wyte his worke
by tymes, & he shal geue
you
your rewarde in due tyme.

The prayer of Azarias and the songe of y the children after the doulos translation: which wordes are wyrtten in y thirde chapter of Daniel after the

olde text in Latyn.

And they walked in the myddes
of the flamme, prayyng & and magnifyng y LORDE. Az-arias stode vp, and prayde in this maner. Euen in the myddes of the fyre ned he his mouth, & saide: Blessed be thou LORDE God of o' fathers, right worthy be praysed and honoured is y name of thou for euermore: for thou art righteous in all thinges y thou hast done to vs: & thy full are all y workes, y wayes are right, & iudgements true. In all y thinges y thou brought vpon vs, & vpon the holy cite of fathers (euen Jerusalem) thou hast executed true iudgment: & according to right equyte hast thou brought these thinges vpon vs, because of oure synnes.

For why: we haue offended, & done wil-ledly, departyng from the: In all thinges haue we trespassed, & not obeyed thy coman-dementes, ner kepte the, ner done as thou hast bydden vs, & we might prosper. What fore, all y thou hast brought vpon vs, & ery thinge y thou hast done to vs, thou hast done them in true iudgment: As in deliuering vs in to the bondes of oure enemyes, amonge vngodly & wicked abheminacions, to an vnrighteous kinge, yet y most frendly vnto earth. And now we maye not open mouthes, we are become a shame & reproch vnto y seruantes, & to the y worshipers.

Yet for thy names sake (we beseeche the)
we vs not vp for euer, breake not thy o-uerrule, & take not awaye thy mercy from us: for thy beloued Abrahams sake, for thy seruant Isaacs sake, & for thy holy Wifes sake: to whom thou hast spoken & promysed thou wouldest multiply their seede as y starrs of heauen, & as the londe y lieth vpon y shore. For we (o LORDE) are become lesse in eny people, & be kepte vnder this daye the world, because of oure synnes: So the now we haue nether prynces, duke, prelat, burnt offeringe, sacrifice, oblation, incense, Sanctuary before the.

Nevertheless, in a contrite herte and an humble sperte let vs be receaued, & we maie optyne thy mercy. Like as in the burnt offeryng of rammes & bullockes, and like as in thousandes of fat lambes: so let o' offeringe be in thy sight this daye, & it maye please y, for there is no confusion vnto them, & put the trust in the. And now we folowe the with all o' herte, we feare the, & fele thy face. Put vs not to shame, but deale w' vs after thy louynge kyndnesse, & according to the multitude of thy mercies. Deluyr vs by thy miracles (o LORDE) & get thy name an honour:
that all they which do thy seruantes enell, maye be confounded. Let them be ashamed thorow thy Almightie power, and let their strength be broken: that they maye knowe, how that thou only art the LORDE God, & honest worthy thorow out all the world.

And the kynges seruantes y put them in,
craffed not to make the ouen hote with wylde fyre, drye strawe, pitch & sagottes: so that the flamme wente out of the ouen vpon a fix. cubites: yet it toke awaye, & burnt vpon the Caldees, & it gat holde vpon besyde the ouen. But the angel of the LORDE came downe in to the ouen to Azarias and his fe-lows, & smote y flamme of the fyre out of the ouen, & made the myddes of the ouen, as it had bene a coole wynde blowinge: so that the fyre nether touched them, greued them, ner byd them hurte. Then these thre (as out of one mouth) praysed, ho:oured, and blessed God in the fornace, sayenge:

Blessed be thou, o LORDE God of oure fathers: for thou art prayse & honoure worthy, yet & to be magnified for euermore. Ble-sed be y holy name of thy glory, for it is worthy to be praysed, and magnified in all wor-

The story of Susanna which is

the XIII. chapter of Daniel after the Lacyne.

Here dwelt a man in Babilō, called Joachim: y^e toke a wife, whose name was Susanna, (y^e dought-er of helchias) a very fayre woman, & soch one as feared God. Hir father & hir mother also were godly people, & taught their doughter according to y^e lawe of Moses. Now Joachim (hir husbonde) was a greate rich man, & had a fayre orcharde loynyng vnto his house. And to him resorted the Jewes comonly, because he was a man of reputacion amonge them. The same yea-re were there made two iudges, soch as the LORDE speaketh of: All the wickednesse of Babilon, cometh from y^e elders (his from y^e iudges, which seme to rule the people. These came off to Joachims house, & all soch as had any thinge to do in the lawe, came thither vnto them.

Now when the people came agayne
after noone, Susanna wente into hir husbendes orcharde, to walke. The elders seyn-g this, that she went in daylie & walked burned for lust to her, yee they were all out of their wittes, & cast downe their eyes, that they shulde not se heauē, nor remembre y^e God is a righteous iudge. For they were both wounded wth the loue of her, neither durst one shewe another his greife. And for shame, they durst not tell her their inordynate lust,
y^e they wolde sayne haue had to do wth her.
Yet they layed wayte for her earnestly from daye to daye, that they might (at the last) haue a sight of her. And the one sayde to other: Vp, let vs go home, for it is dynme. So they wente their waye from her.

When they returned agayne, they came together, enqueringe out y^e matter betwix them selues: yee the one tolde y^e other of his wicked lust. The apoynted they a tyme, whē they might take Susanna alone.

It happened also y^e they spyed out a conuenient tyme, when she wente south to walke (as hir maner was) & no body with her, but two maydens, & thought to wash her self in the garden, for it was an hote season: And there was not one person there, except the two elders, y^e had hyd them selues, to beholde her. So she sayde to hir maydens: go for me oyle & soper, & shut the orcharde doore. I maye wash me. And they dyd as she bad them, & shut the orcharde doore, & wente
them selues at a backe doore, to set the things
y^e she had commaunded: but Susanna tyme not, y^e y^e elders laie there hyd within. Now when the maydens were gone forth, y^e two elders gat them vp, & ranne vpon her, say-ng: now, the orcharde doores are shut, that no man can se vs: we haue a lust vnto the, therfore consent vnto vs, and lye with vs.

If thou wilt not, we shall bringe testimoniall agaynst the: that there was a yong felowe with the, and that thou hast let awaye thy maydens from the for the same cause. Susanna sighed, and sayde: Alas, I am in trouble on euery syde. Though I lowe youre mynde, it wyll be my death: and yf I consent not vnto you, I cannot escape your honours. Wel, it is better for me to fall in to youre honours without the dede beinge, then to synne in the sight of the LORDE: and with that, she cried out with a loude voyce the elders also cried out agaynst her.

Then ranne there one to the orcharde doore, & smote it open. Now when the seruantes of the house herde y^e crye in y^e outward

they rushed in at the backe doore, to se what the matter was. So when the elders tolde them, the seruantes were greatly ashamed, for why, there was neuer soch a reporte made of Susanna. On the morow after came the people to Joachim hir housbonde, and y^e two elders came also, full of myscheuous imaginacions agaynst Susanna, to bringe her vnto death, & spake thus before the people: Sende for Susanna y^e daughter of helchias, Joachims wife. And immediately they sent for her. So she came wth her father & mother, hir children & all her kynrede. Now Susanna was a tender person, & maruelous fayr of face. Therfore the wicked men commaunded to take of the clothes from her face (for she was couered) y^e at the leest, they might so be satisfied in hir beutie. Then hir frendes, yee all they y^e knewe her, began to wepe.

These two elders stode vp in the myddest of the people, & layed their hondes vpon y^e heade of Susanna: which wepte, and looked vnto heauen, for hir herte had a sure trust in the LORDE. And the elders sayde:
As we were walkinge in the orcharde alone, this woman came in wth hir two maydens:
whom sh^e sent awaye from her, & sparded y^e orcharde doores. With that, a yonge felowe (which there was hyd) came vnto her, & laye wth her. As for vs, we stode in a corner of the orcharde. And whē we sawe this wickednes, we rane to her: & perceaued, y^e they had medled together. But we coude not holde him, for he was stronger then we: thus he opened y^e doore, & gat him awaye. Now whē we had take this womā, we axed her, what yonge felow this was: but she wolde not tell vs. This is y^e matter, & we be witnesses of y^e same.

The comon sorte beleued them, as those y^e were the elders & iudges of the people, & so they condemned her to death. Susanna cried out wth a loude voyce, & sayde: O euerylastinge God, thou searcher of secretes, thou y^e knowest all thinges afore they come to passe: thou wotest, y^e they haue borne false wytenes agaynst me: & beholde, I must dye, whereas I neuer dyd eny soch thinges, as these men haue maliciously inuented agaynst me.
And y^e LORDE herde hir voyce. For whē she was led forth to death, y^e LORDE raised vp y^e spiete of a yonge childe, whose name was Daniel, which cried wth a loude voyce: I am clene fro this bloude. Thē all y^e people turned the wth him, & saide: What meane these wor-des, y^e thou hast spoke? Daniel stode in y^e myd-dest of the, & sayde: Are ye soch fooles? O ye children of Israel, y^e ye can not discern: Ye haue here condēned a daughter of Israel vnto death, and knowe not the trueth wherfore: Go syr on iudgment agayne, for they haue spoken false witness agaynst her.

Wherfore the people turned agayne in all the haist. And the elders (that is, the principall heades) sayde vnto him: come sit dow-ne here amonge vs, and shewe vs this matter, seynge God hath geuen the as greate honoure, as an elder. And Daniel sayde vnto them: Put these two asyde one from another and then shal I heare them. When they were put a sunder one from another, he called one of them, and sayd vnto him: O thou olde cankerde carle, that hast vsed thy wickednesse so longe: thine vngacious bedes which thou hast done afore, are now come to light. For thou hast geuen false iudgmentes, thou hast oppressed the innocent, and letten the gilty go free, where as yet the LORDE saith: The innocent and righteous set thou slaye not. Wel than, yf thou hast seene her, tel me, vnder what tre sawest thou them talkyng together? He answered: Vnder a Nolibery tre. And Daniel sayde: very wel, Now thou leyst euen vpon thine heade. Lo the messenger of the LORDE hath receaved the sentence of him, to cut y^e in two.

Then put he him asyde, and called for the other, and sayde vnto him: O thou sedeof Canaan, but not of Juda: saynesse hath disceaued the, and lust hath subuerted thine herre. Thus dealte ye afore with the daughters of Israel, and they (for feare) consented vnto you: but the daughter of Juda wolde not abyde youre wickednesse. Now tell me than, vnder what tre didest thou take them speakinge together? He answered: vnder a pomgranate tre. Then sayde Daniel vnto him: very wel, now thou leyst also euen vpon thine heade. The messenger of the LORDE stondeth waytinge with the swerde, to cut the in two, and to slaye you both.

With that, all the whole multitude ga-ue a greate shoute, and praysed God, which allwaye deliuereth them y^e put their trust in him. And they came vpon the two elders, (whom Daniel had conuicte with their owne mouth: that they had geuen false wit-nesse) and dealte with them, euen likewyse as they wolde haue done with their negh-boursse: Yee they dyd accordinge to the la-we of Moses, and put them to death. Thus the innocent bloude was saued the same daye.

The helchias & his wife praysed God for their daughter Susanna, with Joachim his husbande and all y^e kindred: that there was no dishoneste founde in her. From that daye forth was Daniel had in greete reputaciō in the sight of y^e people.

The ende of the story of Susanna.

The story of Bel, which is the xiij. Chapter of Daniel after the Latin.

There was at Babilon an ymage, called Bel: and there were spent vpon him every daye, xij. caltes, xl. shepe, and sixe greete portes of wine. Him dyd the kynge worshippe himself, and wente daylie to hono^r him: but Daniel worshiped his owne God. And the kynge sayde vnto him: Why dost not thou worshippe Bel: he answered and sayde: Because I maye not worshippe thinges, that be made wth hondes, but the lyvinge God, which made heauen and earth, and hath power vpon all flesh. The kynge sayde vnto him: thinkest thou not, y^e Bel is a lyvinge God: O seist thou not, how moch he eateth and drynkech every daye: Daniel smiled, and sayde: O kynge, disceaue not thyselfe: This is but made of claye with in, and of metall without, nether eateth he euer any thinge.

Then the kynge was wroth, and called for his prestes, and sayde vnto them: If ye tell me not who this is, that eateth vp these expenses, ye shal dye: But yf ye can certifie me, that Bel eateth them, then Daniel shall dye, for he hath spoken blasphemy agaynst Bel. And Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: let it so be, as corlinge as thou hast sayde. The prestes of Bel were lxx. besyde their wyues and children. And the kynge wente with Daniel into the temple of Bel. So Bel's prestes sayde: Lo, we wil go out, & set thou y^e meate there (O kynge) & poure in the wyne: then shutt the doore fast, and seale it with thine owne signet: and tomorrow when thou comest in, yf thou fyndest not, that Bel hath eaten vp all, we wil suffre death: or els Daniel, that hath lyed vpon vs. The prestes thought them sel ues sure ynough, for vnder y^e altare they made a prety inuance, & there went in euer, and ate vp what there was.

So when they were gone forth, the kynge set meates before Bel. Now Daniel commaunded his seruantes to bringe offes, and these he sifted thorow out all the temple, that the kynge might se. Then went they out, & sparre the doore, sealinge it with y^e kynges signet, and so departed. In y^e night came the prestes with their wyues and children (as they were wonte to do) and at adronte vp all. In the morninge betwixt the breake of the daye, the kynge aroose, & Daniel with him. And the kynge sayde: Daniel, are the seales whole yet: he answered: Y^e kynge they be whole. Now as soon as he had opened the doore, the kynge looked wth alyare, and cried with a loude voyce: Greate art thou o Bel, and with the is no dysaunt. Then laughed Daniel, and helde the kynge, that he shoulde not go in, and sayde: Before the pavement, marcke well, whose footstepes are these: The kynge sayde: I se the footstepes of men, women and children.

Therfore the kynge was angry, and with the prestes, with their wyues and children, they shewed him y^e prety doore, where they came in, & ate vp soch thinges as were vpon y^e altare. For the which cause y^e kynge slayd them, & deliuered Bel in to Daniels power, which destroyed him and his temple.

And in that same place there was a greate dragon, which they of Babilon worshipped. And y^e kynge sayde vnto Daniel: sayst thou, y^e this is but a god of metall also: he liueth, he eateth & drynkech: so y^e thou canst saye, that he is no lyvinge God, that thou worshippe him. Daniel sayde vnto y^e kynge: I wil worshippe the LORDE my God, he is y^e true lyvinge God: as for this, he is not the God of life. But geue me leane (O kynge) & I shal destroye this dragon without swerde or staff. The kynge sayde: I geue y^e leane. Then Daniel toke pitch, fatte and hairie wool, and dyed them together, and made lompes thereof: this he put in y^e Dragons mouth, and y^e dragon barst in sonder: and Daniel sayd: there is he whom ye worshipped.

When they of Babilon harde that, they toke greate indignacion, and gathered together agaynst the kynge, sayenge: The kynge is become a Jewe also, he hath destroyed Bel, he hath slayne y^e Dragon, and put the prestes to death. So they came to y^e kynge, & sayde: let us haue Daniel, or els we wil destroye the and thine house.

Now when y^e kynge sawe, that they rushed in so fere vpon him, & that necessite constrained him, he deliuered Daniel vnto them: which cast him in to the Lyons denne, where he was sixe dayes. In the denne there were seven Lyons, and they had geuen them euery daye two bodies and two shepe: which then were not geue them, that they might deuoure Daniel.

There was in Jewry a prophet called Abacuc, which had made potage, and brot bled in a depe platter, and was goinge into the selde, for to bringe it to y^e menora. But the angell of the LORDE sayde vnto Abacuc: go cary the meate that thou hast in to Babilon, vnto Daniel, which is in y^e lyons denne. And Abacuc sayde: LORDE, I neuer sawe Babilon: and as for the denne, I knowe it not. Then the angel of the LORDE toke him by the toppe, and bare him by the haire of the heade, and (choirow a mightie wynde) set him in Babilon vpon the denne. And Abacuc cried, sayenge: O Daniel thou seruante of God, haue take the breakfast, y^e God hath sent y^e. And Daniel saide: O God, hast thou thought vpon me: wel, thou neuer failest them that loue the. So Daniel aroose, & ate: and the angel of the LORDE set Abacuc in his owne place agayne immediatly.

Upon the seventh daye, the kynge wente to beweepe Daniel: and when he came to the denne, he looked in: and beholde, Daniel sat in the myddest of the Lyons. Then cried y^e kynge with a loude voyce, sayenge: Greate art thou, o LORDE God of Daniel: & he drew him out of the denne. As for those that were y^e cause of his destrucciō, he dyd cast them into the denne, and they were deuoured in a moment before his face.

After this, wrote the kynge vnto all people, kynnedes and tungen, that dwelt in all countrees, sayenge: peace be multiplied with you. My commaundement is, in all the dominyon of my realme: that men feare and stonde in awe of Daniels God, for he is the lynyng God, which endureth euer: his kynngdome abyderth vncorrupte, and his power is everlastinge. It is he that can deliuer and saue: he doth wonders and maruelous woites in heauen and in earth, for he hath saued Daniel from the power of the Lyons.

The first Chapter.

After that Alexander the sonne of Philippe, kynge of Macedonia wente forth of the londe of Cethim, and slewe Darius kynge of the persians and Medes: It happened, that he toke greate warres in honde, wanne very many stronge cities, and slew many kinges of the earth: goynge thorow to the endes of the world, and getting many spoyle of the people. In so moch, that he wolde stode in greate awe of him, and therfore was he proude in his herte. Now whē he had gathered a mightie stronge hoost, and subdued the lodes and people with their prynces, so that they became tributaries vnto him: he fell sick. And whē he perceaued that he must nedes die, he called for his noble estates (which had bene brought vp with him of children) and parted his kyngdome amonge them, whyle he was yet alyue. So Alexander raygned xij. yere, and then dyed.

After his death sell the kyngdome vnto his prynces, and they optayned it euery one in his roome, and caused them selues to be crowned as kynges: and so dyd their childre after them many yeres, and moch wickednesse increased in the world. Out of these came ymragious rote, noble Antiochus the sonne of Antiochus the kynge (which had bene a pledge at Rome) and he raygned in the xxxvij. yere of the raigne of the Grekes.

In those dayes wete there out of Israel wicked men, which moued moch people to their coucel, sayenge: Let vs go and make a covenannt with the heithen, for we are rounde aboute vs: for sence we departed from them, we haue had moch sorow. So this deuyc pleased them well, and certayne of the people toke vpon the for to go vnto the kynge, and gaue them licence to do after the ordinaunce of the heithen. Then set they vp an open soyle (at Jerusalem) of the lawes of the heithen, and were nomore circumcised: but forsoke the holy Testamente, and ioyned them selues to the heithen, and were cleane solde to do myschance. So when Antiochus begonne to be mightie in his kyngdome, he wente aboute to optayne the londe of Egypte also, that he might haue the dominion of two realmes. Upon this entred he in to Egypte with a stronge hoost, with charettes, elephants, horsemen, and a greate nombre of shippes, and begonne to warre agaynst ptolomy the kynge of Egypte. But ptolomy was a frayed of him, and fled: and many of his people were wounded to death. Thus Antiochus wanne many stronge cities, and toke awaye great good out of the londe of Egypte.

And after that Antiochus had synnered in Egypte, he turned agayne in the xliij. yere, and wente toward Israel, and came vp to Jerusalem with a mightie people: and entred proudly into the Sanctuary, and toke awaye the golden altare, the candilstick, and all the ornamente thereof: the table of the shewbread, the pouring vessel, the chargers, the golden spones, the velle, the crownes and golden apparel of the temple, and brake downe all. He toke also the syluer and golde, the precious Jewels, and the secreete treasures that he founde. And when he had taken awaye all together, caused a greate murthure of men, and so fulfilled his malicions pryde, he departed in to his owne londe.

Thus there arose greate heynesse and misery in all the londe of Israel. The prynces and the elders of the people mourned, the yonge men and the maydens were defyled, and the sayre beute of women was chaunged: the brydegrome and the bryde toke them to mournynge: the londe and those that dwelt therein, was moued: for all the house of Jacob was brought to confucion.

After two yeres the kynge sent his chiefe treasurer vnto the cities of Juda, which came to Jerusalem with a greate multitude of people, speakinge peaceable wordes vnto the people, but all was disceate: for when they had given him credence, he fell suddenly vpon the cite, and smote it sore, and destroyed moch people of Israel. And when he had spoyled the cite, he set fyre on it, casting downe houses and walles on euery syde. The women and their children toke they captiue, and led awaye their catell. Then buylded they the castel of David with a greate and thicke wall, and with mightie towres, and made it a stronge holde for them. Besyde all this they sette wicked people and vngodly men to kepe it, stored it with weapens and vytales: gathered the goodes of Jerusalem, and layed the vpright: thus became it a thewyshe castell.

And this was done to laye waite for the people, that wente in to the Sanctuary, and for the cruel destruccion of Israel. Thus they shed innocent bloude on euery syde of the Sanctuary, and defyled it: In so moch that the citelyns were sayne to departe, and the cite became an habitacion of straungers, beyng desolate of hir owne seide, for hir owne natyres were sayne to leane her. Her Sanctuary was cleane waisted, hir holy dayes were turned in to mournynge, hir Sabbathes were had in derision, and hir honoure brought to naught. Loke how greate hir glory was afore, so greate was hir confucion, and hir waye turned in to sorow.

Antiochus also the kynge sent out a commission vnto all his kyngdome, that all the people shulde be one. Then they left euery man his lawe, and all the heithen agreed to the commaundement of kynge Antiochus: for many of the Israelites consented there vnto, offeringe vnto Idols, and defylinge the Sabbath. So the kynge Antiochus sent his messangers with his commission vnto Jerusalem, and to all the cities of Juda: that they shulde folowe the lawes of the heithen, and forbad ether burnt offeringe, meat offeringe, or peace offeringe to be made in the temple of God, and that there shulde no Sabbath ner hys feast daye be kepte: but commaunded, that the Sanctuary and the holy people of Israel shulde be defyled.

He commaunded also that there shulde be set vp other altares, temples and Idols: to offere vp swynes flesh and other vncleane beastes: that men shulde leane their children vncircumcised, to defyle their soules with all maner of vncleannesse and abhominacions:

that they might so forget the lawe, and chaunge all the holy ordinaunces of God: and that who so ever wolde not do accordynge to the commaundement of kynge Antiochus, shulde suffre death. In like maner commaunded he thorow out all his realme, and sett rulers ouer the people, for to compell them to do these thynges, commaunding the cities of Juda to do sacrifice vnto Idols.

Then wente the people vnto the heithen by heapes, forsoke the lawe of the LORDE, and committed moch euell in the londe: yee and chaced out the secretes of Israelites, which had hid them selues in corners and preuy places. The xx. daye of the moneth Casleu, in the Cxlv. yere, set kynge Antiochus an abhominable Idol of desolacion vpon the altare of God, and they buylded altares thorow out all the cities of Juda on euery syde, before the doores of the houses, and in the stretes: where they burnt incense, and dyd sacrifice. And as for the bookes of the lawe of God, they brent them in the fyre, and rente them in peces. What so ever he was that had a boke of the Testamente of the LORDE founde by hym, yee who so euer endeuored himself to kepe the lawe of the LORDE, the kynges commaundement was, that they shulde put him to death. And thorow his auctorite they executed these thynges euery moneth, vpon the people of Israel that were founde in the cities.

The fyne and twentye daye of the moneth, what tyme as they dyd sacrifice vpon the altare (which stode in the steade of the altare of the LORDE) accordynge to the commaundement of kynge Antiochus, they put certayne women to death, which had caused their children to be circumcised: Not only that, but they hanged vp the children by the neckes thorow out all their houses, and slewe the circumcisers of them.

Yet were there many of the people of Israel, which determed in them selues, that they wolde not eate vncleane thynges: but chose rather to suffre death, then to be defyled with vncleane meates. So because they wolde not breake the blessed lawe of God, they were cruelly slayne. And this greate tyranny increased very sore vpon the people of Israel.

The II. Chapter.

In those dayes there dyd stode vp one Matathias the sonne of Symeon the priest (out of the kynred of Joaris) fro Jerusalem, and dwelt vpon the mount of Modin, and had v. sonnes: The called Gad dis: Symon, called Thasi: Judas, ocher wyse called Machabens: Eleazer, ocher wyse called Abaron: and Jonathas, whose surname was Apphus. These sawe the euell, & was done amonge the people of Juda and Jerusalem. And Matathias sayde: Wo is me, alas that euer I was borne, to se this misery of my people, and & piteous destruccio of the holy cite: & thus to syt so styll, it beyng deliuered in to the hondes the enemies, & the Sanctuary is come in to the power of straungers, hir temple is, as it were a man & hath lost his good name. Hir precious ornaments are caried awaye captiue, hir olde men are slayne in the stretes, and hir yonge men are fallen thorow the swearde of the enemies.

What people is it, that hath not some possiession in hir kyngdome? Or who hath not gotten some of hir spoyle? All hir glory is taken awaye. She was a Quene, and now she is become an handmayde. Beholde dure Sanctuary, oure betwye and honoure is waisted awaye, and defyled by the Gentiles. What helpeth it vs then to lyne? And Matathias rente his clothes, he and his sonnes, and put sack cloth vpon them, & mourned very sore.

Then came the men thither which were sent of kyng Antiochus, to compell such as were fled in to the cite of Modin, for to do sacrifice and to burne incense vnto Idols, and to forsake the lawe of God. So, many of the people of Israel consented and enclined vnto them, but Matathias and his sonnes remayned stedfast. Then spake the commissioners of kyng Antiochus, & sayde vnto Matathias: Thou art a noble man, of hie reputation and greate in this cite, hauinge saye children and brethien. Come thou therfore first, and fulfill the kynges commaundement, like as all the heithen haue done, yee and & men of Juda, and soch as remayne at Jerusalem: so shalt thou and thy children be in & kynges fauoure, and enriched with golde, syluer and greate rewardes.

Matathias answered, and spake with a loude voyce: Though all nacions obeye the kyng Antiochus, and fall awaie euery man fro kepynge & lawe of their fathers: though they consente to his commaundementes, yet wil I & my sonnes and my brethien, not fall from the lawe oure fathers. God forbyd we shulde that were not good for vs, that we shulde forsake the lawe and ordinaunces of God, and to agre vnto the commaundement of kyng Antiochus. Therfore we wil do no soch sacrifice, nether breake the statutes of & lawe, to go another waye. And whi he had spoken these wordes, there came one of the Jewes, which openly in the sight of al dyd sacrifice vnto the Idols vpon the altar in the cite of Modin, accordinge to the kynges commaundement.

When Matathias sawe this, he greued him at the herte, so that his raynes shok withall, and his wrath kindled for very le of the lawe. With that he gaue a signe forth, and kyled the Jew besyde the altar: yee and slewe & kynges commissioner, that compellid him to do sacrifice, & destroyed the altar at the same time: soch a yele had he in to the lawe of God, like as Phineas dyd in to Zambri the sonne of Salemi. And Matathias cried with a loude voyce thorow & cite, sayenge: Who so is feruent in the lawe, & wil kepe & couenant, let him folowe me. So he and his sonnes fled in to the mountaynes and left all that euer they had in & cite. Many other godly men also departed in to the wyldernesse with their children, their wyues and their catell, and remayned there: for the tyranny increased so sore vpon them.

Now when the kynges seruantes and the hoost, which was at Jerusalem in the cite of David herde, that certayne me had broken the kynges commaundement and was gone their waye to the wyldernesse in to secrete places, and that there were many departed after them: they folowed vpon them to fight agaynst them in the Sabbath day, and sayde: Wyl ye yet rebell? Get you hence & do the commaundement of kyng Antiochus, and ye shal lyne. They answered: We wil not go forth, nether wil we do the kynges commaundement, to defyle & Sabbath day. Then beganne they to fight agaynst them: nevertheless they gaue them none other answer, nether cast they one stone at them. They made fast their piuey places, but sayde: We wil dye all in oure innocency, heauen & earth shal testifie with vs, that ye put vs to death wrongeously. Thus they fought agaynst them vpon the Sabbath, & slewe both men and catell, their wyues and their children: the nombre of a thousande people.

When Matathias and his frendes herde this, they mourned for them right sore, and sayde one to another: If so be that we all be as oure brethien haue done, and fighte for oure lyues & for oure lawes agaynst the then: then shall they the sooner rote vs out of the earth. So they concluded amonge the silues at the same tyme, sayenge: What so euer he be that cometh to make battayll vs vpon the Sabbath daye, we wyl fight agaynst him, & not dye all, as & brethien & were murthured so haynously. Vpon this came the Synagoge of the Jewes vnto the: stronge men of Israel, all soch as were feruent in the lawe. And all they that were fled for persecucion, came to helpe them, and to stande by them: In so much that they gathered an hoost of men, and slewe the wicked doers in their gelousy, and the vngodly men in their wrath. Some of the wicked fled in to the heithen, and escaped.

Thus Matathias and his frendes wente aboute, and destroyed the altars, and circumcised the children, that had not yet receaued circumcision: as many as they founde within & coostes of Israel: and folowed mightily vpon the children of pryde, and this acte prospered in their hondes: In so much, that they kepte the lawe agaynst the power of the Gentiles and the kynges, and gaue not ouer their dominion vnto wicked doers.

After this when the tyme drew on fast, that Matathias shulde dye, he sayde vnto his sonnes: Now is pryde and persecucion increased, now is the tyme of destruccio and wrathfull displeasure: Wherefore (o my sonnes) be ye feruent in the lawe, and ioperde youre lyues for the Testament of the fathers: call to remembraunce what actes oure fathers dyd in their tyme, so shal ye receaue greate honoure and an euerlastinge name.

Remember Abraham, was not he founde faithfull in tentacion, and it was reccordid vnto him for righteousnesse? Joseph in tyme of his trouble kepte the commaundement, and was made a lord of Egypte. Phineas oure father was so feruent for the honoure of God, that he oprauned the couenant of an euerlastinge priesthode. Josue for fulfilling the worde of God, was made the capteyne of Israel. Caleb bare recorde before the congregacion, and receaued an heretage. David also in his mercifull kyndnesse, oprauned the throne of an euerlastinge kyngdome. Elias beyng gelous and feruent in the lawe, was taken vp in to heauen. Hananias, Azarias and Misael remayned stedfast in faith, and were deliuered out of the fyre. In like maner Daniel beyng vngodlye, was saved from the mouth of the Lyons.

And thus ye maye conside thorow out all ages sene the worlde begonne, that who so euer put their trust in God, were not ouercome. Feare not ye then the wordes of an vngodly man, for his glory is but donge and womes: to daye is he set vp, and to morow is he gone: for he is turned in to earth, and his memoriale is come to naught. Wherefore (o my sonnes) take good hertes vnto you, and quyte youre selues like men in the lawe: for yf ye do the thinges that are commaunded you in the lawe of the L O R D E youre God, ye shal optaine greate honoure ther in.

And beholde, I knowe that youre brother Symon is a man of wysdome: se that ye geue eare vnto him allwaye, he shal be a father vnto you. As for Judas Machabeus, he hath euer bene mightie and stronge from his youth vp: let him be youre capteyne, and ordie the battayll of & people: Thus shall ye bringe vnto you all those that fauoure the lawe, and se that ye auenge the wronge of youre people, and recompence the heithen agayne, and applie youre selues whole to the commaundement of the lawe. So he gaue them his blessinge, and was layed by his fathers: and dyed in the Cxlvj. yeare at Modin, where his sonnes buried him in his fathers sepulchre, & all Israel made greate lamentacion for him.

The III. Chapter.

Then stode vp Judas Machabeus in his fathers steade, and all his brethien helped him: and so dyd all they that helde with his father, and fought with che-refulnesse for Israel. So Judas gat his people greate honoure: he put on a brest plate as a giante, and arayed him self with his harness, and defended the hoost with his swearde. In his actes he was like a lyon, & as a lyons whelpe roaringe at his praye. He was an enemye to the wicked, and hited them out: and brent vp those, that vexed his people: So that his enemies fled for feare of him, and all the workers of vngodlynes were put to trouble: soch lucke and prosperite was in his honde. This greued dyuerse kynges, but Jacob was greatly reioysed thorow his actes, and he gat him self a greate name for euer.

He wente thorow the cities of Juda, destroyinge the vngodly out of them, turnynge awaye the wrath from Israel, and receauynge soch as were oppressed: and the same of him wente vnto the vttemost parte of &

earch. Then Appollonius (a pryncce of Syria) gathered a nughtie greate hoost of the heithen & out of Samaria, to fight agaynst Israel. Which when Judas perceived, he wente forth to mete him, fought with him, slew him, and a greate multitude with him: the remnaunte fled, and he toke their substance. Judas also toke Appollonius owne swerde, and fought wth it all his life longe.

Now when Seron (another pryncce of Syria) herde saye, that Judas had gathered vnto him the congregacion and church of the faithfull, he sayde: I will get me a name and a prayse thorow out the realme: for I will go fight with Judas and them that are with him, as many as haue despised the kynges commaundement. So he made him ready, and there wente with him a greate mightie hoost of the vngodly, to stonde by him, and to be auenged of the childre of Israel. And when they came nye vnto Berthoron, Judas wente forth agaynst them with a small company. And when his people sawe soch a greate hoost befoie the, they sayde vnto Judas: How are we able (beynge so fewe) to fight agaynst so greate a multitude and so stronge: seinge we be so weery, and haue fasted all this daye?

But Judas sayde: It is a small matter for many to be ouercome with fewe: For there is no difference to the God of heauen, to deliuer by a greate multitude or by a small company: for the victory of the battell stondesth not in the multitude of the hoost, but in the strength cometh from heauen. Beholde, they come agaynst vs with a presumptuous and proude multitude: to destroye vs, oure wyues and oure children, and to robbe vs. But we will fight for oure wyues and for oure lawes, and the LORDE himself shall destroye the before oure face: therefore be not ye afayed of them.

As soone as he had spoken these wordes, he leapt sodenly vpon the. Thus was Se-ron smytten, and his hoost put to flight. Judas folowed vpon them beyonde Berthoron vnto the playne felde: where he slew eight hundred men of them, and the residue fled in to the londe of the phylisines. Then all the heithen on every syde were afayed for Judas and his brethren: for the rumoure of him came vnto the kynges eares, for all the Gentiles coude tell of the warres of Judas.

So when kyng Antiochus herde these tidings, he was angrie in his mynde: wherefore he sente forth and gathered an hoost of his whole realme, very stronge armies: and opened his treasury, and gaue his hoost a yeaies wagies in honde, commaunding them to be ready at all tymes.

Nevertheless when he sawe, that there was not moneye ynough in his treasures, and that thorow the discorde and persecucion, which he made in y^e londe (to put downe y^e lawes that had bene of olde tyme) his customes and tributes of the londe were mynished: he feared that he was not able to beare the costes and charges any longer, ner to haue soch giftes, to geue so liberally as he dyd afore, more then the kynges that were befoie him.

Wherefore he was herry in his mynde, and thought to go in to persides, for to take tributes of y^e londe, and so to gather much moneye. So he left Lysias (a noble man of the kynges bloude) to ouersee the kynges busynesses, from the water Euphrates vnto the borders of Egypt: and to kepe well his sonne Antiochus, till he came agayne.

Moreover, he gaue him half of his hoost and elephantes, committed vnto him euery thinge of his mynde, concernynge the which dwelt in Juda, and Jerusalem: that he shulde sende out an army agaynst them, to destroye and to rote out the power of Israel and the remnaunte of Jerusalem: to put out their memorall from that place, to make straungers for to inhabite all their quarters, and to parte their londe amonge them. Thus the kyng toke the other parte of the hoost, and departed from Antioch (a cite of his realme) ouer the water of Euphrates, in the hundredth and xliij. yeaies, and wente thow the hye countrees.

And Lysias chose vnto him peolomyth, some of Dorimiths, Lycanor and Gorgias mightie men, & the kynges frendes. These he sent with xl. thousande sote men and vij. thousande hoisemen, for to go in to y^e londe of Juda, and to destroye it, as the kyng commaunded. So they wente forth with all their power, and came to Emmaus in to the playne felde. When the marchautes herde the rumoure of them, they and their seruantes toke very much siluer and golde, for to bye the childre of Israel to be their bondemen. There came vnto them also yet more men of warre on every syde, out of Syria & the from the palestynes.

Now when Judas and his brethren sawe that trouble increased, and that the hoost drew nye vnto their borders: consideringe y^e kynges wordes which he commaunded vnto the people: namely, that they shulde utter ly waist and destroye them: They sayde one to another: Let vs redresse the decaye of oure people, let vs fight for oure folke and for oure Sanctuary. Then the congregacion was soone ready gathered to fight, to praye and to make supplicacion vnto God for mercy and grace.

As for Jerusalem, it laye voyde, and was as it had bene a wyldernes. There wente no man in nor out at it, and the Sanctuary was troden downe. The aleauntes kepte the castell, there was the habitacion of the heithen. The mynth of Jacob was taken awaye, the pype & the harpe was gone from amonge them.

The Israelites gathered them together, and came to Maspha befoie Jerusalem: for in Maspha was the place where they prayd afore tyme. So they fasted that daye, and put sackclothes vpon them, cast asshes vpon their heades, rente their clothes, and layde forth the bookes of the lawe (wherout y^e heithen sought the liknesse of their ymages) and brought the prestes ornaments, the fustinges and the Tythes. They set there also the absteyners (which had fulfilled their dayes) befoie God, and cried with a loude voyce towarde heauen, sayenge: what shal we do with these? and whither shall we carry them awaye?

For thy Sanctuary is troden downe and desyld, thy prestes are come to heynesse and dishonoure: and beholde, the heithen are come together for to destroye vs. Thou knowest what thiges they ymagyn agaynst vs. How maye we stonde before them, except thou (O God) be oure helpe?

They blew out the trompettes also with a loude voyce. Then Judas ordered captaines ouer the people: ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten. But as for soch as buylded them houses, married wyues, planted them vynyardes, and those that were fearfull: he commaunded them euery man to go home, acordinge to y^e lawe. So the hoost remoued, and pitched vpon the South syde of Emmaus.

And Judas sayde: Arme youre selues, be stronge (O my children) make you ready agaynst tomorrow in the momynge, that ye maye fight with these people, which are agreed together to destroye vs & oure Sanctuary. Better is it for vs to dye in battayll, then to se oure people and oure Sanctuary in soch a miserable case. Nevertheless, as y^e will is in heauen, so be it.

The III. Chapter.

Then toke Gorgias fyue thousande men of sote, and a thousande of the best hoisemen: and remoued by night, to come nye where y^e Jewes hoost laye, and so to slaye them sodenly. Now the men that kepte the castell, were the coueyers of them. Then arose Judas to smyte the chese and principall of the kynges hoost at Emmaus, for the army was not yet come together. In the meane season came Gorgias by night in to Judas tentes: when he founde no man there, he sought them in the mostaynes, and thought they had bene fled awaye because of him. But whē it was daie, Judas shewed himself in y^e felde with thre thousande men only, which had nether harnesser swerdes to their myndes.

But on the other syde, they sawe that the heithen were mightie and wel harnessed, and their hoisemen aboute them, and all these wel experte in fettes of warre. Then sayde Judas to y^e men that were with him: Feare not ye the multitude of them, be not afayed of their violente runnyng: remembre how oure fathers were deliuered in the reed see, when pharao threatned them with a greate hoost. Euen so let vs also crie now towarde heauen: and the LORDE shall haue mercy vpon vs, and remembre the couenaunt of oure fathers, yee and destroye this hoost before our face this daye: And all heithen shal knowe, that it is God himself, which deliuereth and sauerth Israel.

Then the heithen lift vp their eyes: and when they sawe that they were commynge agaynst them, they wente out of their tentes in to the battayll: and they that were w Judas, blew vpon the trompettes. So they buckled together, and the heithen were discomfited, and fled ouer the playne felde: but the hymnost of them were slayne. For they folowed vpon them vnto Assaremoth, and in to the felde of Idumea towarde Azot and Jamnia: so that there were slayne of them vpon a thre thousande men. So Judas turned agayne with his hoost, and sayde vnto the people: Be not greedy of spoyle, we haue yet a battayll to fight: for Gorgias & his hoost are here by vs in the mountaynes, but stonde ye fast agaynst our enemies, and ouercome them: then maye ye safely take the spoyle.

As Judas was speakynge these wordes, there appeared one parte of them vpon the mount. But when Gorgias sawe that they of his partie were fled, and the tentes brent vp (for by the smoke they might vnderstande what was done) they perceauynge this, were very sore afraied: and when they sawe also that Judas and his hoost were in & felde ready to stryke battayll, they fled euerychone in to the londe of the heithen.

So Judas turned agayne to spoyle the tentes, where they gat much golde and syluer, precious stones, purple & greate riches. Thus they wente home, and sunge a psalme of thankesgeuynge and praysed God in heauen: for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever: And so Israel had a greate victory in that daye.

Now all the heithen that escaped, came and tolde Lysias euery thinge as it happened. Wherefore Lysias was sore afraied and grieved in his mynde, because Israel had not gortē soch myffortune as he wolde they shulde, nether as the kynge commaunded. The nexte yere folowynge, gathered Lysias thre score thousande chosen men of sorte, and fyue thousande horsmen, to fight agaynst them.

So they came in to Jewry, and pitched their tentes at Bethoron, where Judas came agaynst them with ten thousande men. And when he sawe so greate mightie an hoost, he made his prayer and sayde: Blessed be thou (o sauoure of Israel) which diddest destroye the violent power of the giann te, in the honde of thy seruant Daud, and gaucst the hoost of the heithen in to the honde of Ionathas (the sonne of Saul) and of his weapen bearer.

Put this hoost now in to the honde of y people of Israel, and let them be confounded in their multitude and horsmen. Make them afraied, & discomforth the boldnes of their strength, & they maye be moued thorow their destruccion. Cast them downe thorow the swearde of thy louers, then shal all they that knowe thy name, prayse the with thankesgeuynge.

So they stroke the batell, and there was slayne of Lysias hoost, fyue thousande. Then Lysias seyng the discomfytynge of his men, and the manlynesse of the Jews, how they were ready, ether to lyue or to dye like men: he wente vnto Antioche and chose out men of warre: that when they were gathered together, they might come agayne in to Jewry. Then sayde Judas and his brethren: beholde, our enemies are discomfited: Let vs now go vp, to clese and to repaire the Sanctuary.

Vpon this, all the hoost gathered them together, and wence vp vnto mount Sion. Now when they sawe the Sanctuary laid waist, the altar defyled, the doores brent vp, the shrubbes growynge in the court, like as in a wod or vpon mountaynes, yee and that the prestes Celles were broken downe. They rente their clothes, made greate lamentacion, cast asshes vpon their heades, fell downe flat to the ground, made a greate noyse with the trompettes, and cried toward heauen.

Then Judas apoynted certayne men to fight agaynst those which were in the castell, till they had clensed the Sanctuary. So he chose prestes & were vndefyled, soch as had pleasure in the lawe of God: and they clensed the Sanctuary, & bare out the defylde stones in to an vncleane place. And for so much as the altar of burntofferings was vndefyled, he toke aduysment, what he might do withall: so he thought it was best to destroye it, lest it shulde happen to do them eny shame: for the heithen had defyled it, & therefore they brake it downe. As for the stones, they layed them vp vpon the mountayne by the house in a conuenient place: till there came a prophet to shewe, what shulde be done with them.

So they toke whole stones acordynge to the lawe, and buylded a new altar soch one as was before, and made vp the Sanctuary within and without, and halowed the court. They made new ornamentes, & broughte y candilstickes, the altar of incense, and the table in to the temple. The incense layed they vpon the altar, & lighted the lampes which were vpon the candilstickes, that they might burne in the temple. They set the shewbread vpon the table, and hanged vp the vail, and set vp y temple, as it was afore. And vpon the xxv. daye of the ix. moneth (which is called the moneth of Caslen) in the C. lviij. yere: they rose vp by tymes in the mornynge for to do sacrifice (acordynge to the lawe) vpon the new burntofferynge altar, that they had made: after the tyme and season that y heithen had defyled it. The same daye was it set vp agayne, with songes pipes, harpes and cymbales.

And all the people fell vpon their faces, worshippynge and thankynge the God of heauen, which had geuen them the victory. So they kepte the dedicacion of the altar viij. dayes, offerynge burnt sacrifices and thankofferings with gladnesse. They decked the temple also with crownes and shylde of golde, and halowed the portes and alles, and hanged doores vpon them. Thus was there very greate gladnes amonge the people, because the blasphemy of the heithen was put awaye.

So Judas and his brethren with the whole congregacion of Israel, ordered, that the tyme of the dedicacion of y altar shulde be kepte in his season from yere to yere, by the space of viij. dayes, from the xxv. daye of the moneth Caslen: yee and that with myrrh and gladnesse.

And at the same tyme buylded they vp y mount Sion with hye walles and stronge towres rounde aboute: lest y Gentiles shulde come and treade it downe, as they dyd afore. Therefore Judas set men of warre in it, to kepe it: and made it stronge, for to defende Bethsura: that the people might haue a refuge agaynst the Edomites.

The V. Chapter.

It happened also that when y heithen rounde aboute herde, how that the altar and the Sanctuary were set up in their olde estatē: it displeased them very sore, wherfore they thought to destroye the generacion of Jacob that was amonge them: In so much that they beganne to slaye and to persecute certayne of y people. Then Judas fought agaynst the children of Esau in Idumea, and agaynst those which were at Arabathane (for they dwelt rounde aboute y Israelites) where he slewe & spoyled a greate multitude of the. He thoughte also vpon the malice and vnfaithfulnes of the children of Ben, how they were a snare and stoppe vnto y people, and how they layed waite for them in the hie waye: wherfore he shut them vp in to towres, and came vnto them, condemned them, and brent vp their towres, with all that were in them.

Afterwarde wente he agaynst the children of Ammon, wherof he founde a mighty power and a greate multitude of people, with Tymothy their capayne. So he strokē many battayls with them, which were destroyed before him. And when he had slayne them, he wanne Gazer the cite, with the towres belonginge thereto, and so turned agayne in to Jewry. The heithen also in Galilad gathered them together, agaynst the Israelites that were in their quarters, to slaye them: but they fled to the castell of Datheman, and sent letters vnto Judas and his brethren, sayenge: The heithen are gathered agaynst vs on euery syde, to destroye vs, and now they make the for to come and laye sege to y castell, wherunto we are fled, & Tymothy is the capayne of their hoost: come therefore, and deliuer vs out of their hondes: for there is a greate multitude of vs slayne all ready. Yee and our brethren that were at Tubin, are slayne and destroyed (welye a thousande men) and their wyues, their children and their goodes haue the enemies led awaye captiue.

Whyle these letters were yet a readynge, beholde, there came other messangers from Galilee, with rente clothes: which tolde euen the same tydings, and sayde, that they of Prolomais, of Tirus and of Sidon were gathered agaynst them, and that all Galilee was fylled with enemies to destroye Israel. When Judas and y people herde this, they came together (a greate congregacion) to deuise, what they might do for their bre-thien, that were in trouble and beseged of their enemies. And Judas sayde vnto Symon his brother: chose 3 out certayne men, and go deliuer thy brethren in Galilee: As for me and my brother Jonathas, we wyl go in to Galaadithim. So he left Josephus 3 sonne of Zachary, and Asarias, to be captaynes of the people and to kepe the remnaunt of the hoost in Jewry, & commaunded them, sayenge: Take the oversight of this people, and sethat ye make no warre agaynst the heithen, vntill the tyme that we come agayne. And vnto Simon he gaue thie thousande men for to go into Galilee, but Judas himself had eight thousande in to Galaadithim.

C Then wente Symon in to Galilee, and stroke byuerse batels w the heithen: whom he discomfited, and folowed vpon them vnto the porte of Ptolomais. And there were slayne of the heithen almost iij. thousande men. So he toke the spoyle of them, and carried awaye the Israelites (that were in Galilee and Arbaris) with their wyues, their children and all that they had, and brought them in to Jewry with greate gladnesse. Judas Machabens also and his brother Jonathas, wente ouer Jordane, and trauayled iij. dayes iourney in the wysdernesse: Where the Jebuthes met them, and receaued them loyngly, and tolde the euery thinge that had happened vnto their brethren in Galaadithim, and how that many of them were beseged in Barasa, Bosor, Alimis, Casphor, Mageth and Carnaim (all these are stronge walled and mightie greate cities) and 3 they were kepte in other cities of Galaad also: and tomorrow they are apoynted to brynge their hoost vnto these cities, to take them and to wyne them in one daye.

So Judas and his hoost turned in all the haist in the wildernesse toward Bosor, and wanne the cite, slewe all the males with the swerde, toke all their goodes, and set fyre vpon the cite. And in the night they toke their iourneye from thence, and came to the castell. And by tymes in the mornynge when they looked vp, beholde, there was an innumerable people bearynge laders and other instrumentes of warre, to take the castell and to ouercome them.

When Judas sawe that the battayll beganne, and that the noyse therof wente vp and range in to the heauen, and that there was so greate a crie in the cite: he sayde vnto his hoost: fight this daye for youre brethren. And so came behynde their enemies in thie companies, and blewe vpon their pettes, and cried in their prayer to God.

But as soone as Tymochis hoost perceived that Machabens was there, they fled from him, and 3 other slewe them downe right sore: so that there were kyled of them that same daye, almost eithe thousande men. Then departed Judas vnto Magapha, layed sege vnto it and wanne it, slawe all the males in it, spoyled it, and set fyre vpon it. From thence wente he and toke Casbon, Mageth, Bosor and the other cities in Galaad.

After this gathered Timothy another hoost, which pitched their tentes before Bethphon beyonde the water. Judas sent to spy the hoost, and they brought him worde agayne, sayenge: All the heithen that be rounde aboute vs, are gathered vnto him, and the hoost is very greate: yee they haue bynd the Arabians to helpe them, & haue pitched their tentes beyonde the water, and are ready to come and fight agaynst the. So Judas wente on to mete them.

And Timothy sayde vnto the captaynes of his hoost: when Judas and his hoost come nye the ryuer: yf he go ouer first, we shall not be able to withstonde him: for why, he will be to stronge for vs. But yf he darre not come ouer, so that he pitch his tence beyonde the water: then will we go ouer, for we shalbe stronge ynough agaynst him. Now as soone as Judas came to the ryuer, he apoynted certayne scribes of the people, and commaunded them, sayenge: sethat ye leaue none behynde vpon this syde of 3 ryuer, but let every man come to the battayll. So he wente first ouer vnto them, and his people after him.

And all the heithen were discomfited before him, and let their weapons fall, and ranne in to the temple that was at Carnaim. Which cite Judas wanne, and brennt the temple with all 3 were in it: So was Carnaim subdued, and might not withstode Judas. Then Judas gathered all the Israelites that were in Galaadithim, from 3 left vnto the most, with their wyues and their children (a very greate hoost) for to come in to the londe of Juda.

So they came vnto Ephron, which was a mightie, greate and stronge cite, and laye in their waye. For they coude not go by it, neither of the right honde ner of the left, but must go thorow it. Nevertheless they that were in the cite, wolde not let them go thorow, but walled vp the portes with stones.

And Judas sent vnto the with peaceable wordes, sayenge: Let vs passe thorow youre londe, that we maye go in to oure owne countre: there shal no body do you harme, we will let only go thorow. But they wolde not let them in.

Wherefore Judas commaunded a proclamation to be made thorow out the hoost, that every man shulde kepe his ordie: and so they dyd their best like valeant men.

And Judas beseged the cite all that daie and all that night, and so wanne it: where they slewe as many as were males, and destroyed the cite, and spoyled it, and wete thorow all the cite ouer them that were slayne. Then wente they ouer Jordane in to the playne felde before Bethsan. And Judas helped those forward that came behynde, and gaue the people good exortacion all 3 waye thorow, till they were come in to the londe of Juda. Thus they wente vp vnto the mount Sion, where they offred with myrrh and thankesguyng: because there were none of them slayne, but came home agayne peaceably.

Now what tyme as Judas and Jonathas were in the londe of Galaad, and Symon their brother in Galilee before Ptolomais: Then Josephus the sonne of Zachary and Asarias the captaynes, hearinge of the actes that were done and of the battels that were stroken, sayde: Let vs get vs a name also, and go fight agaynst the heithen that are rounde aboute vs.

So they gaue their hoost a commaundement, and wente toward Jamnia. Then came Gorgias and his men out of the cite, to fight agaynst them: Josephus also and Asarias were chased vnto 3 borders of Jewry, & there were slayne 3 daye of 3 people of Israel iij. M. men: so 3 there was a greate misery amonge 3 people, & all because they were not obediēt vnto Judas & his brethren, but thought they shulde quyte them selues man fully. Nevertheless they came not of the seide of these men, by whom Israel was helped. But the men that were with Judas, were greatly commended in the sight of all Israel and all heithen, where so euer their name was herde vps, and the people came vnto them byddinge them welcome.

After this wente Judas forth with his brethren, and fought agaynst the children of Esau, in the londe 3 lieth toward the south where he wanne the cite of Sebron and the townes that lye besyde it: and as for the walles and towres rounde aboute it, he brennt them vp. Then remoued he to go in to the londe of the Philistines, and wente thorow Samaria. At the same tyme were there many prestes slaine in 3 battayll, which wilfully & without aduysment wente out for to fight to get them honoure. And when Judas came to Azor in the Philistynes londe, he brake downe their altars, brennt the ymages of their Idols, spoyled the cities, and came agayne in to the londe of Juda.

The VI. Chapter.

Now when kynge Antiochus tranayled thorow the hye countrees, he herde that Elymas in Persia was a noble and plenteous cite in siluer and golde, & that there was in it a very rich temple: where as were clothes, cote armoures and shyldes of golde, which Alexander the sonne of Philippe kynge of Macedonia had left behynde him. Wherefore he wente aboute to take the cite and to spoyle it, but he was not able: for 3 citises were warned of it, & fought with him. And so he fled, and departed with greate heuynesse, & came agayne in to Babilen. Moreover there came one which brought him tidinges in Perside, 3 his hoostes which were in the londe of Juda, were dryuen awaye, and how that Lisias wente forth first with a greate power, and was dryuen awaye of the Jewes: how they had wonne the victory, and gotten greate goodes out of the hoostes that perished: how they had broken downe the abhominacion, which he set vp vpon the altare at Jerusalem, and fenced the Sanctuary with hye walles, like as it was afore: yee and Bethsura his cite also.

So it chanced, that when the kinge had herde these wordes, he was a frayed and greued very sore. Wherefore he layed him downe vpon his bed, and fell sicke for very sorowe: and all because it had not happened as he had deuysed. And there continued he longe, for his grese was ever more and more, so þ he sawe he must nedes dye. Therefore he sent for his frendes, & sayde vnto them: þ slepe is gone from mine eyes, for þ very sorowe & veraciõ of herte þ I haue. for when I conside in my mynde þ greate aduersite þ I am come vnto and the ploudes of heuynesse which I am in, where as afore tyme I was so mery, and so greatly set by (by reason of my power) Againe, consideringe þ enell þ I haue done at Ierusalem, from whence I toke all þ riches of golde and syluer þ were in it, & sent to fetch awaye the inhabitours of Jewry without eny reason why: I knowe, þ these troubles are come vpon me for the same cause. And beholde, I must dye with greatesorow in a straunge londe.

Then called he for one Philippe a frende of his, whom he made ruler of all his realme and gaue him the crowne, his robe and his rynge: that he shulde take his sonne Antiochus vnto him and brynge him vp, till he might raigne himself. So the kynge Antiochus dyed there, in the Cxlii. yere. When Lysias knewe that the kynge was deed, he ordered Antiochus his sonne (whom he had brought vp) to raigne in his fathers steade) and called him Eupator. Now they that were in the castel (at Ierusalem) kepte in the Jewes rounde aboute the Sanctuary, and foughte euer styll to do them harme, for the strengethenynge of the heithen.

Wherefore Judas thoughte to destroye them, and called all the people together, þ they might laye sege vnto them. So they came together in the C. yere, and beseged: he layenge forth their ordinaunce and instrumentes of warre. Then certayne of them þ were beseged wente forth (vnto whom some vngodly men of Israel ioyned the selues also) and wente vnto the kynge, sayenge: How longe wil it be, or thou punyssh and avenge oure brethren? We haue bene euer mynded to do thy father seruyce, to walke in his statutes, and to obeye his commaundementes: Therefore oure people fell from vs, and where so euer they founde eny of vs, they slewe them: and they haue not only medled with vs, but with all oure countrees: and beholde, this daye are they beseginge the castell at Ierusalem, and haue made vp the stronge holde in Bethsura: And yf thou doest not puenue them right soone, they wil do more then these, and thou shalt not be able to overcome them.

When the kynge herde this, he was very angrie, and called all his frendes, the captaynes of his fore men and of all his host men together. He hyred men of warre all out of other realmes and out of the Ier of the see, which came vnto him. And the nombre of his hoost was an hundred thousande, & xxxij. Elephantes wel exercised to battayll. These came thowow Ioumea vnto Bethsura, and beseged it a longe season, and made dyuerse instrumentes of warre agaynst it. But the Jewes came out and bient them, and foughte like men. Then departed Judas from the castell at Ierusalem, and removed þ hoost towarde Bethzacara ouer agaynst the kynges armye.

So the kynge arose before the daye, and broughte the power of his hoost in to Ierico Bethzacaran, where the hostes made them to the battayll, blowynge the trompettes. And to prouoke the Elephantes forth to fight, they shewed them the sappe of red grapes and molberies. And denyed the Elephantes amonge the hoost: so that by and by the Elephante there stode a M. men well armed, and helmettes of stele vpon their heades: Xee vnto euery one of the Elephantes also, were ordered v. C. hoisemen of the best, which waited of the Elephante, goinge where so euer he wente, and departed not from him. Every Elephante was covered with a skyn of a wild beeste, and he had a tower of wood, where vpon were xxiij. valiant men with weapens to fight, & with him was a man of Inde to rule the beest.

As for the remnant of the hoisemen, he set them vpon both the sydes in two parties with trompettes, to prouoke the hoost, and to steepe vpon such as were slowe in the armye. And when the Sonne shone vpon their sheldes of golde and stele, the mountaynes glistered agayne at them, & were as brighte as the cresshettes of fyre. The kynges hoost also was denyed, one parte vpon the hie mountaynes, the other lowe beneth: so they went on, takynge good hede, and keepinge their order. And all they that dwelt in the londe, were afrayed at the noyse of their hoost, when the multitude wente forth, and when the weapens smote together, for the hoost was both greates & mightie. Judas also and his hoost entred in to the battayll, and slew v. C. men of the kynges armye.

Now when Eleasar the sonne of Sams dyd se one of þ Elephantes decked with the gyges badge, and was a moie goodly best, he thoughte þ kynge shulde take hym, and ioperde himselfe to deliuer his people, and to get him a perpetuall name.

Wherefore he ranne with a corage vnto the Elephante in the myddest of the hoost, saytinge them downe of both the sydes, and slewe many aboute him. So wente he to the Elephantes fete, and gat him vnder hym, and slewe him: then fell the Elephante downe vpon him, and there he dyed. Judas also and his men seinge the power of the kynge and the mightie violence of his hoost, departed from them. And the kynges armye wente vp agaynst them towarde Ierusalem, and pitched their tentes in Jewry besyde mount Sion. Moreover the kynge toke trewe with them that were in Bethsura.

But when they came out of the cite (because they had no vytales within, and the londe laye vntyllid) the kynge toke Bethsura, and set men to kepe it, & turned his hoost to the place of the Sanctuary, and layed sege to it a greates whyle. Where he made all maner ordinaunce: handbowes, fyrie dartes, radettes to cast stones, scorpions to shute arrowes, and synges. The Jewes also made ordinaunce agaynst theirs, and foughte a longe season.

But in the cite there were no vytales, for it was the seuenth yere of the warres, and those heithen that remayned in Jewry had eaten vp all their stoare. And in the Sanctuary were few men lefte, for the hunger came so vpon them, that they were scattered abode euery man to his owne place.

So when Lysias herde, that Philippe (whom Antiochus the kynge whyle he was lyvinge, had ordered to brynge vp Antiochus his sonne, that he might be kynge) was come agayne out of Persia and Media with the kynges hoost, and thoughte to opene the kyngdome: he gat him to the kynge in all the haist and to the captaines of the hoost, and sayde: we decrease daylie, and our vytales are but small: Agayne, the place that we laye sege vnto, is very stronge, and it were oure parte to se for the realme. Let vs agre with these men and take trewe with them, and with all their people, and graunte them to lyue after their lawe, as they dyd afore. For they be greued and do all these thinges agaynst vs, because we haue despysed their lawe. So the kynge and the prynces were content, and sent vnto them to make peace, and they receaued it. Now when the kynge and the prynces had made an ope to them, they came out of the castell, and the kynge wote vp to mount Sion. But when he sawe that þ place was wel fenced, he brake the oath that he had made, and commaunded to destroye the wall rounde aboute. Then departed he in all the haist, and returned vnto Antioche, where he founde Philippe hauynge dominion of the cite. So he foughte agaynst him, and toke the cite agayne in to his hondes.

The VII. Chapter.

In the Cij. yere came Demetrius þ sonne of Seleucus from þ cite of Rome with a small company of men, vnto a cite of the see coast, and there he bare rule. And it chaunced, that when he came to Antioche the cite of his progenitors, his hoost toke Antiochus and Lysias, to brynge them vnto him. But when it was tolde him, he said: let me not se their faces. So the hoost put them to death. Now when Demetrius was set vpon the throne of his kyngdome, there came vnto him wicked and vngodly men of Israel: whose captayne was Alcimus, that wolde haue bene made hye priest. These men accused the people of Israel vnto the kynge, sayenge: Judas and his biethren haue slayne thy frendes, and dryuen vs out of oure owne londe. Wherefore sende now some man (to whom thou gapest credence) that he maye go and se all the destruccions, which he hath done vnto vs and to the kynges londe, and let him be punished with all his frendes and fauourers.

Then the kynge chose Barchides a frende of his, which was a man of greates power in the realme (beyond the greates water) and faithfull vnto the kynge: and sent him to se the destruccions that Judas had done. And as for that wicked Alcimus, he made him hye priest, and commaunded him to be avenged of the children of Israel. So they stode vp, and came with a greates hoost in to þ londe of Iuda, sendinge messagers to Judas & his biethren, & speakinge vnto them with peaceable wordes: but vnder disceate. Therefore Judas & his people beleued not their sayenge, for they sawe þ they were come with a greates hoost.

After this came þ scribes together vnto Alcimus & Barchides, trustinge the best vnto them. And first, þ Assideans requyred peace of them, sayenge: Alcimus þ priest is come of the seide of Mars, how can he disceane vs? So they gaue them louinge wordes, & swore vnto them, and sayde: we wil do you no harme, nether youre frendes: and they beleued them. But the very same daye toke they Ix. men of them, & slewe them: a corbinger to þ wordes þ are writte: They haue cast þ flesh of þ sanctes, & shed their bloude rounde aboute Ierusalem, & there was nomā þ wolde burye the.

C So there came a greete feare and drede amonge the people, sayenge: there is nether treuth nor righteousnesse in them, for they haue brot the appoyntment and oath that they made. And Barchides removed his hoost from Jerusalem, and pitched his tente at Bethzecha: where he sent forth, and toke many of them that had forsaken him: he slew many of the people also, and cast them in to a greete pyre. Then committed he the londe vnto Alcimus, and left men of warre with him to helpe him, and Barchides himself wente vnto the kynge. And thus Alcimus defended his his priesthode, and all such as vered Israel, resorted vnto him: In so moch that they opayed the lode of Juda, and dyd moch euell vnto the Israelites.

Now when Judas sawe all the myschefe that Alcimus and his company had done (ye more then the heithen selues) vnto the Israelites: he wente forth rounde aboute all the borders of Jewry, and punyshed those unfaithfull remagates, so that they came no more out in to the countre. So whē Alcimus sawe, that Judas and his people had gotten the vpperhande, and that he was not able to abyde them: he wente agayne to the kynge, and sayde all the worst of them that he coude. Then the kynge sent Nicanor, one of his chiefe prynces (which bare enell wyl vnto Israel) and commanded him, that he shulde utterly destroye the people.

D So Nicanor came to Jerusalem with a greete hoost, and sent vnto Judas and his brethien with frendly wordes (but vnder disceate) sayenge: there shal be no warre betwixte me and you: I wil come with a few men, to se how ye do, with frenshipe. Upon this he came vnto Judas, and they saluted one another peaceably: but the enemies were appoynted to take Judas by violence. Neuertheles it was tolde Judas, & he came vnto him but vnder disceate: wherefore he gat him awaie from him, and wolde se his face nomore. When Nicanor perceaued & his counsell was bewrayed, he wente out to fight agaynst Judas, besyde Capharsalama: Where there were slayne of Nicanors hoost, viij. M. men: the residue fled vnto the castell of David.

After this came Nicanor vnto mount Sion: and the prestes with the elders of the people wente forth to salute him peaceably, & to shewe him & burnt sacrifices & were offered for the kynge. But he laughed the to scorne, mocked the, defyled their offerings, and spake disdainably, yee and swore in his wroth, sayenge: If Judas and his people be not deliuered now in to my hondes, as hath as ever I come agayne (and saye: I shal burne vnto this house. With that, went he out in a greete anger. Then the people came in, and stode before the altar of the temple, wepinge & sayenge: For so moch as thou (O LORDE) hast chosen this house, that thy name might be called vpon therein, and it shulde be an house of praier and petition to thy people: Be avenge of this man, who hoest, and let them be slayne with & swaue remembre the blasphemies of them, & suffer them not to continue any longer.

When Nicanor was gone from Jerusalem, he pitched his tente at Bethoron, and there an hoost met hi out of Siria. And Judas came to Adarsa with iij. M. men, & made his prayer vnto God, sayenge: O LORDE, because the messangers of thyng Senach blasphemeth the, the angel wente forth, and slew an Egypt. thousande of them: And so destroye thou this hoost before vs today: that other people maye knowe, how that he hath blasphemed thy Sanctuary: and punyssh him, accordinge to his maliciousnesse.

And so the hoostes stroke the felde, the thirtente daye of the moneth Adar: and Nicanors hoost was discomfited, and he himself was first slayne in the battayll. When Nicanors men of warre sawe that he was kyled, they cast awaye their weapons and fled: but the Jewes folowed vnto them an whole dayes iourney, from Dozer vnto Gazara, blowinge with them pettes, and makinge tokens after them. So the Jewes came forth of all the townes there aboute, and blewe out their homes vnto them, and turned agaynst them: Thus were they all slayne, and not one of them left.

Then they toke their substance for a pray, and smote of Nicanors heade & his right honde (which he helde vp so proudly) and broughte it with them, and haged it vp afore Jerusalem. Wherefore the people were exceedingly reioysed, and passed ouer that daye in greete gladnesse. And Judas ordeined, that & same daye (namely the xij. daye of the moneth Adar) shulde be kepte in myrth every yere. Thus the londe of Juda was in rest a litle whyle.

The viij. Chapter.

Judas herde also the fame of the Romaynes, that they were mightie and valeaunt men, agreable to all thinges that are requyred of them, & make peace with all men, which come vnto them, and how they were doughty men of strength. Besides that, it was tolde him of their battayls & noble actes which they dyd in Galacia, how they had conquered them and brought them vnder tribute: and what grete thinges they had done in Spayne, how that with their wysdome and sober behauiour they had wonne the Mynes of syluer and golde that are there, and opayed all the londe, with other places farre from the: how they had discomfited and slayne downe the kynges that came vpon them from the uttermost parte of the earth, and how they had slayne and ouercome Philippe and perses kynge of Cechim and other moche in battayll, which had brought their ordinance agaynst them: how they discomfited greete Antiochus kynge of Asia (that wolde nedes fight wth them) hauynge an hundred and xx. Elephantes, with hoisemen, charrettes, and a very greete hoost: how they toke him self alyue, and ordeined him (with such as shulde raigne after him) to paye the a greete trybute, yee and to synde the good cities and plege: Besides all this, how they had take from him India, Media and Lydia (his best londes) and given them to

B kynge Eumenes. Aga yne, how they perceauynge & the Grekes were comynge to vere them: sent agaynst the a captaine of an hoost which gaue the battayll, slew many of the, led awaye ther wyues and children capryne, spoyled the, toke possession of their londe, destroyed their stronge holdes, and subdued the to be their bonde men vnto this daye: Moreover, how & as for other kyngdomes & Iles, which somtyme withstode the, they destroyed them, and brought them vnder their dominion: But helped euer their owne frendes and those & were confederate with them, & conquered kyngdomes both farre & nye: & & who so euer herde of their renewe, was afrayed of them: for whom they wolde helpe to their kyngdomes, those raigned: & who it lyked not them to raigne, they put him downe: And how they were come to greete preeminence: hauynge no kynge amonge the, ne ther eny man clothed in purple, to be magnified there thorow: but had ordeined the selues a parlament, where in there sat iij. C. and xx. Senators daylie vpon the counsell, to dispatche euer the busynesse of the people, and to kepe good ordie: And how fevery yere they chose a Mayre, to haue the gouernaunce of all their londe: to whom eny man was obedient, and & there was nether cruel will ner discencion amonge them.

C Then Judas chose Epulemus the sonne of Ihon the sonne of Jacob, & Jason the sonne of Eleazar, & sent the vnto Rome for to make frenshipe & a bonde of loue wth them: & they might take fro them the bondage of & Grekes, for & Jewes sawe & the Grekes wolde subdue the kyngdome of Israel. So they wrote vnto Rome (a very greete iourney) & came in to & Parlament, & saide: Judas Machabers & his brethre & the people of & Jewes hath sent vs vnto you, to make a bonde of frenshipe & peace wth you, & ye to note vs as yd louers & frendes. And & matter pleased & Romaines right well, wherefore it was writte vnto & which & Romaynes made a writinge in tables of Lac & sent it to Jerusalem: & they might haue by the a memorie of & same peace & bonde of frenshipe, after this manner: God saue & Romaines & & people of the Jewes both by see & by lode, & kepe & swaue & enemy fro the for evermore. If there come first eny warre vnto & Romaynes or eny of their frendes thorow out all their domyns & & people of & Jewes shal helpe the (as & tyme requyeth) & & all their herres. Also they shal nether geue nor seide vnto their enemies vitales, weapes, money ner shippes: but ful fil this charge at the Romaynes pleasure, & take nothinge from them therfore. Againe yf the people of the Jewes hadde first to haue warre, the Romaynes shal stonde by the with a good wil, acordinge as the tyme wil suffice: Whether shal they geue vnto the Jewes enemies, vytales, weapons, money ner shippes. Thus are the Romaynes content to do, & shal fulfill their charge without eny disceate.

Acordinge to these articles, the Romaynes made the bande with the Jewes. Now after these articles (sayde they) yf eny of the parties wyll put to them, or take eny thinge from them: they shal do it with the consente of both: and what so euer they adde then vnto them or take from them, it shal stonde fast. And as touchinge the euell that Demetrius hath done vnto the Jewes, we haue wrytten vnto him, sayenge: Wherfore layest thou thy heavy yocke vpon the Jewes oure frendes and louers? If they make eny complaynte of the agayne vnto vs, we shal defende them, and fight with the by see and by londe.

The IX. Chapter.

In y meane season when Demetrius herde that Alcimus & his hoost was slayne in the felde, he proceeded further to sende Bachides and Alcimus againe in to Jewry, and those that were in the right wyng of his hoost, with them. So they wete forth by the waye that lederth vnto Galgala, and pitched their tentes before Mesaloth which is in Arbellis, and warne the cite, and slewe moch people. In y first moneth of the Clij. yere, they brought their hoost to Jerusalem, and rose vp and came to Barea, with xx. M. foote men, and ij. M. hoisemen.

Now Judas had pitched his tence at Laiza, with thie thousande chosen men. And when they sawe the multitude of the other army y it was so greute, they were foreafraid, & many conveyed them selues out of the hoost. In so moch y there abode no mo of them but viij. C. men. When Judas sawe that his hoost sayled him, and that he must nedes fight: it brake his herte, y he had no tyme to gather them together: wherfore the man was in extreme trouble. Nevertheless he sayde vnto them, y remayned with him: Up, let vs go agaynst oure enemies, peradventure we shal be able to fight with them. But they wolde haue stopped him, sayenge: we shal not be able, therfore let vs now saue oure lyues, and turne agayne to y brethren, and then wil we fight agaynst the,

for we are here but fewe. And Judas sayde: God forbyd, that we shulde fle from them. Wherfore yf oure tyme be come, let vs be manfully for oure brethren, and let vs stayne oure honoure. Then the hoost turned out of the tentes, & stode agaynst them. The hoisemen were denyded in two parties: the slynge casters and the archers were before the hoost, and all the mightie men were foremost in the felde. Bachides himself was in the right wyng of the batell, & the hoost drew nye in two partes, and blewethem pettes. They of Judas syde blew y trumpettes also, & the earth shoke at the noise of the hoostes, and they stroke a felde from the morow till night. And when Judas sawe Bachides hoost was strongest of the right syde, he toke with him all the hardy men, and brake the right wyng of their ordie, and followed vpon them vnto the mount Zee.

Now when they which were of the left wyng, sawe that the right side was denyded, they persecuted Judas and them that were w him. Then was there a fore battail for many were slayne and wounded of both the parties, Judas also himself was kylla, and the remnaunt fled. So Jonathas and Symon toke Judas their brother, and buried him in his fathers sepulchre in the cite of Modin. And all the people of Israel made grete lamentacion for him, and mourned longe, sayenge: Alas, that this worthy shulde be slayne, which deliuered y people of Israel. As for other thinges pertayninge to y taylor of Judas, the nobles agree that he had and of his worthynesse: they are not want, for they were very many.

And after the death of Judas, which did come vp in all the coastes of Israel, and there arose all such as worke vngodlynesse. In these dayes was there a greute death in the londe, and all the countre gaue euer them selues & theirs vnto Bachides. So Bachides chose wicked men, and made them lordes in the londe. These sought out and made search for Judas frendes, and brought them vnto Bachides: which auenged himself vpon them with greute despise. And there came so grete trouble in Israel, as was not sens the tyme that no prophet was sene there.

Then came all Judas frendes together, and sayde vnto Jonathas: For so moch as thy brother Judas is deed, there is none like him to go forth agaynst y enemies, agaynst Bachides, and sech as are aduersaries vnto oure people. Wherfore this daye we chose the for him, to be oure pryncce and captayn, to orde our batell. And Jonathas toke the gouernance vpon him at the same tyme, and ruled in steade of his brother Judas. When Bachides gat knowlege therof, he sought for to slaye him: But Jonathas and Symon his brother, perceauyng that, fled in to y wilderness of Thecua with all their company, and pitched their tentes by the water pok of Asphar.

Which when Bachides vnderstode, he came ouer Jordane with all his hoost vpon y Sabbath daye. Now had Jonathas sent his brother Jhon (a captayn of the people) to praye his frendes the Laburhites, y they wolde lende them their ordinaunce, for they had moch. So the children of Jambry came out of Madaba, & toke Jhon & all y he had, & wente their waye withall. Then came worde vnto Jonathas & Symon his brother, y the children of Jambry made a greute mariage, & brought y bryde from Madaba with greute pompe: for she was doughter to one of the noblest prynces of Canaan. Wherfore they remembred the bloude of Jhon their brother, and wente vp, and hyd them selues vnder the shadowe of the mountayne.

So they lift vp their eyes, and looked: and beholde, there was moch a doo, & greute repayne: for the brydegrome came forth, & his frides and his brethien met them with tympany, instrumentes of musick, and many weapes. Then Jonathas and they that were with him, rose out of their skrouinge places agaynst them, and slewe many of them. As for the remnaunt, they fled in to y mountaynes, and they toke all their substance. Thus the mariage was turned to mournynge, and y noise of their melody in to lamentacion. And so when they had auenged the bloude of their brother, they turned agayne vnto Jordane.

Bachides hearinge this, came vnto y very border of Jordane with a greute power vpon the Sabbath daye. And Jonathas sayde to his company: let vs get vp, & fyght agaynst oure enemies: for it stondech not with vs to daye, as in tymes past. Beholde, y enemies are in oure waye, y water of Jordane vpon the one syde of vs, with bandes, fumes and woddes of y other syde, so y there is no place for vs to departe vnto. Wherfore cri now vnto heauen, that ye maye be deliuered from the power of youre enemies. So they stroke the batell. And Jonathas stretched out his honde to smyte Bachides, but he fled backward. Then Jonathas and they y were with him leapte in to Jordane, & swymmed ouer Jordane vnto him, & there were slayne of Bachides syde that daye, a thousande men.

Therfore Bachides w his hoost turned againe to Jerusalem, & buylte vp y castles & stronge holdes that were in Jewry, Jericho, Emans, Bethoron, Bethel, Chanana, Phara & Thopo, w hye walles, w portes & with lockes: & set men to kepe them, y they might use their malice vpon Israel. He walled vp Bethsura, Gazara & the castell at Jerusalem also, & prouyded them w men & vytales: he toke also the chiefe men sonnes in the countre for pledges, and put them in the castell at Jerusalem to be kepte.

Afterwarde in the Clij. yere in the seconde moneth, Alcimus comanded, that y walles of the ynnmost Sanctuary shulde be destroyed, & the buyldinges of y prophetes also. And when he beganne to destroye the, y thinges y he wete aboute, were hyndered: for he was smytten w a palsey, & his mouth shutt, so y he coude nomore speake ner commaunde eny of his house concerninge his busynesse. Thus dyed Alcimus in greute misery at the same tyme. And wher Bachides sawe y Alcimus was deed, he turned agayne to y kyng, & so the londe was in rest y yeres. Then all the vngodly men helde a counsell, sayenge: Beholde, Jonathas and his company are at ease, & dwell without care. Wherfore let vs bryng Bachides hithe, & he shal take them all in one night.

So they wete & gaue Bachides this counsell, which arose to come w a greute hoost, & sent letters priuely to his adherentes which were in Jewry, to take Jonathas & those y were with him: but they might not, for the other had gotten knowlege of their denyece. And Jonathas toke L. men of the countre (which were the ryngleders of them) & slewe them. Then Jonathas and Symon w their company departed vnto the cite Bethbessen, which lieth in the wilderness, and repayed the decaye therof, & made it stronge. When Bachides knewe this, he gathered all his hoost, and sent worde to them that were of Jewry. The came he and layed sege to Bethbessen, and sought agaynst it a longe season, and made instrumentes of warre. Now Jonathas lefte his brother Symon in the cite, and wente forth himself in to the countre, and came with a certayne nombre, and slewe Obares and his brethien and the children of Phaseron in their tentes: so y he beganne to be stronge, & to increase in power.

As for Symon and his company, they wente out of the cite, and brēt vp the instrumēt of warre, and fought agaynst Barchides, and discomfited him. And Barchides was sore vexed, because his counsell and traungler was in wayne. Wherefore he was wroth at y^e wicked men that gaue him counsell to come in to their londe, and slew many of them. Then purposed he with his company to go awaye in to his owne countre: wherof whē Jonathas had knowlege, he sent embassitors vnto him, for to make peace with him, & y^e he shulde deliuer him his prisoners agayne. To the which Barchides consented gladly, and dyd, acordinge to his desyre: yee and made an ooth, that he shulde neuer do him harme all the dayes of his life. So he restored vnto him all the prisoners that he had taken out of the londe of Iuda, and the turned and wente his waye in to his owne londe, nether proceeded he any further, to come vnto y^e borders of Iuda. Thus Israel had no more warre. And Jonathas dwelt at Machmas, and beganne there to gouerne the people, and destroyed the vngodly men out of Israel.

The X. Chapter.

In the C. lx. yere came Alexander y^e some of noble Antiochus, and toke Ptolomais, whose citisens receaued him, and there he raigned. When Demetrius herde therof, he gathered an exceeding greate hoost, and wēt forth agaynst him to fight. Wherefore Demetrius sente letters vnto Jonathas with lonynges wordes, and prayesed him greatly. For he sayde: we wyll first make peace with him, before he bynde him selfe with Alexander agaynst vs: els he shall remembre the euell that we haue done agaynst him, his brother & his people. And so he gaue Jonathas leue to gather an hoost, to make weapons, and to be confederate wth him, and commaunded the pledges that were in the castell, to be deliuered vnto him.

Then came Jonathas to Jerusalem, and red the letters in the audience of all the people, and of them that were in y^e castell. And therfore were they sore a frayd, because they herde, that the kynge had geue him leue to gather an hoost. Thus were the pledges deliuered vnto Jonathas, which restored them to their elders. Jonathas also wēt at Jerusalem, and begane to buyde vp and to repayre the cite: commaunding the wite men, to wall it, and the mount Sion remde aboute with fre stone, to be a stronge holde, and so they dyd. As for the heathen that were in y^e castels which Barchides had made vp, they fled: so that every man left the place, and wēt in to his owne countre. Only at Bethsura remayned certayne of the Jewes, which had forsaken the lawe and commandementes of God, for Bethsura was their refuge.

Now when kynge Alexander herde of y^e promyses y^e Demetrius had made vnto Jonathas, and when it was tolde him of y^e bels and noble actes, which he and his brethren had done, and of the greate traungler that they had taken: he saide: where shal we fynde such a man: wel, we will make him our frende, & be confederate with him. Upon this he wrote a lettre vnto him, wth these wordes: Kynge Alexander salueth his brother Jonathas. We haue herde of the, y^e thou art a valaunt man, & mete to be o^r frende: wherfore this daye we ordene the to be the hye prest of thy people, and to be called the kynge's frende. Upon this, he sente him a purple clothe & a crowne of golde: y^e thou mayst conside what is for oure profit, & t^epe shippe towarde vs.

So in the viij. moneth of the C. lx. yere: upon the solempne feast daye of the tabernacles, Jonathas put the holy rayment vpon him. Then gathered he an hoost, & made many weapons. Which when Demetrius herde, he was marvelous sory, & sayde: Alas, what haue we done, y^e Alexander hath prevented vs in gettinge the frendshipe of the Jewes, for his owne defence: yet wil I wyte lonyngly vnto them also, yee & promise them dignities & rewardes, y^e they maye be of my frende. Whereupon he wrote vnto the these wordes: Kynge Demetrius sendeth greetinge vnto y^e people of the Jewes. Where as ye haue t^epe y^e couenaunt towarde vs, & cōfirmed wth o^r frendshipe, not enclinyng to oure enemies: we were glad, when we herde therof. Whatfore remayne still & be faithfull to vs: & we shal wel recompense you for the thinges, y^e we haue done on o^r part: we shal release y^e of many charges, and geue you rewardes. And now I discharge you & all y^e Jewes from tributes, I forgene you the customes of salt, and release you of the crowne taxes, of the thirde parte of seide, and half of the frute of trees, which is myne owne dewry. These I leave for you, from this daye forth: so that they shall not be taken of the londe of Iuda net of the thre cities which are adde therunto out of Samaria and Galilee, from this daye forth for evermore. Jerusalem also with all chinges belöginge therto, shal be holy and fre, yee y^e riches & tributes shal pertaine vnto it. As for the power of y^e castell which is at Jerusalem, I remytte & geue it vnto the hye prest, that he maye set in it such men, as he shall chose to t^epe it. I frely discharge all the Jewes that are prisoners thow out all my realme: so that every one of them shalbe fre from payenge any tribute, yee euen of their catell.

All the solepne feastes, Sabbathes, & new moones, the dayes appoynted, the thre daies before and after the feast shal be fre for all the Jewes in my realme: so that in them no man shal haue power to do eny thinge, or to moue eny busynesse agaynst eny of them in any manner of cause. There shal xxx. M. also of the Jewes be witten vp in the kynge's hoost, and haue their wages payed, as all other men of warre of the kynge's shulde haue: and of them shalbe ordered certayne, to t^epe the kynge's stronge holdes: yee and some of them shalbe set ouer the kynge's busynesse, that they maye faithfully deale with the same. The Jewes also shal haue prynces of their owne, & walke in their owne lawes, as the kynge hath commaunded in the londe of Iuda.

And the thre cities that are fallen vnto Jewry from the countre of Samaria and Galilee: shalbe taken as Jewry, and be vnder one: nether be subiecte to eny straunge lord, but to the hye prest. As for Ptolomais and the londe pertainyng therto, I geue it vnto the Sanctuary at Jerusalem, for the necessary expences of the holy thinges. Moreover, I will geue every yere xx. M. Syckles of syluer out of y^e kynge's chequer (which pertaineth vnto me) to the worke of the temple: yee & loke what remayneth (which they y^e had oure matters in honde in tymes past, haue not payed) that same shal they geue vnto them also. And besydes all this, the v. M. syckles which they toke yearly of the reetes of the Sanctuary, shal belonge vnto the prests that do seruyce.

Item, who so euer they be that fle vnto the temple at Jerusalem or within the liberties therof, where as they are fallen in to the kynge's daunger for eny manner of busynesse, they shall be pardoned, and all the goodes that they haue in my realme, shalbe fre. For the buyldinge also & repayinge of the worke of the Sanctuary, expences shalbe geuen out of the kynge's chequer: yee and for the makinge of the walles rounde aboute Jerusalem, for the breakinge downe of the olde, and for the settinge vp of the stronge holdes in Jewry, shal y^e costes and charges be geuen out of the kynge's chequer.

But when Jonathas and the people herde these wordes, they gaue no credence vnto them, nether receaued them: for they remembred the greate wickednesse that he had done vnto Israel, and how sore he had vexed them. Wherefore they agreed vnto Alexander, for he was a prynce that had dealte frendly with them, and so they stode by him allwaye. The gathered kynge Alexander a greate hoost, and brought his armye agaynst Demetrius. So y^e two kynge's strok battayll together, but Demetrius hoost fled, and Alexander folowed after and fell vpon them. A mightie fore felde was it, continuinge till the Sonne wente downe, and Demetrius was slayne the same daye.

And Alexander sente embassitors vnto Ptolomy the kynge of Egypte with these wordes, sayenge: For so moch as I am come agayne to my realme, and am set in the throne of my progenitors, and haue gotten the deminion, ouercome Demetrius, conquered the londe, and stricken a felde with him, so that we haue discomfited both him and his hoost, and sate in the throne of his kyngdome: Let vs now make frendshipe together, geue me thy daughter to wife: so shall I be thy foine in lawe, and both geue the rewardes, and hir greate dignite. Ptolomy the kynge gaue answer, sayenge: Happy be the daye wherein thou art come agayne to the londe of thy progenitors, and set in the throne of thy kyngdome. And now wil I fulfill thy wthtyng: but mete me at Ptolomais, y^e we maye se one another, and that I maye mary my daughter vnto the acordinge to thy desyre. So Ptolomy wēt out of Egypte with his daughter Cleopatra, & came vnto Ptolomais in y^e Cxij. yere: where kynge Alexander met him, & he gaue Alexander his daughter Cleopatra, and married them at Ptolomais with greate worshippe, like as the manner of kynge's is to be.

Then wrote kynge Alexander vnto Jonathas, that he shulde come and meete him. So he wente honorably vnto Ptolomais, & there he met the two kynges, and gaue them greete presentes of golde and syluer, & founde fauoure in their sight. And there came to gether agaynst Jonathas certayne wicked men and vngacions personnes of Israel, makinge complayntes of him, but the kynge regarded them not. As for Jonathas, the kynge commaunded to take of his garnitures, and to clothe him in purple: and so they dyd. Then the kynge appoynted him to sye by him, and sayde vnto his prynces: So with him in to the myddest of the cite, and make a proclamacion, that no man complayne agaynst him of eny matter, and that no man trouble him for eny maner of cause.

So it happened that when his accusers sawe the worshippe which was proclaimed of him, & he was clothed in purple: they fled euerychone. And the kynge made moch of him, wrote him amonge his chiefe frendes, made him a duke, and partaker of his deminion. Thus Jonathas wente agayne to Jerusalem with peace and gladnesse. In the xlv. yere came Demetrius the sonne of Demetrius from Crea in to his fathers londe: wherof when Alexander herde tell, he was right sory, and returned vnto Antioche. And Demetrius chose Appollonius (which had the gouernaunce of Celosyria) to be his captainne.

So he gathered a greate hoost and came vnto Jamnia, and sende worde vnto Jonathas the hye priest, sayenge: Darrest thou stande vs thy self alone? As for me, I am but laughed to scorne and shamed, because thou prouest thy strength agaynst vs in the mountaynes. Now therfore yf thou trustest in thine owne strength, come downe to vs in to the playne felde, and there let vs proue oure strength together: thou shalt synde, that I haue valeant men of warre with me: and shalt knowe who I am, & the other that stande by me.
